He also presented memorials of sundry business firms of Cleveland, Columbus, Toledo, Warren, Springfield, Fostoria, and Leetonia, all in the State of Ohio, remonstrating against the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. NEWLANDS presented petitions of sundry citizens and labor organizations of Rhyolite, Ely, Tonopah, and Goldfield, all in the State of Nevada, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented petitions of sundry citizens of South Norwalk, Bridgeport, and Bristol, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Bridgeport, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the investigation and the development of the methods of the treatment of tuberculosis, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

Mr. BEVERIDGE presented a memorial of Post V, Travelers' Protective Association of America, of La Porte, Ind., remonstrating against the repeal of the duty on leaf tobacco, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions of the Shelbyville Civic Association and of the Indiana State Federation of Clubs, approving the action of the President in calling a conference of the governors to consider the question of the conservation of the natural resources of the United States, which were referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Howell and Evansville, in the State of Indiana, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the investigation and the development of the methods of the treatment of tuberculosis, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

He also presented a petition of Boilermakers' Union No. 10, of Indianapolis, Ind., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Frankfort and Middletown, in the State of Indiana, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prevent Sunday banking in post-offices in the handling of money orders and registered letters, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of West Grove Grange, No. 2117, Patrons of Husbandry, of Pennville, Ind., and a petition of Union Grange, No. 938, Patrons of Husbandry, of Pimento, Ind., praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post bill," which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Commercial Club of Goshen, Ind., indorsing the action of the President in calling a conference of the governors on the conservation of the natural resources of the United States, which were referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HALE. I report back from the Committee on Appropriations with sundry amendments the bill (H. R. 21946) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 684) thereon.

I wish to say to the Senate that I have asked the Printing Office to expedite the printing and send the bill to the Senate some time this afternoon, and when it reaches here, in order to expedite business, I shall ask the Senate, when it has possession of copies of the bill, to take it up to-day and, I hope, pass it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7114) to correct the military record of Stephen Feather, deceased, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 686) thereon.

Mr. BAILEY. I am directed by the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, to whom was referred the letter of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor transmitting a schedule of documents and papers in the Department of Commerce and Labor not necessary for the transaction of the public business, to submit a report (No. 688) thereon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. SCOTT. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 21875) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 687) thereon. I give notice that I shall call up the bill at the very earliest moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. BEVERIDGE, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5329) to provide for an appropriation to defray the expenses of the constitutional convention and State election of Oklahoma, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 689) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 21957) relating to affairs in the Territories, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 690) thereon.

FIRE IN CHELSEA, MASS.

Mr. ALLISON. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 21927) to reimburse certain Departments of the Government for expenses incurred incident to the recent fire in Chelsea, Mass., and for other purposes, and as it is a brief bill and local in its object, I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BURKETT introduced a bill (S. 7197) granting an increase of pension to Luther C. Wright, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BULKELEY introduced a bill (S. 7198) granting an increase of pension to James M. Perkins, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BRANDEGEE introduced a bill (S. 7199) for the relief of the heirs of Jenkins & Havens, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DICK introduced a bill (S. 7200) granting an increase of pension to Fenton Bagley, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7201) to establish a Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. FOSTER introduced a bill (S. 7202) for the relief of the heirs of Dr. T. H. Maddox, deceased, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TALIAFERRO introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 7203) for the relief of the estate of Alfred L. Shotwell; and

A bill (S. 7204) for the relief of the estate of Nathan A. Davis.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 7205) for the relief of Willoughby L. Wilson, administrator of the estate of Willoughby Wilson, deceased, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. OWEN introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 7206) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to adjudicate the rights of persons who formerly held town lots in the city of Sulphur, in the Chickasaw Nation, Ind. T., which have been taken for a United States reservation, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 7207) for the refunding of certain moneys.

He also introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 91) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. OWEN. I ask that the joint resolution lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will lie on the table.

UNCLE SAM OIL COMPANY.

Mr. OWEN submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be, and the same is hereby, directed to investigate the matters set forth in the memorial presented to the Senate by the Uncle Sam Oil Company and to report its findings and conclusions with reference thereto and the testimony produced before the said committee. Said committee is hereby directed to inquire into and investigate the whole subject of said memorial, and particularly the following matters:

(1) What means, if any, have been used by the Standard Oil Company to subsidize or influence the public press in favor of the Standard Oil Company and against the Uncle Sam Oil Company or to prevent the Uncle Sam Oil Company engaging in the business of producing, refining, and marketing oil in competition with the Standard Oil Company.

(2) What connection or relation, if any, exists between the Standard Oil Company and the railroad companies doing business in the States of Kansas and Oklahoma and what discriminations have been made by any of said railroad companies against the Uncle Sam Oil Company and in favor of the Standard Oil Company, and what efforts any of said railroad companies have made to influence or prejudice the judges of the United States district court for the district of Kansas.

(3) What means, if any, have been used to influence the officers of the Post-Office Department to interfere with the officers of the Uncle Sam Oil Company by withholding the mail from said company and its officers and refusing to pay to said company or its officers postal money orders payable to said company or its officers and to circulate untrue reports concerning said company.

(4) What means, if any, have been used to influence the Department of Justice to prosecute any officer of said Uncle Sam Oil Company, and why the manager of said company was three times indicted by the grand jury in the United States district court for the district of Kansas on a charge of which he was innocent.

(5) What means, if any, have been used to secure the incarceration of the manager of said Uncle Sam Oil Company in a common jail for the period of three months for making an application for a change of trial judges in the United States circuit court for the district of Kansas, and what means, if any, were used to influence the Department of Justice to advise the President to refuse to pardon said officer.

(6) What reason exists for the low price of crude oil in the Kansas-Oklahoma oil fields, and why the price of refined oil in the United States has not decreased in proportion with the decrease in the price of crude oil.

The said committee is hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, administer oaths to the witnesses, and sit during the recesses of Congress at such places as shall be most accessible to the witnesses. It shall have the testimony reported in full for the information of the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. I ask that the resolution may lie on the table. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table. Mr. OWEN submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General, the Department of Justice, and the President be, and they are hereby, requested to lay before the Senate all information in their possession concerning the issuance of a fraud order against H. H. Tucker, jr. or the Uncle Sam Oil Company, the prosecution of said H. H. Tucker, jr., in the United States district court for the district of Kansas, his incarceration in jail for making an application for a change of trial judges in the United States circuit court for the district of Kansas, and the printing and circulation of a report by R. P. Goodwin to the Postmaster-General as a basis for said fraud order, and why said fraud order has not been revoked since the acquittal of said H. H. Tucker, jr.

Mr. OWEN. I ask that the resolution may lie on the table. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

Mr. CARTER. I wish to inquire if the resolutions just read go over, under the rule, or whether it is intended to call them up during the day?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions were ordered to lie on the table. The Senator from Oklahoma made no further request.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana moves that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. OWEN. That course will be agreeable to me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. OWEN subsequently said: I present a memorial of the Uncle Sam Oil Company requesting that the conduct of the Post-Office Department and the other official offices touching the litigation and affairs of that company be investigated by Congress. I ask that the memorial be printed as a document for the information of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request for the printing of the memorial as a document? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

Mr. OWEN. I ask that the memorial when printed be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That reference will be made, in the absence of objection.

QUAPAW AGENCY, OKLA.

Mr. CURTIS submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 16743) for the removal of the restrictions on alienation of lands of allottees of the Quapaw Agency, Okla., and the sale of all tribal lands, school, agency, or other buildings on any of the reservations within the jurisdiction of such agency, and for other purposes.

CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIAN ROLLS.

Mr. CLAPP. On January 20 I submitted a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Interior to transmit to the Senate a list of the rolls which have been prepared since 1830 of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, and so forth. Since that time I have received a number of communications from the Department of the Interior relative to this matter. I move that these communications be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

CRIMINAL, PAUPER, AND DEFECTIVE CLASSES.

Mr. CLAPP. I present a paper by Arthur McDonald, being hearings on bills to establish a laboratory for the study of the criminal, pauper, and defective classes. I move that the paper be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT ON DISEASES OF CATTLE.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, there is in the Senate at this time House joint resolution 176, which provides for printing the Special Report on Diseases of Cattle. It provides for printing 100,000 copies of this excellent work.

I will state in this connection that there only three members of the Committee on Printing, and all three are absent, and unless the process is taken which I shall suggest the joint resolution is likely to fail, while there is a very general desire for its passage. I move to discharge the Committee on Printing from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 176) providing for the printing of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle, and I shall then ask unanimous consent to put the joint resolution on its passage. I have talked to members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, including the acting chairman [Mr. WARREN], whom I do not see in his seat at the moment, and they have expressed themselves—

Mr. KEAN. What is the joint resolution?

Mr. DANIEL. It provides for printing the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Committee on Printing be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 176) providing for the printing of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle, and asks unanimous consent that the motion may be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. KEAN. I do not see any member of the Committee on Printing present.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to state—

Mr. KEAN. Did the committee agree to this action?

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator permit me to make a statement in that regard? All three members of the Committee on Printing are absent. It is not likely that they will be here at the present session, and I think every Senator—

Mr. KEAN. I think that if the Senator from Virginia would communicate with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELLIS], who is a member of the committee, his consent might be obtained.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not think there is any objection at all to the joint resolution.

Mr. KEAN. Personally, I have no objection to it, but I think it is a very bad practice to discharge any committee.

Mr. DANIEL. It would be except in such a case as this.

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator from Virginia will excuse me, I want to say to the Senator from New Jersey that this is a reprint of an extremely valuable book to farmers on diseases of cattle.

Mr. DANIEL. It is out of print.

Mr. MONEY. It is out of print.

Mr. KEAN. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that I myself should like to have the document very much, but I do not believe in the practice of discharging committees from the consideration of measures which have been referred to them.

Mr. MONEY. I hope the Senator will consider the circumstances for a moment. Congress is about to adjourn, and the members of the committee will not be here again. They are all of them absent and two of them are sick. So the committee not being here to act upon the measure, I think the motion of the Senator from Virginia should prevail. This very valuable book should be printed, for there is an extraordinary demand for it. It is extremely valuable to the farmers. It is one of the best bulletins, I think, ever issued by the Department. I hope the Senator from New Jersey will not, on account of some technicality, object to the reprint.

Mr. KEAN. I am as anxious for the book as any of the Senators here. There are a great many farmers in my State, and they are very fond of these reports on the diseases of the horse and the diseases of cattle. I should like to distribute the book among them, but I should like to observe the rules of the Senate, and I do not think it ought to be done without some consultation with at least one member of the Committee on Printing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the motion of the senior Senator from Virginia?

Mr. KEAN. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President—

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg to submit a conference report and ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20063) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 5, 8, 9, 15, 21, 22, 23, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 34, 38, 40, 41, 45, 49, 50, 54, 55, 56, 61, 62, 68, 69, 70, 71, 75, 76, 78, 85, 88, 93, 94, 95, 96, 100, 104, 109, 113, 115, 118, 119, 122, 124, 125, 127, 129, 130, 137, 164, 166, 192, 193, 197, 201, 203, 211, 212, 213, 215, 218, 219, 220, 222, 224, 229, 237, 239, 241, 243, 244, 247, 248, 252, 253, 255, 256, 261, 267, 269, 278, 286, 289, 293, 296, 297, 298, 302, 308, 313, 319, 320, 324, and 328.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 6, 7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 20, 24, 33, 36, 37, 42, 43, 44, 46, 47, 48, 52, 53, 57, 59, 60, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 72, 73, 74, 77, 79, 81, 82, 83, 86, 87, 89, 90, 91, 92, 97, 98,

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment amended as follows: On page 2 of the bill, in line 9, strike out the words "five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "two hundred and fifty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "two thousand four hundred dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "one hundred and two thousand and fifty-four dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment, and on page 5 of the bill, in lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "assistant superintendent, who shall be a stenographer, one thousand dollars" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "clerk and stenographer, one thousand two hundred dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "thirty-two thousand eight hundred and ninety-five dollars," and on page 5 of the bill, in line 18, after the word "dollars," insert ": Provided, That the employees herein authorized for the care of the District building shall be appointed by the assistants to the Engineer Commissioner with the approval of the Commissioners;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 165, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,400;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 189, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$105,320;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 191, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "seventy-five thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 194, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "ninety thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 199, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "one thousand two hundred dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 217, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For additional amount for 'Repairs and improvements to school buildings and grounds' for the purpose of replacing wooden stairs in brick buildings with those of fireproof construction, removal of old and unsuitable fire escapes, and erection of improved fire escapes, and improvement of approaches thereto, improving exits, and for such miscellaneous alteration and repair work as may be necessary to secure protection against fire in existing school buildings owned by the District of Columbia, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 225, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "nine hundred and fifteen thousand five hundred and ninety-three dollars and thirty-five cents;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 226, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided further, That within thirty days after the passage of this act and every two years thereafter persons on the pension rolls in the District of Columbia for disabilities incurred while in the service of the police department or fire department of the District of Columbia shall undergo a medical examination, and as a result of such examinations, the Commissioners shall determine whether the pension being paid in each case shall continue in whole or in part;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 228, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$35,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 230, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$20,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

DATE ON CANNED MEAT, ETC.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I ask the acting chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry whether he contemplates any report upon Senate bill 912. It is the bill providing for the date being placed upon cans of meat.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, responding to the inquiry of the Senator from Indiana, I will state that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had a special meeting last Saturday morning, and the bill referred to by the Senator was considered at that meeting. Laid before the committee at that time were requests from societies of wholesale grocers, retail grocers, packers, and others, respectfully requesting a hearing, short or long, and at any time the committee might designate.

Those of the committee present, I think, voted unanimously, or nearly so—and there was a quorum present—that the time was too short in which to properly consider that measure or to grant the hearings which they felt were due to the societies that had requested them before adjournment. Therefore it is not the intention of the committee to report the bill during the present session.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, this measure has been considered by the Senate for two years. It has twice passed this body and was rejected by the House conferees in the House. The House last year was given no chance to vote upon it. With reference to the hearings, very extensive hearings were had upon this particular subject when the original meat-inspection bill, which included this point, was before Congress a little more than two years ago. Those hearings embraced every argument that can be adduced against this measure. All of the facts were presented elaborately by the representatives of the packers.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I want some information. As I recall the legislation which the Senator from Indiana mentions, it was put in on the floor of the Senate upon an appropriation bill, without any notice whatever to anybody. I will say that as a member of that committee I sat in all its meetings in considering the appropriation bill up to the time it was decided that it should be reported to the Senate as we had up to that time passed upon it. I went West to my home, to be gone a week or such a matter, and when I came back the amendment was in conference, having been placed by unanimous consent upon the bill. I ask the Senator if I am correct?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator is entirely correct in his statement.

Mr. WARREN. Was the dating of the cans a part of the original measure included in the appropriation bill when it was first proposed?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It was.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask a little further? When were these hearings had?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The hearings were held before the House committee, not by the Senate committee.

Mr. WARREN. It seems, from the statement of the Senator from Indiana, that no hearings have been held by any Senate committee. Were not those hearings directed entirely to the matter of meat inspection and not to the general subject of dating the cans of meat and other products?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Both, Mr. President. Every possible objection to the original measure was considered, including this provision, which was one of the two points out of some twenty points in the bill on which the Senate was defeated. All of those points were considered in that hearing. The report of those hearings was printed. That report was at the time in the hands of nearly every Senator, and it has been at the command of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and of every member thereof.

The measure itself has passed the Senate twice, both times as an amendment to the appropriation bill. I should have offered it this year again were it not for the fact that the Senator from Wyoming informed me that he would do with reference to it what was done by him the last time with reference to the other provision—that he would make a point of order against it. That point of order was made the last time, and the Chair sustained the point of order, and the amendment was rejected upon that ground.

Now, Mr. President, in view of the fact that this has been before Congress for two years, in view of the fact that it has passed this body twice without a dissenting vote, in view of the fact that full hearings were had when the original bill was up before the House, which hearings were printed, and in view of the very grave nature of this particular provision—I am talking about the date on the cans—in view of the number of people whose lives have been endangered and are daily endangered by reason of keeping the date off of the cans, I think it too serious a question for the committee at the end of a five months' session in the closing days of the session to hold a meeting to consider it for the first time and then postpone the measure itself upon the ground that some person has asked to be heard. If some person asked to be heard, after the Senate had passed the measure twice, why were they not heard five months ago, four months ago, three months ago?

At least two or three members of this body have been seriously affected in their health by the failure to have the date upon the cans of meat or meat food products. I remember when the original measure was up—I mean my meat-inspection bill, which is now the law—the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], speaking from his wide and careful experience as a physician, said that most of the cases of ptomaine poisoning in this country, fatal and otherwise, had come from this very fact. It was stated, if I remember correctly, when the hearing was had before the House committee, that one reason why the packers did not want the date on the cans was that they had an accumulation of old goods, and that if the date went on the cans it would be difficult to dispose of those goods.

Mr. McLAURIN. Is it a House bill?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; this is an original Senate bill. It is before the Senate committee now.

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate any longer. It is a piece of legislation demanded by the American people. No reason has yet been assigned except the reasons assigned before the House committee why it should not pass. It has passed the Senate.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. I think some member of the Committee on Agriculture ought to call the attention of the Senator to one fact in reference to the work of the Committee on Agriculture, brought out by the suggestion that it might have had a hearing some time ago. The Senator of course realizes that perhaps no committee has had the great misfortunes that the Committee on Agriculture has had. While I am a member of it, it is only recently, and it was brought about by the series of misfortunes that have come about.

The Senator will recall that the chairman of the committee, who served a number of years and had all these matters in hand and in his grasp, as almost no other Senator ever had, died. Then when his successor was appointed, misfortune came to him, and he has been in the committee room but one day since he has been chairman of the committee.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is all true.

Mr. BURKETT. The other members of the committee had to take up the appropriation bill, and the Senator from Wyoming performed the part of acting chairman, and this, added to all his other duties, has made it practically impossible for the committee to take up several things that they should have taken up.

I will say that I myself had a bill pending before that committee and had some hearings on it at the last session and expected to have those hearings finished at this session and to complete it and have it recommended for passage. There was an educational measure also that I had before the committee and we had hearings just before the chairman, Senator Proctor, died. On account of the misfortunes that have come we have not been able to complete those hearings, and I have not been able to get the bill before the Senate.

I am not saying to the Senator that this bill has not had consideration enough to make it proper that it should be taken up at this time, but I do not want the impression to go out that the Committee on Agriculture has been more derelict in this matter than it has been in a great many other important matters; and the Senator having stated it broadly, as he has done, without any intention, as he says, of criticising the committee, I do not want it to go out to the country that that committee has been negligent in anything. But it has been the result of misfortunes, the death of its chairman, which left the committee naturally in a chaotic condition, and the prolonged and present illness of its new chairman, who has been in the committee room but once since he was appointed chairman, and it is also owing to the great amount of work that has devolved on the other members. That is the reason why the consideration of that bill has not been completed, and why at least two bills that I have before the committee and in which I am very much interested—one of them an educational matter and the other the grazing-land proposition—we have not been able to take up and have a hearing on and give them final consideration.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am very glad indeed to hear the Senator from Nebraska make that statement, which is entirely just. I was going to make it in a weaker way, of course, myself, but it would not have come with so much authority or weight as from a member of the committee. I recognize those facts. I recognize the singular concurrence of misfortunes that have afflicted that committee and how hard worked all its members are. The present chairman of the committee, who, as we all know, has been ill, authorized me to say that so far as he is concerned he wants to have the bill reported out and wants to vote for it.

Mr. President, in view of the fact that the committee has not been able to consider the bill by reason of these various things, in view of the fact that the Senate has considered it for two years, in view of the fact that the Senate twice passed it without a dissenting voice, in view of the fact that the committee has been so placed that perhaps it has had too much work on hand, with the series of misfortunes that have occurred, and in view of the great public necessity for this measure, I think no member of that committee—I have spoken to one or two of them—will take it as at all offensive to them or in anywise reflecting upon them if the Senate should discharge the committee; and therefore I move that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 912.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I shall be perfectly willing to vote with the Senator on a motion to take the bill from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and refer it to some other committee, if he considers the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry an improper one.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not.

Mr. WARREN. There can be, of course, but two objects in the Senator's mind. It must be one of two. He either wishes to have the bill considered by some other committee without the consent of the Committee on Agriculture, or he wishes to have it considered without committee action.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will call attention to the fact that unanimous consent will be necessary for the present consideration of the motion. Is there unanimous consent that the motion may be now considered?

Mr. SCOTT. I object to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Pardon me, Mr. President. I wish to say to the Senator from Wyoming, in view of what the Senator has just said, that I do not desire that the bill shall be referred to any other committee. I regard the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry as one of the best committees in either House and all the members thereof. I explained very clearly that there is no reflection on the committee, and I understand the members of the committee do not consider it so. The reason why I made the motion, which, upon the objection of the Senator from West Virginia, will go over to come up to-morrow, because I shall ask action upon it then, is that the bill ought to be passed. That is the only reason and the only motive. The reason and motive are to get the bill enacted into law.

Mr. BEVERIDGE's motion was subsequently reduced to writing, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 912) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908," approved March 4, 1907; and to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907," approved June 30, 1906.

JENNIE CARROLL AND MABEL H. LAZEAR.

Mr. SCOTT. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 21884) granting an annuity to Jennie Carroll and Mabel H. Lazear, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 685) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD. There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 21884) granting an annuity to Jennie Carroll and Mabel H. Lazear, have examined the same and report as follows:

A similar bill (S. 6350) granting an increase of pension to the above beneficiaries was favorably reported by your committee this session and passed the Senate March 30, 1908. The Senate report, No. 431, contains a very full statement of the services of the officers and their discoveries. This bill went to the House, but was objected to there on the grounds that the pension of $125 per month was in excess of the amount allowed the widow of any other officer. The bill H. R. 21884 was introduced and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives. It was favorably reported by that committee and passed the House May 12, 1908.

This bill directs the Secretary of War to place on the rolls of the War Department the names of Jennie Carroll and Mabel H. Lazear and pay them an annuity, in lieu of all pension they now receive, of $125 each per month, and a provision has been inserted in the general deficiency bill, anticipating the passage of this bill, to provide the necessary funds for the payment of this annuity by the Secretary of War for the ensuing year.

In view of the extraordinary services rendered by the officers and the important discoveries made by them, as set forth in the report on the Senate bill, your committee believe these services should receive recognition and the widows of those officers should receive aid from the Government in the amount set forth in the bill.

Your committee report the bill back favorably and recommend that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed, was read a third time, and passed.

COLLECTION OF THE REVENUES.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17506) to amend an act entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues," approved June tenth, eighteen hundred and ninety, as amended by the act entitled "An act to provide revenues for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July twenty-fourth, eighteen hundred and ninety-seven, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

On page 5, lines 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22, of said Senate amendment strike out the following words: "When a case has been remanded to the Board of General Appraisers as above provided, the United States attorney for the district in which the appeal is pending may appear in the proceedings had before the Board under the order remanding the case."

And on page 8, in line 5, of said Senate amendment strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "nine."

And the Senate agree to the same.

HITCHMAN COAL AND COKE COMPANY V. JOHN MITCHELL.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to ask leave to print a document, and in order that the request may be understood it will be necessary for me to make a statement, for which I ask the indulgence of the Senate.

On January 23 I introduced a resolution, No. 81, with reference to a temporary injunction granted by one of the United States district judges for West Virginia. That resolution suggested that on October 24, 1907, a temporary restraining order had been granted and a hearing set down for January 14, 1908. There was in the temporary injunction, as I think, a purpose to extend the judicial power of the United States to the question as to whether or not an attempt to unionize a mine was an offense, or at least an act which was actionable in equity. In addition to that, the injunction carried with it, in my judgment, a suggestion that the circuit court of the United States could by injunction interfere with the freedom of speech and freedom of action of citizens of the United States. Among other things the defendants in this case were "enjoined from interfering and from combining, conspiring, or attempting to interfere with the employees of the plaintiff for the purpose of unionizing plaintiff's mine, without plaintiff's consent, by representing or causing to be represented in express or implied terms, to any of plaintiff's employees, or to any person who might become an employee of plaintiff, that such person will suffer or is likely to suffer some loss or trouble in continuing in or entering the employment of plaintiff, assigning, representing, or causing to be represented in express or implied terms to such employee or employees that such loss or trouble will or may come by reason of plaintiff not recognizing the United Mine Workers of America, or because plaintiff runs a nonunion mine."

That resolution a few days after its introduction was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and notwithstanding repeated personal efforts on my part to secure some character of report from that committee with reference to the resolution it still lies in that committee unacted upon, so far as I am advised.

I have caused to be prepared a statement from the decisions of the courts, the Supreme Court of the United States, the circuit and district courts of the United States, and some of the supreme courts of the States of the Union, showing the extent to which the courts have gone or attempted to go in enjoining the freedom of speech of laboring men under such circumstances as indicated in the bill of complaint in this West Virginia case.

I ask, Mr. President, that this statement which I have caused to be prepared may be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks that the paper submitted by him may be printed as a Senate document. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CULBERSON. I yield.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas if the case he refers to is the decision of Judge Dayton, formerly of the House of Representatives and now a Federal judge in West Virginia?

Mr. CULBERSON. It is.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas if he has further investigated the order made by Judge Dayton beyond the investigation he had made up to the time that he called the attention of the Senate to that order?

Mr. CULBERSON. I will state to the Senator from Illinois that I have carefully examined the injunction issued in the case to which he refers.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does the Senator contend that the order which was issued is an order that is out of the ordinary, or that it goes beyond what the Supreme Court of the United States has held is a proper order?

Mr. CULBERSON. I think, Mr. President, that fairly considered, it is beyond any order ever issued by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I think that anybody who will look at the bill of complaint that was filed, upon which the restraining order was issued, will find that it was simply to restrain the parties from breaking a contract—that is the real gravamen of the charge—and that the decision of Judge Dayton was along the line of the decisions of the Supreme Court and various other Federal courts in the country.

I will state further to the Senator from Texas that I understand the contention was not made by counsel for the defendant in that case that there was anything extraordinary in the issuance of that order.

Mr. President, if agreeable to the Senator from Texas, in order that those who read the statement made by the Senator may know just what Judge Dayton has done in the premises, I ask that the bill of complaint and the order that was issued by Judge Dayton may be printed, in connection with the paper now presented by the Senator, as a public document. I say this much, Mr. President—

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, in that connection I invite the attention of the Senator from Illinois to the fact that the resolution which embodies the complaint and the order of Judge Dayton has already been printed as a Senate document and in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as well.

Mr. HOPKINS. So that the whole question is before the public?

Mr. CULBERSON. That is my purpose—that this question may be fairly presented to the American public.

Mr. HOPKINS. I also rose, Mr. President, for the purpose of defending, in a way, Judge Dayton. I had the honor of serving with him for many years in the House of Representatives, and I always found him a fair-minded, honorable man; I always found him, upon questions that affected the interests of labor, a man quick to respond to such a call; and when the Senator from Texas raised this question some weeks ago,

I confess that I was somewhat shocked at some of the statements made. I therefore gave a little more attention to the subject than I otherwise would have done; and I have found, from the investigation I have made, that the order is one that is clearly within the decisions, not only of the various Federal courts of the country, but of the Supreme Court of the United States; and, as I stated a moment ago, as I understand, the learned counsel who represent the interest of labor in that particular case have stated publicly and privately that the order which Judge Dayton made in that case was not out of the ordinary and was strictly within the limits of the law.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, it is not to my purpose to discuss this resolution or the action of the district judge in this particular case. I have no personal acquaintance with Judge Dayton; I have no reason to suppose that he is other than an upright and honorable official of the United States, but I think, Mr. President, his action has gone beyond the precedents, and that, if acquiesced in and it should become the law of the United States, it would have the effect to interfere with the freedom of speech and the freedom of action of laboring people to right their wrongs.

I now submit, Mr. President, my request that the document sent to the desk may be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Texas a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I wish to ask the Senator from Texas if any appeal has been taken by the defendants from the order of Judge Dayton?

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand the case is still pending.

Mr. HOPKINS. Was there an appeal taken from the order?

Mr. CULBERSON. My statement was, and I repeat it, that the case is still pending undetermined—

Mr. HOPKINS. Unappealed from?

Mr. CULBERSON. And of course no appeal has been taken.

Mr. HOPKINS. It is pending in the same court where the order was made?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Texas has answered my question.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well. I submit my request, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that the papers submitted by him may be printed as a Senate document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CULBERSON. Now, Mr. President, I am requested to ask that the papers which I hold in my hand, being injunctions granted by various State courts in labor cases, may be printed as a separate document, my purpose being to show the tendency of the courts of the country, Federal and State, to interfere with the freedom of action of laboring people.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks that the papers sent to the Secretary's desk may be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. CULBERSON. As a separate document from the one just submitted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. And as a separate Senate document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

NATIONAL MONETARY COMMISSION.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report a joint resolution to create a commission to be called the "National Monetary Commission." I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island reports from the Committee on Finance an original resolution and asks unanimous consent for its present consideration. The joint resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The joint resolution (S. R. 92) to create a commission to be called the "National Monetary Commission" was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That a commission is hereby created, to be called the "National Monetary Commission," to be composed of nine members of the Senate, to be appointed by the Presiding Officer thereof, and nine Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker thereof; and any vacancy on the Commission shall be filled by the same official who made the original appointment and in the same manner.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Commission to inquire into and report to Congress, at the earliest date practicable, what changes are necessary or desirable in the monetary system of the United States or in the laws relating to banking and currency, and for this purpose they are authorized to sit during the sessions or recess of Congress, at such times and places as they may deem desirable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summons and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to employ a disbursing officer and such secretaries, experts, stenographers, messengers, and other assistants as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes for which said Commission was created. The Commission shall have the power, through subcommittee or otherwise, to examine witnesses and to make such investigations and examinations, in this or other countries, of the subjects committed to their charge as they shall deem necessary.

SEC. 3. That a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this act and to pay the necessary expenses of the Commission and its members is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Said appropriation shall be immediately available and shall be paid out on the audit and order of the chairman or acting chairman of the said Commission, which audit and order shall be conclusive and binding upon all Departments as to the correctness of the accounts of such Commission.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the managers of the committee of conference on the part of the Senate and the House of Representatives on the bill (H. R. 21871) to amend the national banking laws have so far been unable to agree upon a report. If Congress is to adjourn at an early date, it is evident that no agreement can be reached at this session. In order that there may be a thorough investigation of all the subjects contemplated in that bill, the managers of the conference on the part of the Senate and of the other House have unanimously agreed that the joint resolution which I have reported, providing for the creation of a commission, should be passed. It is the same in terms as the provision which was included in the currency bill as it passed the Senate, which was adopted as a substitute for the House measure.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. As the resolution was read I did not understand that it named any time when the commission should report.

Mr. ALDRICH. At the earliest date practicable.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether the intention is that the commission shall be appointed before the adjournment of this session of Congress?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COL. WILLIAM F. STEWART.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I desire to call up the bill (S. 4316) to further amend the act entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes," approved January 21, 1903, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Before the Chair recognizes the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY], the Chair will lay before the Senate a resolution coming over from yesterday. Morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. RAYNER on May 20, 1908, as follows:

Resolved, That Col. William F. Stewart, of the Coast Artillery, United States Army, is, in the opinion of the Senate, entitled to be heard, together with his witnesses, upon the charges that have been made against him and that are contained in a report to the President, and that the President is requested to convene a court of inquiry for the purpose of giving him and his witnesses the opportunity to be heard, and that the said court render its opinion upon the facts submitted after the hearing, as is usual in the proceeding of courts of inquiry.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CULBERSON. I thought the Senator had concluded. I do not desire to interrupt him.

Mr. WARREN. I have not concluded. I wish to make a brief statement.

Mr. President, this resolution is the same in general intent as the joint resolution presented some days ago, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], on yesterday, made some remarks upon this resolution, indulged in sarcasm, of which he is master, and referring to the chairman of the Military Committee, insinuated, or rather asserted, that he could not expect any action, and indicated that there had been no action.

This matter came before the Senate one week ago. The Senator from Maryland discussed it on Wednesday. The joint resolution was ordered sent to the Committee on Military Affairs, and the chairman of that committee did not wait until the papers had reached the committee from the presiding officer's desk before writing a letter to the President of the United States and another to the Secretary of War, which included a carbon copy of the one to the President, asking for all the papers in the case. On Thursday morning, which was the morning of the following day, the Committee on Military Affairs had its first meeting, and granted to the Senator from Maryland all the time he wished to present and argue this matter. I will say in this connection that the letters to the President and the Secretary of War were sent by a special messenger. It was after hours and the messenger had trouble in finding the proper party at the White House offices to whom to deliver his message, but nevertheless he did deliver the letter, which was promptly responded to by the President. The messenger found the private secretary to the Secretary of War at his home and delivered the letter to the Secretary there. On the following day some hundreds of pages of matter, possibly three or four hundred pages, were received by the committee from the President, and matter has been received from day to day since that time as fast as it could be arranged, the last package coming to me last night at nearly 11 o'clock to my committee room by private messenger.

Members of the Committee on Military Affairs have had access individually to these papers. I have examined them as carefully as I could with the other duties I have had to perform. The Committee on Military Affairs is composed of gentlemen on both sides of this Chamber who take an active interest in other legislation and occupy important places upon other committees, and they have been compelled, as a matter of course, to serve as conferees on the great supply bills and on other bills. So that there can not be alleged against that committee any inattention to the evidence that has been brought before it.

I hold in my hand here a portion of that evidence, possibly eight hundred or a thousand pages, more or less, so that the Senate may see its volume. It is largely on thin paper. For instance, here [exhibiting] is a bunch of about 500 pages in typewriting, closely written, and there is yet much more of it here on my desk, as Senators can see. So far as the members of the Military Committee are concerned, to my knowledge many of them have worked late at night over these matters. The chairman of the committee has not been in his bed until after 2 o'clock at night a single night since this matter was referred to it, and did not leave this building until nearly 4 o'clock this morning, after a long and dreary night spent in the examination of these papers.

Mr. President, fine speeches and sarcasm may amuse the galleries, but when it comes down to the business of this Senate, it strikes me that every committee has the privilege to stand upon its rights as a committee and the individual rights of its members.

The Committee on Military Affairs has had this matter referred to it, and has the right to insist upon proper time during which to investigate it.

As I have said before, I honor the man who loves his friend; but this is not a matter of one man. This is a matter affecting the discipline of the Army. This is a matter that, presented as it has been here, can not, should this resolution pass, be other than a rebuke to the President of the United States and every general officer of the Army who has passed upon this case.

All this talk about exile and about punishment is nothing more nor less than sentimentalism—sentimentalism gone mad, indeed, at that. Fort Grant is one of the posts of the United States Army. It has good buildings; it is located in as healthy a country as any post of the United States, and I will except none; it is a fairly well-built post; and, indeed, the matter is before the Secretary of War to-day whether they will not re-invest this post and give it a garrison.

As to Colonel Stewart, as I said heretofore on this floor, and I repeat it now, that I do not intend to discuss the merits of his particular case nor him as an individual while this matter is before the committee; but it is purely a matter of whether this officer shall have a command or not. There are Fort Assiniboine, Fort Keogh, and one or two posts in the South that are not at present garrisoned with troops. There were left these posts which an officer of the grade of colonel might command. This officer was first sent to Fort Grant by his superior officers, with no knowledge, as I understand, on the part of the President of his being sent there.

The President had nothing to do with it in the first instance; and I want to say, before going further, that, notwithstanding the insinuations of the brilliant Senator from Maryland, I have not even seen the President of the United States since this matter came up, save once, and then I was in his presence probably less than three minutes and did not discuss the merits of this case, and I have not even been in the War Department nor have

I discussed it with a single Army officer. I am discussing, as far as I go, this case upon what lies before us in the papers and what I know of certain facts surrounding it, gained from reliable sources other than the Executive or the Army.

Fort Grant, as I said before, is in fit condition to-day to receive any officer of the Army with any number of troops that it can shelter. It has a good sewer system; it has a good water system; it has substantial buildings. It is true that this officer found fault with one of the buildings, but the shortages were promptly made good, and the repairs were all attended to without delay. This officer is there, receiving full pay, which is now $5,000 a year. He had his choice whether he should have a buckboard or other style of carriage. He is furnished with horses and a driver. He has every privilege that the commander of any post in the United States usually has. All of his friends can go there. His wife and family can be there. There is a regular United States mail which goes there twice a week, and there is nothing in the comparison between that post and any other that makes it seem like punishment except the fact that he is there alone without command.

Mr. President, it is true that officers of the Army may like the routs, the dances, and dinners of Washington and Baltimore, but the Army does not contract that its officers shall have all of the social advantages that men about town, so called, are addicted to and arrogate to themselves. Sherman said that "war is hell." So it is, and the Army must always be prepared for hell, if hell comes. If an officer is sent to the very farthest ends of the earth, it is his business to go without questioning his orders.

As to the matter of retirement, how did it come up? The officer in 1906 made a request before anything had been said to him about retirement, as these papers will show, to be appointed a brigadier-general. His case was considered, and the indorsements show that he was not considered fit for command, and consequently he was not made a brigadier-general, and the counter offer went back that he could retire and leave the service if he so desired, but otherwise he would be sent to some post without command. This same condition of affairs has existed many times heretofore. I recall that a major in the artillery when in command of post in Massachusetts was considered to be temperamentally unsound for the time being, and he was relieved of command and sent to one of those small artillery posts where he had no command. He was afterwards reinstated to position and since promoted, and is now an honored and trusted officer. This man, Colonel Stewart, was sent to Fort Grant by his superior officers. From there he was later sent to a Southern post, probably because he had requested it; he was taken from that Southern post because the post had been committed in some way to the State of Florida, in which it was situated, and he was then sent back to Fort Grant. He can be taken, to-morrow or any other day, from Fort Grant and sent to any other place. He can be put in command or left without command.

Now, as to a court of inquiry, the statutes and the papers show very plainly there are two ways to bring it about. A commanding officer can call a court of inquiry, provided that the officer about whom he proposes to make the inquiry is willing or will appear before it. On the other hand, the President has power at any time to call a court of inquiry without restriction. Had the Senator from Maryland asked me, had the Senator from Maryland asked the members of the Committee on Military Affairs to use their influence to try to relieve this officer, I feel sure they would have investigated as far as they could and joined him in that purpose. Instead the Senator has brought the matter in here and—I leave it to Senators to say whether I am right or not—has made one of the most, if I may use the term, vicious speeches against the President of the United States, and incidentally it must apply to such commanders as Generals Grant and Duvall and Murray and Davis and Wade, and all the others who passed upon this question and acted upon it long before the President knew anything especial about it, as the papers show.

Returning again to the matter of the Military Committee, the members of that committee are now on this floor, and I want the members of the committee to rise—any one or all of them—if I make a wrong statement. I want to ask whether or not the Committee on Military Affairs has neglected this case. If any member of the committee thinks so, I want him to rise now and say so, and I pause for such expression. [After a pause.] Since no one responds, I will proceed.

There are other ways of reaching things than by attacking the President because of acts done by Army officers of long standing and untarnished reputation. The duty of this committee, before it asks the President to do anything about this man, is to examine thoroughly the papers, to acquaint itself with the law and the Constitution, as we have been commanded to do, and to see what the effect will be upon the discipline of the Army. I had hoped we might make a report at this session. The Senator from Maryland has not made it any easier for the committee to make a report. These attacks made in this way do not help the committee to consider the question. If it so be that we do not report at this session, and it is left until December, and in December we make a finding and bring it in here, what will happen? This officer of the Army occupies a location, a home which I would love to have my brother or father or son occupy if he wanted to spend a pleasant and restful summer. He receives everything due him as colonel, which is his position in the Army, except that he is not charged with the responsibility of handling troops. He reports to headquarters; yes. So does every commander of every post. Will we put ourselves on record here in the Senate by passing a resolution, which has never been sent to a committee, that will open the doors for every Army officer, if he happens to get a post he does not like, to come here and ask some Senator whom he knows to rise in his place and move that his station be changed or that he have a court of inquiry?

Does the Senate want to take that responsibility? If this man were a prisoner, if he were under sentence, if he were an exile such as the Senator from Maryland would have us believe, it would be another question. But, without wishing to use offensive language, I want to say that such sensational appeals as have been made by him are, in my judgment, simply maudlin. What is going to happen to this man? You might make the same statement regarding the man in charge of Fort Ethan Allen, Vt., because he might want to go to San Antonio, where the weather is warmer, or the one in San Antonio because he might not want to go to the frozen regions of Vermont. It simply comes down to this: Shall the Army be commanded by its proper officers, educated for that purpose, having had long experience? And if the matter comes up, as sometimes it does, where it must be passed upon by the Commander in Chief, shall the Army be run and commanded across the desk of the presiding officer of the Senate upon the caprice of any one Senator, even though he may be a brilliant, eloquent, and thrilling speaker?

It is a matter of the discipline of the Army on the one hand, and it is also a matter of the rights and duties of the United States Senate. It is a question whether we will proceed properly and conduct business as we have always conducted it, or enter upon a new departure and run the Government upon the wishes of a single Senator, one at a time.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I had not intended this morning to say a word about this resolution. I think I have said quite enough. I have said almost everything I could say. But the address of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], with some of its rather distasteful observations, compels me to reply very briefly.

There is no amusement to me about this case, nor is there any comedy about it, as the Senator seems to intimate. It strikes me as a tragedy rather than a comedy. The Senator from Wyoming speaks about applause in the galleries. There is no one in the Senate who cares less about applause in the galleries or applause from any quarter than I do. When I concluded what I had to say yesterday, I heard no applause from the galleries. The Senator from Wyoming is traveling entirely outside of the sphere of this argument, I think, in making any allusion or observation of that sort.

I want to say this in passing: There is no one in the Senate for whom I have greater respect and esteem than I have for the distinguished Senator from Wyoming, and by nothing that I have said, by no intimation that I have made, have I charged either the Committee on Military Affairs or any member of that committee with evading its or his duty in reference to this resolution. If I thought for one moment, Mr. President, that the record which the Senator from Wyoming has produced this morning, or the smallest fraction of that record, was properly before his committee, I would not have asked for the adoption or the rejection of the resolution during this session. My whole contention has been, and it is now—and the Senator from Wyoming does not seem to pay the slightest attention to it—that it is not a question of the man's record. I submit to the Senator from Wyoming that he has not touched upon the proposition on which I addressed the Senate. It is not what the record of Colonel Stewart is. It is the question whether he has not the right to be heard in self-defense upon the record that his enemies have made against him.

Mr. President, I care not what that record is. I do not know what it is. I know the President read to me extracts from the record, and I have no doubt he read the severest charges. But the charges may be as severe and serious as you can possibly formulate. The question now is this: Those are charges made against Colonel Stewart. Has he not the right, in self-defense, to be heard before a proper tribunal of the country to vindicate himself from those charges? The Senator from Wyoming has not touched upon that point.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. RAYNER. I do.

Mr. WARREN. Charges, as understood in Army affairs, are specific charges that can be presented before a court of inquiry or a court-martial. I have stated—and the Senator should admit, if he has examined these papers—that the Department has acted not upon charges regarding this man, but upon general information it has had by way of inspections, and so forth, as to his conduct, and has concluded that he can be spared from more active service and ought not to be in charge of troops at the present time. That is all there is about it.

Mr. RAYNER. I will admit all that, and in legal phrase I will file a demurrer to the indictment. I will admit every word that these officers have stated. But if the demurrer is overruled is not the man entitled to be heard in his own defense? What is the answer to that proposition here in the Senate of the United States?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. RAYNER. Yes; I will submit.

Mr. WARREN. I will not interrupt the Senator again.

Mr. RAYNER. No; I do not object to interruptions. I made a mistake yesterday in not permitting the Senator to interrupt me.

Mr. WARREN. I am very sorry I have interrupted the Senator, and I will not do so further.

Mr. RAYNER. I do not object. I want to be perfectly courteous.

Mr. WARREN. I know, but I am breaking the thread of the Senator's remarks, and I will desist.

Mr. RAYNER. No, not at all. Of course if the Senator does not desire to interrupt me, very well.

I said it is not a question of depriving him of command. That is not the proposition. The Senator asks whether I have looked into the papers. How could I have looked into papers that I have not seen? How can Colonel Stewart answer charges of which he has never been notified? When Senators discuss this matter I should like them to discuss the proposition before the Senate and not a proposition that is not before the Senate. The proposition I have advanced before the Senate is not in reference to the sewerage at Fort Grant or similar propositions; that is not the proposition. Nor whether or not it is a station where anyone would be willing to spend a summer; that is not the proposition. Nor the proposition whether the President is punishing Colonel Stewart or whether he has a right to punish him; that is only a corollary of the proposition I am arguing. The proposition I have argued before the Senate for the fourth time is that certain charges have been made against this officer, and he is entitled to be heard in his own defense to contradict the charges that have been made against him.

Mr. WARREN rose.

Mr. RAYNER. Now, if the Senator wants to interrupt me upon that, or if any other Senator does, I will gladly submit to any interruption. Here are a thousand pages, I understand. Colonel Stewart has never seen one of them. Here is charge after charge. He has never seen one of these charges. Here are accusations, so many of them that the Military Affairs Committee—and I will admit that that is a true statement—would not possibly have time during this session, and probably not during the next session, to investigate them fully. Colonel Stewart has never seen them.

Mr. WARREN. Part of the papers are his own letters and statements.

Mr. RAYNER. Part of it is in his own writing? I will be very glad if the Senator will give me the part that is in his own writing.

Mr. WARREN. It runs all through these papers and occurs in perhaps scores of places.

Mr. RAYNER. This is the first notice I have had of it. What is the nature of it? The nature of it is that Colonel Stewart calls for a court of inquiry, and the President has denied it to him. The nature of that writing, I suppose, is that he asks for two or three months' leave of absence, and the President has denied it to him.

I am not attacking the President here. The Senator from Wyoming is mistaken. He talks about a vicious attack. I am talking about an act the President has committed and not about the President. Nobody in this body has a higher opinion of him than I have, personally and otherwise. But when he commits an act of injustice I propose to follow it to the end. He has denied to a man the right to be heard in self-defense. That is the proposition before the Senate. You must separate the two propositions. The Senator from Wyoming must not confound the punishment of this man with the right of this man to be heard upon charges made against him.

I have intended no reflection upon the Military Affairs Committee. Not one word that has fallen from me reflects upon the chairman of that committee or any member of the committee. I have intended, and no words of mine will bear any other interpretation, no reflection upon the President. My purpose is to bring the resolution before the Senate, and the resolution reads as follows:

Resolved, That Col. William F. Stewart, of the Coast Artillery, United States Army, is, in the opinion of the Senate, entitled to be heard, together with his witnesses, upon the charges that have been made against him and that are contained in a report to the President, and that the President is requested to convene a court of inquiry for the purpose of giving him and his witnesses the opportunity to be heard, and that the said court render its opinion upon the facts submitted after the hearing as is usual in the proceedings of courts of inquiry.

The Senator from Wyoming has not touched upon this point. I should like to ask him or any other Senator if these charges are as grave as he says they are, and as many as he claims them to be, why is not this officer entitled to the same right to be heard in self-defense that a criminal has under the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Maryland asks me the question. Shall I answer it?

Mr. RAYNER. I have no objection.

Mr. WARREN. I have not stated that any charges were made against him. Quite the contrary.

Mr. RAYNER. I should like to ask the Senator, then, what is in these thousand pages, if there are no charges?

Mr. WARREN. I have reason to believe that if the Senator had referred to him this whole matter—this whole stack of papers—he would either never read all this stuff or else, having read it, he would drop it where it is.

Mr. RAYNER. I would never drop it. What is in it? The man has not been heard. If the Senator from Wyoming can satisfy me the man has been heard, I am willing to abandon the proposition, but the man has never had a tribunal before which he has had the right to be heard. Now, do not let us make any mistake about that. I will not wander away from the main proposition before the Senate. I will not go into the question whether it is a detail or punishment. I think it is punishment. And I do not think the President of the United States or any commanding officer has the right to inflict punishment before he gives the accused a right to be heard in his own defense before a tribunal. But that is only a corollary from the proposition that I am advancing to the Senate. The proposition I am advancing to the Senate—and I hope the Senator from Wyoming or the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], who appears to be getting ready to answer my argument, will pay attention to the proposition that I am making now—

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. RAYNER. I do.

Mr. HOPKINS. I want to ask the Senator from Maryland if he thinks that every time a subordinate officer in the Army of the United States receives an order from his superior he has a right to contest that order and have a court of inquiry to determine whether it shall be obeyed by him or not?

Mr. RAYNER. I think that question answers itself. I do not think anybody would advance any such proposition as that.

Mr. WARREN. That is the whole case.

Mr. RAYNER. I do not think any man would advance any such proposition.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the question answers itself, it ends any argument the Senator can make in the premises, because all there is to this is that the superior officer issued an order to Colonel Stewart, and Colonel Stewart, through the Senator from Maryland, is resisting the obeying of that order.

Mr. RAYNER. With all deference, that shows how little the Senator from Illinois knows about the question which has been argued here.

Mr. HOPKINS. Whether "the Senator from Illinois" knows much or little, he knows enough to know that in the Army and in the Navy subordinates are supposed to obey orders without question. We could not have an army, we could not have a navy, unless that rule prevailed.

Mr. RAYNER. The Senator again has not touched upon this question. I am not arguing against the order of the President. I am arguing for the right of this man to a court of inquiry.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—

Mr. RAYNER. Just let me finish this sentence. It matters not where this man is. Suppose he were not at Fort Grant. Suppose he were at the most delightful place to which the President could send him. This question would still be before the Senate—I have tried to argue it, it seems in vain, at least so far as concerns the Senator from Illinois, for the fourth time—whether, outside of the place where this man is stationed, entirely apart from the question whether he is being punished, he is not entitled to a court of inquiry.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. RAYNER. I will yield if it has anything to do with the subject, but please do not get off on something that has nothing to do with it.

Mr. HOPKINS. The trouble with the Senator from Maryland is that he discusses everything on earth aside from the very proposition that involves the rights of Colonel Stewart. He has talked about what has been said here in order to determine the rights of Colonel Stewart. We go to the order issued, not to any letters written. We take the official order. If the Senator can find any fault with that, I should like him to discuss that instead of to "tear a passion to tatters."

Mr. RAYNER. Suppose there is no order in this case?

Mr. HOPKINS. But there is an order.

Mr. RAYNER. But I am not discussing now the order, except as a corollary from the main proposition. I discussed that matter before the Senate, and I do not think the Senator from Illinois could have heard the first argument I made.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will not speak of an argument. I heard the speech.

Mr. RAYNER. I have never heard very much of an argument made by the Senator from Illinois on anything, if it comes to that.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am not trying to argue. I am merely calling attention to a fact.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I shall not submit to any further interruption. I think I have acted very courteously. If the Senator has not understood the argument, it is simply because he can not understand an argument when one is addressed to him.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland declines to yield further. The Senator from Maryland has the floor.

Mr. RAYNER. I will yield to anybody, but I will not yield for a statement of that sort. It is not fair. I am trying to discuss this proposition in an orderly way, and I want to put it before the Senate. I admit it is susceptible of discussion; most decidedly. The two propositions I have advanced are, first, that this officer is entitled to a court of inquiry. That is one proposition, distinct from the order, distinct from the punishment the President has inflicted upon him. There may have been no punishment; there may have been no order; but Colonel Stewart has had accusations and charges made against him, and owing to the gravity of the charges he is entitled to have them inquired into. The President has charged him with being disqualified for the military service of the United States. Has he the right to have that question examined into? That is the proposition, and the only answer to it is that if he has the right, then every other officer has the right.

I deny the truth of that proposition. I think every case must stand upon the environment that surrounds it. I think it is a matter of discretion whether an officer, when charges are made against him, has the right to a court. I will say that every criminal has the right to ask for a court. A man who has committed the greatest crime in the calendar of crimes has the right under the Constitution of the United States to be confronted by his accusers, to have witnesses summoned in his behalf, and to a speedy trial by an impartial jury. Under the Constitution of the United States you give to every criminal the right to a trial, and yet you deny a trial to this man, who claims to have been charged with things that unfit him for the military service.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to ask the Senator's opinion upon a question of law in reference to his proposition. He has studied the matter and can answer. Suppose a court of inquiry were awarded this officer, and it should make a report and recommendation. Does the Senator think the Commander in Chief would be bound by that report or recommendation?

Mr. RAYNER. I do not, and I so told the Senator from Indiana the other day. I do not think so. I do not think the President—and I so stated in the first argument I made—would be bound by any opinion that a court of inquiry rendered. A court of inquiry merely advises the President as to the facts, and it is still for the President to act upon the findings of the court of inquiry. There seems to be an unbroken current of authorities upon that proposition.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That being true as a matter of law, does it not follow when the President says, as the Senator from Maryland said the other day he had said, that he (the President) had been advised upon this case very thoroughly by two or three or four commanding generals and a large number of other officers, and having himself a great mass of testimony, that a court of inquiry would not make upon his mind as Commander in Chief any other impression than that which he had arrived at upon the recommendations and the advice of these eminent officers?

Mr. RAYNER. I think decidedly not, because the President has neither heard the officer nor heard any witnesses in his defense. How many times must I state that proposition in the Senate? The President has heard the charges made by the commanding officers, but this officer has upon three different occasions asked him for the privilege of being heard; and he has been denied that right. Does the Senator think it fair for the President to deny this officer the right to be heard in his own defense?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator asks me the question, and I think it is a very important question and goes to the heart of this controversy, and I will answer it in just one moment. Not only as a matter of law, but also as a matter of policy, I do not think that, in the command of the Army and the maintenance of its discipline, any officer or soldier, as a matter of right, can ask to be heard upon the question where he shall be sent, what duty he shall perform, what command he shall have, or the division of the Army to which he shall belong. I do not think—and I think it goes to the heart of the whole controversy, since the Senator asks me—that he has a right under the law to any such thing. If such a doctrine were accepted, it would be totally destructive not only of the discipline of the Army, I will say to the Senator, but of the whole philosophy that underlies military organization.

Mr. RAYNER. The Senator from Indiana has not answered the question. I will admit that the question of duty and the question where an officer is to be sent are questions to be determined in the regular course of military discipline. Has not a man a right to be heard in defense of the charges made against him, so as to relieve his character from imputation? I read to the Senate the other day—I do not remember whether the Senator from Indiana was present or not—a parallel case to this, an exact precedent, where men perhaps not so great as some of the Senators arguing this question now debated this whole proposition in the Senate of the United States. Mr. Thurman debated it; Mr. Conkling debated it. Mr. Morton debated it. Logan debated it from the military point of view. It was discussed in the House, and Mr. FAYE, now a Senator from the State of Maine, was a Member of the House of Representatives. They proceeded to discuss the whole question, and the Senate and House unanimously held that General Howard had a right to a court of inquiry to relieve his character. If I could only get Senators to understand that, there would be no further difficulty in the argument of this question.

Mr. FULTON, Mr. BEVERIDGE, and Mr. WARREN addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield?

Mr. RAYNER. Yes; I do. I yield to all of them.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

Mr. RAYNER. I yield to all of you. Distribute it among yourselves.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield the floor?

Mr. RAYNER. I yield for an interruption. I do not yield the floor.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. RAYNER. For an interruption.

Mr. FULTON. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland that the question here is not whether a man is entitled to a hearing. We all agree, I think, that every man is entitled to a hearing.

on charges preferred against him in a formal way, whether it be a military matter or in civil life. But the question here is whether the Senate is to adopt a resolution directing a court of inquiry until it has carefully investigated the matter itself in order to ascertain whether or not it is a proper case in which to order an inquiry.

The discipline of the Army is involved. While we will all of us say a man is entitled to a hearing, yet I think no one will be prepared to say that on a mere suggestion that an officer of the Army has been treated unfairly and unjustly we will order an investigation or a court of inquiry. If we were to do that, everybody will concede that we would destroy all possibility of maintaining discipline in the Army or in the Navy.

The proposition here is to refer this matter to a committee and give the committee an opportunity to investigate the facts in the case and say whether or not there is sufficient behind it to justify a court of inquiry. I take it the committee will go into the investigation fairly and fully and report to the Senate the facts. Then we will be advised whether or not it is one of those cases where we ought to provide that a court of inquiry shall be held in order that justice may be done to this officer.

But, Mr. President, the committee has not had time to consider it. It says it has not. It has had the case before it for only a week, and in the closing hours of the session, when everybody is rushed and the Senate is crowded with work. To relieve a committee of the investigation of an important matter of this character, that has been before it for only a week, and take upon ourselves the responsibility of saying that we will order this inquiry, that we will enter upon the domain of another branch of the Government without any preliminary investigation ourselves is assuming a very great responsibility, and one that I do not wish to assume.

I subscribe to all that the Senator says in the abstract about the right of every individual to a hearing. That is true. But are we, without investigating the matter, to presume that the other branch of the Government has been derelict in its duty? There are very great principles involved here, and matters of deep public concern.

I do not mean to say that if it shall appear on investigation that injustice has been done a citizen it is not our duty to provide that he shall have an opportunity to be heard. I will agree to that. The question is, How shall we approach the discharge of that duty? Shall we not take order, in the first instance, to see that we have sufficient ground upon which to base our action? And how can we know that until this matter has been carefully inquired into by a committee?

If the committee, on inquiry, shall develop facts which to my judgment show that this man is being unjustly treated, then I shall vote for a court of inquiry or for some substantial measure of relief; but I am not ready to do that until it has been inquired carefully into. I do not think that the committee has yet had the time or the opportunity to give it that investigation which the importance of the principle involved requires should be given.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon is too capable and experienced a lawyer not to draw the distinction between the punishment that is being awarded to this man and the right of this man to be heard in his own defense against the charges and accusations that are made against him. Those two propositions are entirely distinct. The right of the President to punish him is one thing. Has the President or has any commanding officer the right to punish without a court of inquiry? I say not. I have just sent for the War Regulations and I will have them here in a few moments.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

Mr. RAYNER. I will yield in a moment. In one article after another provision is made for a court-martial, where the officer is charged with certain offenses, and the offenses are enumerated.

Now, the question which arises is an interesting one. I may be wrong about all this, but I have my own views about it, and I shall press it to a conclusion, notwithstanding the impatience of the Senator from Massachusetts. I shall go on with this argument, and I shall show that the question whether a commanding officer has a right to punish is a question entirely distinct from the right of an officer to have charges that are made against him examined into.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

Mr. RAYNER. One moment. If the Senator from Oregon will read the splendid argument of the Senator who some time ago preceded the Senator from Massachusetts in this body, Senator Sumner, he will find an answer to the very proposition he has put to me. The proposition was put to Sumner and to Conkling in that case that there are no charges against this officer, and the answer was made, "The character of the officer is involved in the charges that are made against him."

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

Mr. RAYNER. Let me finish the sentence. The direct point that is in the Senator's mind came up before the Senate as to whether an officer of the United States had a right to a court of inquiry to relieve himself from charges and imputations against his official character. A court of inquiry in Howard's case was ordered. The court of inquiry convened and General Howard received, I will not say an honorable acquittal, but, as I said the other day, an honorable vindication at its hands. That is an entirely distinct question from the question whether the President has a right to punish. Make no mistake about that. The President's right to punish depends upon certain principles of law. The right of officers to demand a court of inquiry depends upon an entirely different set of principles. I am satisfied that the Senator from Oregon can draw easily the distinction between the two.

Now I will yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. FULTON. What I wish to say to the Senator from Maryland is this: I can see a distinction between the two propositions. The Senator says the question is, Has the President the power to punish? My answer is, How does it come that the President has inflicted any punishment? I do not know. The Senator says he does, but we have no official knowledge whatever that any punishment has been imposed upon this man. That is why I want a report from the committee, so that we may know what has been done, why and under what circumstances the steps were taken. Simply because a Senator, great as our confidence in him may be, shall come on the floor and state that he understands punishment has been inflicted on an officer of the Army or Navy and demands a court of inquiry, this body can not afford to proceed along any such lines. We must proceed in an orderly manner, give the committee the subject in hand, and let the committee investigate it and report what the facts are. The Senator says that this officer is being punished. How does the Senator know that?

Mr. RAYNER. I will tell the Senator from Oregon how I know it. It is because the President five times in his letter stated that he was punishing him.

Mr. WARREN. The President said "incidentally" every time.

Mr. RAYNER. Five times did the President state in the communication that this is punishment inflicted upon Colonel Stewart, and I do not want any better authority than that.

Mr. FULTON. Suppose the President said that to the Senator, the question is whether or not there is any official order showing it. Has the President said that to the Senate? No. I say we must proceed in an orderly manner and refer this matter to the committee. If the committee reports the fact showing that, then we will determine it. I am not willing to proceed simply because the Senator comes here and says he has a letter from the President saying that this man is being punished. I wish to have further knowledge as to why, under what circumstances, and what was the evidence on which he proceeded and the circumstances under which he contended he had a right to inflict punishment. All these matters we must know before we should presume to interfere with the conduct or business of another branch of the Government.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President—

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the Senator from Florida if he wishes to ask me a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. RAYNER. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Oregon and the Senate to the fact that there is a letter in the Record from the President of the United States in which he distinctly states that no question of punishment in this case has concerned him in the slightest degree; that if there were punishment it was purely incidental; and that this man had not been sent to Fort Grant for the purpose of punishment.

Mr. FULTON. All those are matters that go to support my position and contention that the only way we can proceed with any accurate knowledge, the only way by which we may safely proceed, is to have the subject fully investigated by the committee, and get a report from the committee. Then we can act intelligently and know what we ought to do.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I observe that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] has a copy of the Articles of War in his possession at this moment, and before he refers to the articles to which he desires to direct attention I desire to call his attention particularly to the issue here presented, to the end that he may in addressing himself to the subject hereafter give such attention to the view I have obtained of this matter as he may think proper.

As I understand the case which is presented here on the floor of the Senate Chamber, this officer has not been charged with any crime known to the law or the Articles of War. It is alleged that the inducing cause leading to a certain assignment is traceable to a quarrelsome disposition and certain mental and temperamental infirmities.

I recall very distinctly that many years ago when the selection of officers for duty in connection with the Spanish-American war was a subject of interest to the country Army officers and the President, as Commander in Chief, discussed in my presence, not once, but repeatedly, the temperamental features of an officer, his mentality, his prudence or the lack of it, his courage, his strength, his age, and in many, many cases officers were pronounced temperamentally unfit, mentally unfit, physically unfit for the discharge of a particular duty. Does that constitute a charge against the officer cognizable before a court of inquiry?

Mr. President, I think the Senator from Maryland will find that the Articles of War do not cover and no statute applies to data with reference to character, courage, temperament, and mentality generally, by which the Commander in Chief of the Army determines the particular post where an officer or enlisted man may best serve the Government he has sworn to serve.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me just there?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In addition to what the Senator has so clearly stated, even if it did justify any of the things the Senator pointed out; if it justified a court of inquiry, which, of course, it does not, is it within the proprieties that the Senate of the United States should express its opinion as to an Army officer, as to whether we think he should have a court of inquiry, and as to whether that was a sufficient cause?

Mr. CARTER. The Senate, of course, will not engage in a futile work. The Senate will not put itself upon record as volunteering an opinion which no one is bound to respect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law.

Mr. KEAN. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, in order that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of the general deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. LODGE. I desire merely to make a parliamentary inquiry. The resolution goes over and comes up to-morrow at the conclusion of the morning business, I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will go to the Calendar. It loses its day.

Mr. LODGE. It goes now to the Calendar?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It does.

Mr. LODGE. Then I will take occasion to say what I have to say in connection with the general deficiency bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I thank the Senator from Maine, and I certainly will not abuse his courtesy by continuing long.

Mr. HALE. Several Senators have indicated a desire to continue this debate, but I think I must insist on going on with the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. LODGE. I for one do not desire to detain the deficiency appropriation bill a moment, and I am perfectly willing to stand aside and let the whole matter go over until to-morrow, but I should like the unanimous consent stated to allow the resolution to come up to-morrow.

Mr. ALDRICH. It could be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that it lie on the table, so that it can be taken up to-morrow after the morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the resolution may lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE. Otherwise, of course, I can say what I have to say on the deficiency bill which would leave it in that connection.

Mr. CULBERSON. What resolution is it?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution that has been under consideration.

Mr. CULBERSON. The resolution offered by the Senator from Maryland?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution offered by the Senator from Maryland. Does the Senator from Massachusetts withdraw his request for unanimous consent?

Mr. LODGE. I want to relieve the passage of the general deficiency bill. If I can have unanimous consent that the resolution will be taken up to-morrow after the morning business, I will say nothing now, of course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the resolution lie on the table, to be taken up after the close of the routine morning business to-morrow.

Mr. RAYNER. Before the question is put over, I should like to know about my right to the floor. I had the floor until 2 o'clock and I suppose I will have the floor to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no.

Mr. RAYNER. I have not yielded the floor. I yielded to one interruption after another, until the hour of 2 o'clock arrived. When the resolution comes up to-morrow I suppose I will have a right to finish my argument, which will be very brief.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution can come up to-morrow only by motion or by unanimous consent.

Mr. RAYNER. I shall object to unanimous consent unless the Senator from Massachusetts agrees that I may finish my argument, which will be very brief, I suppose. I submitted to one interruption after another. Two-thirds of my time was taken up by interruptions.

Mr. LODGE. I did not interrupt the Senator from Maryland, and I had no intention of doing so.

Mr. RAYNER. I know, but you would have had the right to do so. Several other Senators interrupted me.

Mr. LODGE. I only desire, at the proper time, when the Senator shall have concluded—I do not know when that will arrive—that I shall have an opportunity to say a few words in behalf of the Military Committee, of which I am a member.

Mr. HALE. Now, let us go on with the deficiency bill.

Mr. BURKETT. Is the question pending on a request for unanimous consent to-morrow?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. BURKETT. I object to making a special order for to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. HALE. Let us go on with the deficiency appropriation bill.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the general deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 21946) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for prior years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the amendments of the committee be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the item "Department of State," on page 2, line 11, after the word "Institution," to strike out "the Commissioners of the District of Columbia;" in line 15, after the words "National Museum," to strike out "Municipal;" and in line 23, after the word "provisions," to insert "and the sum of $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in accordance with the directions of the President for the payment of expenses in connection with the suitable temporary preparation of said buildings for such purposes, is hereby appropriated," so as to make the clause read:

That the President be, and he is hereby, empowered and requested to direct the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution and the Secretary of Agriculture to place at the disposition of the International Tuberculosis Congress, under such terms and conditions as the President may authorize or prescribe, such space, not now occupied, in the new National Museum and Agricultural buildings, respectively, as may be needed to properly provide for the meeting of such International Tuberculosis Congress, including exhibits, to be held in September and October of the present year, and the use of said buildings for such purposes is hereby authorized; and permanent occupancy of such buildings, respectively, shall be postponed in so far as may be necessary to carry out the foregoing provisions; and the sum of $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in accordance with the directions of the President for the payment of expenses in connection with the suitable temporary preparation of said buildings for such purposes, is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 3, to insert:

To pay to the owners of the Norwegian steamship Nicaragua in full for compensation for damage to said owners by reason of the rescue of an American citizen, John McCafferty, and the consequent quarantine of said ship at Mobile, Ala., in the year 1894, $4,926.67.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in item "Treasury Department," on page 3, after line 19, to insert:

Office of the Auditor for the Navy Department: For the following additional force in the office of the Auditor for the Navy Department for the balance of the fiscal year 1908, namely: Two clerks of class 4; two clerks of class 3; two clerks of class 2; in all, $800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 3, to insert:

For rent of the third and fourth floors of the Union Building, located on G street, between Sixth and Seventh streets NW., Washington, D. C., including light, heat, janitor, and elevator service, and repairs, for offices of Auditor for the Interior Department, for the fiscal year 1909, $13,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 9, to insert:

For shelving and transferring records, furniture, and files from the Treasury building, including the personal services of laborers and skilled mechanics in connection therewith, for the fiscal year 1909, $10,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 22, to insert:

Payment to Walter Hunnewell, administrator of Samuel Welles: The sum of $5,999.22, heretofore appropriated to be paid to H. Hollis Hunnewell, administrator of Samuel Welles, in the act entitled "An act for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the 'Bowman Act,' and for other purposes," approved May 27, 1902 (p. 232, vol. 32, U. S. Stat. L.), be now paid to Walter Hunnewell, as administrator of Samuel Welles: Provided, however, That the same shall not be paid until the Court of Claims shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury that the administrator, Walter Hunnewell, represents the next of kin of said Samuel Welles, on whose estate he has administered, and the court which granted the administration to the said administrator shall certify that he has given adequate security for the legal disbursement of the sum herein appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public buildings," on page 13, line 6, before the word "cents," to strike out "thirty-five" and to insert "fifty-five," so as to make the clause read:

The accounting officers of the Treasury are directed to credit in the accounts of Thomas J. Hobbs, late disbursing clerk of the Treasury Department, the sum of $131.55 standing against him on the books of the Treasury Department under the appropriation "Plans for public buildings, 1908."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Under the Smithsonian Institution," at the top of page 14, to insert:

Washington Statue: For the transfer of the marble statue of Washington, by Greenough, from the plaza in front of the Capitol to the Smithsonian Institution, under the direction of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution and the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, including the construction of a foundation and a marble base, $5,000.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether this item with reference to moving the statue of Washington was not carried in another bill. I have a recollection that we had it up in some other bill.

Mr. HALE. That bill contained no appropriation to carry it out. This money is needed for a base and for the statue when removed.

Mr. BURKETT. I thought the subject had been covered somewhere.

Mr. HALE. Yes; but no appropriation was made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item "District of Columbia—Contingent expenses," on page 23, line 22, to increase the appropriation for an additional amount required for provisions, fuel, forage, harness, and vehicles and repairs to same, etc., at the Washington Asylum from $6,000 to $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 25, after the word "cents," to insert "and for additional judgments amounting to $96.95, in all, $20,945.85," so as to make the clause read:

Judgments: For payment of the judgments, including costs, against the District of Columbia, set forth in House Document No. 880, of this session, $20,848.90 and for additional judgments amounting to $96.95, in all, $20,945.85, together with a further sum sufficient to pay the interest, at not exceeding 4 per cent, on said judgments, as provided by law, from the date the same became due until the date of payment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 15, to insert:

Reimbursement of Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company: For reimbursement of the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company for the cost of maintenance of the Long Bridge from February 12, 1906, to December 18, 1906, $6,418.16.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Maine in charge of the bill something with reference to that item. I have had it called to my attention somewhere else, but I consulted the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia [Mr. GALLINGER], and we could not recall that the matter had been before that committee. If the Senator from Maine has any information in regard to the subject, I should be glad to have it.

Mr. HALE. I have a memorandum before me in regard to it which states:

The Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company, at its own cost, although it had discontinued the use of the bridge on August 28, 1901, maintained and operated the same from the time it should have been removed, namely, February 12, 1905, to February 12, 1906, for the reason that during this period it was receiving rental from the Washington, Alexandria and Mount Vernon Railroad Company, which rental would be an offset against the cost of maintenance and operation. The Washington, Alexandria and Mount Vernon Railroad stopped running over the bridge February 11, 1906, and the rental ceased. The Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company then proposed to remove the bridge in accordance with the provisions of the act to which I have referred.

At a conference between Mr. Macfarland, president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, Mr. Babcock, chairman of the House District Committee, and Col. John Cassels, acting for the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company, it was agreed that if the bridge was not removed, the cost of operation and maintenance until the new highway bridge could be utilized should be defrayed by the District government.

I have the items here under which the agreement was made, and it is on that basis that the appropriation has been put into the bill. The items that make up the cost are given, but the committee did not examine into them at all, taking this statement for them. That is all the committee has upon the subject.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator, the committee have no evidence, nothing further with reference to that agreement which was entered into, than the statement which has been furnished?

Mr. HALE. We have the items as to what the expenditures are for maintaining the bridge, amounting to the sum named.

Mr. BURKETT. I recall, of course, as the Senator does, when we built these bridges there. It seems rather an unusual item, and it is almost two years old now. It really ought to be presented in the nature of a claim, I think.

Mr. HALE. No; it is in the regular estimates of the Department, who have been over the whole matter and estimated for it as a deficiency.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the item "Military establishment—Miscellaneous," on page 29, after line 23, to insert:

The accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to allow the sum of $321.67 in the accounts of Maj. G. S. Bingham, Quartermaster's Department, on account of charges paid for the storage of baggage of officers on duty with the forces in military occupation of the island of Cuba during the interval between their return to New York on May 20, 1902, and their subsequent assignment to stations in the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 8, to insert:

The proper accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to credit the following-named officers with the sums set opposite their respective names in the settlement of their accounts for furniture purchased by them by authority of the Secretary of War for public buildings at posts, including expenditures for the equipment of messes for bachelor officers:

Capt. Charles C. Ballou, Twelfth Infantry, assistant quartermaster, Presidio of Monterey, Cal., $98.61.

Capt. Leon S. Roudiez, assistant quartermaster, Fort Riley, Kans., $784.83.

Capt. George C. Barnhardt, Fort Ethan Allen, Vt., $1,635.62.

Lieut. William J. Davis, Eighth Infantry, assistant quartermaster, Fort Slocum, N. Y., $1,563.57.

Lieut. Willis C. Metcalf, Coast Artillery Corps, Fort Washington, Md., $206.77.

SEC. 2. After June 30, 1908, where the salary or compensation of any officer, agent, clerk, or employee in the service of the United States is at an annual or monthly rate the following rules shall be followed in computing the amount due: An annual salary or compensation shall be divided into twelve equal installments, one of which shall be the pay for each calendar month; and in making payment for a fractional part of any calendar month there shall be paid such proportion of one of such installments, or of the amount of the monthly salary or compensation, as the number of days in the fractional part of that month bears to the actual number of days in that month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, after line 21, to strike out:

SEC. 3. Hereafter all supplies of fuel, ice, stationery, and other miscellaneous supplies for the Executive Departments and other Government establishments in Washington, when the public exigencies do not require the immediate delivery of the article, shall be advertised and contracted for by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, instead of by the several Departments and establishments, upon such days as he may designate. There shall be a general supply committee in lieu of the board provided for in section 3709 of the Revised Statutes as amended, composed of officers, one from each such Department and other Government establishment in Washington, designated by the head thereof, the duties of which committee shall be to make, under the direction of the said Secretary, an annual schedule of required miscellaneous supplies, to standardize such supplies, eliminating all unnecessary grades and varieties, and to aid said Secretary in soliciting bids based upon formulas and specifications drawn up by such experts in the service of the Government as the committee may see fit to call upon, who shall render whatever assistance they may require. The committee shall aid said Secretary in securing the proper fulfillment of the contracts for such supplies, for which purpose the said Secretary shall prescribe, and all Departments comply with, rules providing for such examination and tests of the articles received as may be necessary for such purpose; in making additions to the said schedule; in opening and considering the bids, and shall perform such other similar duties as he may assign to them: Provided, That the articles intended to be purchased in this manner are those in common use by or suitable to the ordinary needs of two or more such Departments or establishments; but the said Secretary shall have discretion to amend the annual common supply schedule from time to time as to any articles that, in his judgment, can as well be thus purchased. In all cases only one bond for the proper performance of each contract shall be required, notwithstanding that supplies for more than one Department or Government establishment are included in such contract. Every purchase or drawing of such supplies from the contractor shall be immediately reported to said committee. No disbursing officer shall be a member of such committee. No Department or establishment shall purchase or draw supplies from the common schedule through more than one office or bureau, except in case of detached bureaus or offices having field or outlying service, which may purchase directly from the contractor with the permission of the head of their Department or establishment: And provided further, That telephone service, electric light and power service purchased or contracted for from companies or individuals shall be so obtained by him. All laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this section are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item "Claims allowed by the Auditor for the Navy Department," on page 79, after line 24, to strike out:

For payment of certain claims approved by the Auditor of the War Department for damages done to private property by the firing of heavy guns at Forts Heath and Banks, Winthrop, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts, $1,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, after line 14, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. That for the payment of the following claims, certified to be due by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, and under appropriations heretofore treated as permanent, being for the service of the fiscal year 1905 and prior years, unless otherwise stated, and which have been certified to Congress under section 2 of the act of July 7, 1884, as fully set forth in Senate Document No. 407, reported to Congress at its present session, there is appropriated as follows:

For prosecution of Indians in Arizona, act of March 4, 1907 (Apache County), $3,626.06.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. NELSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of line 12, on page 64.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 64, after line 12, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay for extra services rendered in transferring, rearranging, remarking, cleaning, and reeling the papers of the Senate: To Bayard C. Ryder, $700; Ansel Wold, $400; R. R. Dutton, $300; George Payne, $50; Christopher Woodlen, $50.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order that the amendment is not recommended by any standing committee of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will inquire if that is so?

Mr. NELSON. I think it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 48, after line 23, it is proposed to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to continue negotiations for the establishment of international methods of testing petroleum and for making the necessary tests, $5,000.

Mr. HALE. I will ask if that is recommended by any standing committee?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Maine inquires if that is recommended by any standing committee. I do not know that it is necessary for it to be recommended by a standing committee. It is a matter that the Senate is familiar with. There was in the last bill a small appropriation for this purpose. It is a very important matter, as it deals with an international conference on this great question. Other governments have discriminated against our Government in this important matter, and it is of exceeding consequence that we should have a representative to protect the interests of the United States. That is all there is to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 48, after line 8.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 48, after line 8, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the sum of $215,393.28 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to pay the unsettled expenses of the constitutional convention of Oklahoma and for the elections held thereunder; said deficit to be paid upon vouchers approved by the governor and secretary of state of the State of Oklahoma, in such manner and form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order that the amendment proposes general legislation.

Mr. OWEN. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this has been reported by one of the standing committees of the Senate—the Committee on Territories—it has been acted on by the Senate itself, and the Committee on Appropriations last year reported on this bill $135,000 for this purpose and it passed the Senate. I call attention to the fact that in the case of Wyoming the appropriations were made for the expenses of the constitutional convention and for the elections held thereof and thereunder; that in the case of Utah the funds were appropriated in like manner for paying the expenses of the constitutional convention and for elections held thereof and thereunder. So we have the precedents of Congress; and the sum proposed to be appropriated for Oklahoma for this purpose is not an excessive amount, judged by the precedents, because in Wyoming the sum for holding the convention amounted to 50 cents per capita, and on that basis for Oklahoma it would amount to $720,000. I think, therefore, the Senate ought to follow the precedents, ought to follow the report of the Committee on Territories, ought to follow the action of the Committee on Appropriations of last year, and ought to follow the action of the Senate of last year.

I hope the Senator from Maine will not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. HALE. The committee has had no opportunity to examine this matter, and I must insist upon the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. I propose the amendment I send to the desk, to be inserted on page 5, after line 2.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

TRANSPORTATION OF STANDARD SILVER DOLLARS.

For transportation of standard silver dollars, by registered mail or otherwise, $10,000; and in expending this sum the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to transport from the Treasury or subtreasuries, free of charge, standard silver dollars, to June 30, 1908, when requested to do so: Provided, That an equal amount in coin or currency shall have been deposited in the Treasury or such subtreasuries by the applicant or applicants; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress the cost arising under this appropriation.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order that the amendment proposes general legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment proposes general legislation, and therefore is in contravention of paragraph 3 of Rule XVI. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HALE. To establish a basis of appropriations for public buildings, I report from the committee the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, after line 22, under "Public buildings," it is proposed to insert:

For acquisition of sites and additions to sites for and to begin the construction of public buildings and the extension of public buildings during the first session of the Sixtieth Congress, so much thereof as may be necessary is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I think that is all.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

HITCHMAN COAL AND COKE COMPANY V. JOHN MITCHELL.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, during my absence from the Senate I understand the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] brought up the case in regard to Judge Dayton's restraining order.

I desire to read the following, in order that it may go into the Record:

Hon. C. E. LITTLEFIELD,
Washington, D. C.

WHEELING, W. VA., April 23, 1908.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your favor of March 28, 1908, we appeared in the United States circuit court as counsel for the defendants in the case of National Telephone Company v. Keat et al. No contempt proceedings grew out of the injunction case. We have no criticism whatever to make of the action of Judge Dayton in awarding the restraining order or in granting the preliminary injunction. Our clients directed us to discontinue their defense, and no motion to dissolve or to modify was ever made. The injunction was made permanent as to our clients.

We took no part in the injunction suit brought by the Hitchman Coal Company.

Very truly, yours,

DOVENER & FISKEISEN.

It is the same case referred to by the Senator from Texas.

EFFICIENCY OF THE MILITIA.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I desire to call up the bill (S. 4316) to further amend the act entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes," approved January 21, 1903.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been read. The amendments will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 4, after line 15, to insert "through the governor of the respective State or Territory, or through the commanding general of the militia of the District of Columbia, from which

State, Territory, or District such troops may be called," so as to read:

SEC. 4. That whenever the United States is invaded or in danger of invasion from any foreign nation, or of rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, or the President is unable with the regular forces at his command to execute the laws of the Union, it shall be lawful for the President to call forth such number of the militia of the State or of the States or Territories or of the District of Columbia as he may deem necessary to repel such invasion, suppress such rebellion, or to enable him to execute such laws, and to issue his orders for that purpose, through the governor of the respective State or Territory, or through the commanding general of the militia of the District of Columbia, from which State, Territory, or District such troops may be called, to such officers of the militia as he may think proper.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 4, after the word "procure," to insert "by purchase or manufacture," so as to read:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to procure, by purchase or manufacture, and issue from time to time to the organized militia.

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 14, after the words "and the," to strike out "governor thereof" and insert "governors of the States and Territories and the commanding general of the militia of the District of Columbia;" and in line 17, before the word "returns," to strike out "his" and insert "their," so as to read:

When the organized militia is uniformed as above required, the Secretary of War is authorized to fix an annual clothing allowance to each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia for each enlisted man of the organized militia thereof, and thereafter issues of clothing to such States, Territories, and the District of Columbia shall be in accordance with such allowance, and the governors of the States and Territories and the commanding general of the militia of the District of Columbia shall be authorized to drop from their returns each year as expended clothing corresponding in value to such allowance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of section 8 the following:

Provided, That the sum expended in the execution of the purchases and issues provided for in this section shall not exceed the sum of $2,000,000 in any fiscal year: Provided also, That the Secretary of War shall annually submit to Congress a report of expenditures made by him in the execution of the requirements of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 23, after the word "authorized," to insert "together with the necessary clerical and office expenses of the division of militia affairs in the office of the Secretary of War;" and on page 13, after the word "Columbia," in line 5, to insert: "and a list of such expenses shall be submitted to Congress annually by the Secretary of War in connection with his annual report," so as to read:

The actual and necessary traveling expenses of the members of the board, together with a per diem to be established by the Secretary of War, shall be paid to the members of the board. The expenses herein authorized, together with the necessary clerical and office expenses of the division of militia affairs in the office of the Secretary of War, shall constitute a charge against the whole sum annually appropriated under section 1661, Revised Statutes, as amended, and shall be paid therefrom, and not from the allotment duly apportioned to any particular State, Territory, or the District of Columbia; and a list of such expenses shall be submitted to Congress annually by the Secretary of War in connection with his annual report.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAY OF CAPITOL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. ALLISON. From the Committee on Appropriations I report a joint resolution, which I should be glad to have considered.

The joint resolution (S. R. 93) to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of May, 1908, on the day of adjournment of the present session of Congress was read the first time by its title and the second time at length as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and instructed to pay all officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of May, 1908, on the day of adjournment of the present session of Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. For the convenience of the employees of the Senate and House, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21875) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendments, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment to the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Permanent establishment," on page 2, line 3, before the word "thousand," to insert "and sixty," so as to read:

For pay of cadets, $360,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 4, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That section 4 of an act approved June 6, 1900, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes," be amended to read as follows:

The corps of cadets shall consist of one from each Congressional district, one from each Territory, one from the District of Columbia, four from each State at large, and forty from the United States at large. They shall be appointed by the President, and shall, with the exception of the forty cadets appointed from the United States at large, be actual or legal residents of the Congressional or Territorial districts, or of the District of Columbia, or of the States, respectively, from which they are appointed: And provided further, That hereafter cadets shall be entitled to rations, or commutation therefor, as hitherto allowed under the act approved June 28, 1902, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I want to offer an amendment, but I desire to find out first the point in the bill at which it is to be offered, because, as the Senator knows, we have no printed copies of the bill as proposed to be amended. I was about to ask the Chair to state the line where the last amendment which has been acted upon was offered.

Mr. SCOTT. I will ask the Senator from Georgia to allow the bill to be read through, and I will accept his suggestion after the bill has been read for committee amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. BACON. I withdraw it on the suggestion of the Senator from West Virginia and will wait until the committee amendments shall have been acted upon.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 3, line 2, to increase the total appropriation for the permanent establishment from $331,800 to $391,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 13, to increase the appropriation for pay of one professor of ordnance and science of gunnery from $1,000 to $1,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 13, to strike out:

"That the Secretary of War may detail an officer of the Medical Corps of the Army to the Military Academy as professor to teach military hygiene." Provided such officer receives no extra compensation therefor.

And insert:

For pay of one professor of military hygiene (lieutenant-colonel), in addition to pay as major, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 3, to insert:

For pay of one professor of English and history, to be selected and appointed by the Secretary of War, and to be on the same basis of rank, pay, and allowances as the other professors of the Military Academy, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, in line 10, before the word "artillery," to strike out "cavalry," and in line 11, before the word "engineering," to insert "military," so as to make the clause read:

Twelve enlisted musicians, at $40 per month, $5,760.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 23, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "thirty," and in line 25, before the word "dollars," to strike out "four thousand six hundred and eight" and insert "five thousand seven hundred and sixty," so as to make the clause read:

Sixteen enlisted musicians, at $30 per month, $5,760.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 8, after the word "sergeant," to strike out "with pay of first-class musicians," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of field musicians: One sergeant, $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 19, to insert:

Hereafter the monthly pay during the first enlistment of enlisted men of the band and field musicians of the United States Military Academy shall be as hereinbefore stated, and the continuous-service pay of all grades shall be the same as provided in the act approved May 11, 1908, entitled "An act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909:" Provided, That the band or members thereof and the field musicians of the Military Academy shall not receive remuneration for furnishing music outside the limits of the military reservation when the furnishing of such music places them in competition with local civilian musicians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 17, to increase the appropriation for additional pay for length of service from $14,784 to $17,172.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 9, before the word "corporals," to strike out "six" and insert "eight," and in line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one thousand five hundred and twelve" and insert "two thousand and sixteen," so as to make the clause read:

Eight corporals, $2,016.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 7, to insert:

For extra pay of one enlisted man employed in the department of modern languages, at 50 cents per day, $156.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 10, to insert:

For extra pay of one sergeant of engineers, acting first sergeant, $108.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 12, to insert:

For extra pay of two cooks of engineers, at $12 per month each, $288.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 19, after the word "and," to strike out "$78,259.87" and insert "$84,729.37," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for pay of Military Academy Band, field musicians, general Army service, cavalry detachment, artillery detachment, enlisted men on detached service, and extra pay of enlisted men on special duty at the Military Academy, $184,729.37.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Pay of civilians," on page 18, after line 11, to strike out:

For pay of engineer of steam, electric, and refrigerating apparatus for the cadets' mess, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 4, to increase the appropriation for pay of one chief engineer of power plant from $2,000 to $2,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 5, before the word "engineers," to strike out "four" and insert "three," and in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "four thousand" and insert "three thousand six hundred," so as to make the clause read:

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 14, to increase the total pay for the Military Academy, from $609,639.87 to $680,449.37.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 15, to insert:

All the money hereinbefore appropriated for pay of the Military Academy shall be disbursed and accounted for by officers of the Pay Department as pay of the Military Academy, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 20, to strike out:

Provided, That section 1427 of the Revised Statutes be, and it is hereby, amended so as to read as follows: That hereafter the Board of Visitors to the Military Academy shall consist of the members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively, who shall constitute a joint committee which shall annually visit the Military Academy between the 1st day of November and the 1st day of March of the ensuing year, the actual expenses of such committee to be paid out of the contingent fund of each House proportionately: Provided, That the actual expenses for travel shall only be paid from Washington to West Point and return: Provided further, That so much of sections 1328 and 1329 as is inconsistent with the provisions of this act is hereby repealed.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Provided, That hereafter the Board of Visitors to the Military Academy shall consist of four members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate and five members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the respective chairmen thereof, and three persons to be appointed by the President, who shall annually visit the Military Academy on such date as may be fixed by the chairman of the said committees; and the President, the Superintendent of the academy, and the members of the Board of Visitors shall be notified of such date by the chairman of the said committees, acting jointly, at least thirty days before the meeting. The expenses of the Board shall be their actual expenses while engaged upon their duties as members of said Board, and their actual expenses for travel by the shortest mail routes: Provided further, That so much of sections 1328 and 1329, Revised Statutes of the United States, as is inconsistent with the provisions of this act is hereby repealed.

For expenses of the members of the Board of Visitors and for pay and expenses of stenographer and clerk for the Board, $3,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, to increase the appropriation for gas pipes, gas and electric fixtures, electric lamps, telephone and lighting supplies, etc., at the Military Academy, from $2,500 to $6,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 11, to reduce the appropriation for fuel for cadets' mess hall, shops, and laundry from $14,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 2, to insert:

For the preparation of topographical relief models, $100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 14, to increase the total appropriation for current and ordinary expenses, Military Academy, from $115,268 to $118,868.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous items and incidental expenses," on page 28, line 22, before the word "wicking," to strike out "and;" and in the same line, before the word "for," to insert "and electric lamps and supplies," so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 20, to insert:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to permit not exceeding seven Filipinos, to be designated by the Philippine Commission, to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point: Provided, That the Filipinos undergoing instruction, as herein authorized, shall receive the same pay, allowances, and emoluments as are authorized by law for cadets at the Military Academy appointed from the United States, to be paid out of the same appropriations: And provided further, That said Filipinos undergoing instruction on graduation shall be eligible only to commissions in the Philippine Scouts. And the provisions of section 1321, Revised Statutes, are modified in the case of the Filipinos undergoing instruction, so as to require them to engage to serve for eight years, unless sooner discharged, in the Philippine Scouts.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD certain remarks of William J. Bryan on the subject of imperialism.

Mr. SCOTT. I object.

Mr. KEAN. Let it be published as a separate document.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator can have it published as a document, but I hope it will not go in the RECORD.

Mr. NEWLANDS. We have an amendment here regarding the Filipinos. The question of imperialism, therefore, becomes a legitimate matter of discussion. I wish, as preliminary to what I shall say, to have the Secretary read the remarks of William J. Bryan upon this subject.

Mr. SCOTT. I suggest to the Senator from Nevada to have it put in the RECORD and not delay the passage of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the insertion of the remarks without reading?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will not object if there is no objection to my putting in the RECORD an article from the New York World treating of Mr. William J. Bryan from a Democratic standpoint. I ask unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will inquire whether I did not have the floor when the Senator from New Hampshire interrupted me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada did not have the floor. The Chair understands that his request was granted.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; it was not granted, except upon condition that the article which I sent to the desk should likewise be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada asks that the remarks mentioned by him shall be inserted in the RECORD without reading. The Senator from New Hampshire asks, if this consent is granted, that then the communication submitted by him shall also be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. WARREN. May I interrupt the Senator from New Hampshire?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to suggest that the request that these matters go in the RECORD may delay the consideration of the bill, and in conference we want to have the debate in such shape that the RECORD will show its continuous consideration by the Senate. I therefore suggest that if the papers are to be inserted they follow the passage of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the insertion of the two communications in the RECORD following the close of the consideration of the pending bill?

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator from New Hampshire what is the nature of the publication he submits?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I object to both.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I ask unanimous consent that the paper I send to the desk be printed as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that the paper submitted by him be printed as a document. Is there objection?

Mr. CULBERSON. No person, so far as I am advised except the Senator from New Hampshire, knows what the paper is.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is an article from the New York World, a Democratic newspaper, treating of Mr. William J. Bryan as a Democratic candidate for the Presidency. It is very interesting.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, if to-day's RECORD is to be made a campaign book, I want to insert an extract from the testimony of Hon. Paul Morton given before the Interstate Commerce Commission, in which he admits that his railroad had been granting rebates; that he knew it was going on; that it was done under his department, and that it amounted to between half a million and a million dollars during the year of which he was speaking.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma asks that the communication submitted by him be printed in the RECORD without reading. Is there objection?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I withdraw my objection to all of them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The objection is withdrawn. The Chair will again put the request of the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. SCOTT. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. I certainly object to this political debate being injected into the consideration of the appropriation bill. I am trying in this bill to provide appropriations to take care of the young men whom Senators and Members have appointed to West Point, so that they may become in the future commanding officers of our Army. As I understand it, there is no politics in the Army. Consequently I object most seriously to the insertion of these papers, and I hope the Senators who are trying to make political capital out of it will refrain until the bill is passed. Then let the matter follow this bill, but I hope it will not be injected into the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. GALLINGER. They are to follow the bill, I will say to the Senator from West Virginia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made by the Senator from West Virginia to the insertion of any of the articles in the RECORD. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 36, after line 10, to insert:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to permit Colon Eloy Alfaro, of Ecuador, to receive instruction at the Military Academy at West Point: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby, and that the said Colon Eloy Alfaro shall agree to comply with all regulations for the police and discipline of the academy, to be studious, and to give his utmost efforts to accomplish the courses in the various departments of instruction: And provided further, That in the case of the said Colon Eloy Alfaro the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes shall be suspended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 22, to insert: Officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps on the retired list whose rank has been, or shall hereafter be, advanced by operation of or in accordance with law shall be entitled to and shall receive commissions in accordance with such advanced rank.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I move an amendment on page 4 of the bill, lines 16 and 17. I move to strike out the three words "as second lieutenant," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "of his grade."

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BACON. I will.

Mr. WARREN. The intent of the Senator is evidently to put in place of second lieutenant a captain. If that is true, the Senator wants to change the $700 to $600.

Mr. BACON. Very well. Let it be "six," then, instead of "seven." That is the rank of the officer and has been for the last ten years.

Mr. SCOTT. I will accept the amendment as the amendment of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, lines 16 and 17, strike out the words "as second lieutenant" and insert the words "of his grade;" and in line 17, before the word "hundred," strike out "seven" and insert "six," so as to read:

For pay of one adjutant, in addition to pay of his grade, $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. CULBERSON. Before the passage of the bill, in order that the situation may be cleared up as far as I may be able to contribute to that end, I desire to ask if any of the matters suggested to be inserted in the RECORD of a quasi political nature were inserted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They were not inserted, objection having been made.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to say that if they had been inserted I intended to offer an article in the New York World entitled "Deal with the Steel Trust," and have it printed also.

The bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 21986) to enable any State to cooperate with any other State, or States, or with the United States, for the conservation of the navigability of navigable rivers, and to provide for the appointment of a commission, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 16743) for the removal of the restriction on alienation of the lands of allottees of the Quapaw Agency, Okla., and the sale of all tribal lands, school, agency, or other buildings on any of the reservations within the jurisdiction of such agency, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

S. 4639. An act to provide for participation by the United States in an international exposition to be held at Tokyo, Japan, in 1912;

H. R. 16882. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes;

H. R. 17874. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and other wars and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 21884. An act granting an annuity to Jennie Carroll and to Mabel H. Lazear.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 21986. An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the conservation of the navigability of navigable rivers, and to provide for the appointment of a commission, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

EMPLOYMENT OF CHILD LABOR IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. DOLLIVER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4512) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same as amended, so that it will read as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That no child under fourteen years of age shall be employed or permitted to work in the District of Columbia in any factory, workshop, mercantile establishment, store, business office, telegraph or telephone office, restaurant, hotel, apartment house, club, theater, bowling alley, laundry, boot-black stand, or in the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages. No such child shall be employed in any work performed for wages or other compensation, to whomsoever payable, during the hours when the public schools of the District of Columbia are in session, nor before the hour of six o'clock in the morning or after the hour of seven o'clock in the evening: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to children employed in the service of the Senate: And provided further, That the judge of the juvenile court of said District may, upon the application of the parent, guardian, or next friend of said child, issue a permit for the employment of any child between the ages of twelve and fourteen years at any occupation or employment not in his judgment dangerous or injurious to the health or morals of such child, upon evidence satisfactory to him that the labor of such child is necessary for its support or for the assistance of a disabled, ill, or invalid father or mother, or for the support, in whole or in part, of a younger brother or sister or a widowed mother. Such permits shall be issued for a definite time, but they shall be revocable at the discretion of the judge by whom they are issued or by his successor in office. Hearings for granting and revoking permits shall be held upon such notice and under such rules and regulations as the judge of said court shall prescribe.

"Sec. 2. That no child under sixteen years of age shall be employed or permitted to work in the District of Columbia in any of the establishments named in section one, unless the person or corporation employing him procures and keeps on file and accessible to the inspectors authorized by this act and the truant officers of the District of Columbia an age and schooling certificate, and keeps two complete lists of all such children employed therein, one on file and one conspicuously posted near the principal entrance of the building in which such children are employed.

"Sec. 3. That an age and schooling certificate shall be approved only by the superintendent of public schools, or by a person authorized by him in writing, who shall have authority to administer the oath provided for therein, but no fee shall be charged therefor.

"Sec. 4. That no age and schooling certificate shall be approved unless satisfactory evidence is furnished by duly attested transcript of the certificate of birth or baptism of such child, or other religious record, or the register of birth or the affidavit of the parent or guardian or custodian of a child, which affidavit shall be required, however, only in case such last-mentioned transcript of the certificate of birth be not procured and filed, showing the place and date of birth of such child, which affidavit must be taken before the officer issuing the employment certificate, who is hereby authorized and required to administer such oath, and who shall not demand or receive a fee therefor.

"Sec. 5. That the age and schooling certificate of a child under 16 years of age shall be in the following form:

"AGE AND SCHOOLING CERTIFICATE.

"This certifies that I am the (father, mother, guardian, or custodian) of (name of child) ———, and that (he or she) was born at (name of town or city) ———, in the county (name of county, if known) ——— and State (or country) ———, on the (day and year of birth) ———, and is now (number of years and months) ——— old.

"Signature of (father, mother, guardian, or custodian).

"(Date.)

"There personally appeared before me the above-named (name of person signing) ——— and made oath that the foregoing certificate by (him or her) signed is true to the best of (his or her) knowledge and belief. I hereby approve the foregoing certificate of (name of child) ———; complexion (fair or dark), ———; hair (color), ———; having no sufficient reason to doubt that (he or she) is of the age therein certified, I hereby certify that (he or she) can read at sight and can write legibly simple sentences in the English language, and that (he or she) has reached the normal development of a child of (his or her) age, and is in sound health and is physically able to perform the work which (he or she) intends to do, and that (he or she) has regularly attended the public schools, or a school equivalent thereto, for not less than one hundred and thirty days during the school year previous to applying for such school record, or during the year previous to applying for such school record, and has received during such period instruction in reading, spelling, writing, and arithmetic.

"This certificate belongs to (name of child in whose behalf it is drawn) ——— and is to be surrendered to (him or her) whenever (he or she) leaves the service of the corporation or employer holding the same, but if not claimed by said child within thirty days from such time it shall be returned to the superintendent of schools.

"(Signature of person authorized to approve and sign, with official character of authority.)

"A duplicate of each age and schooling certificate shall be filled out and kept on file by the superintendent of public schools. Any explanatory matter may be printed with such certificate, in the discretion of said superintendent: Provided, That in exceptional cases the judge of the juvenile court, upon the recommendation of the superintendent of public schools or the person authorized to act for him, may, in writing, waive the necessity of the schooling certificate provided for in this act, and in such cases the age certificate shall entitle the holder to be employed without a violation of this act.

"Sec. 6. That whoever employs a child or permits a child to be employed in violation of sections one, two, eight, or nine of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and for such offense be fined not more than fifty dollars; and whoever continues to employ any child in violation of any of said sections of this act, after being notified by an inspector authorized by this act, or a truant officer of the District of Columbia, shall for every day thereafter that such employment continues be fined not more than twenty dollars. A failure to produce to an inspector authorized by this act, or a truant officer of the District of Columbia, any age or schooling certificate or list required by this act shall be prima facie evidence of illegal employment of any person whose age and schooling certificate is not produced or whose name is not listed. Any corporation or employer retaining any age and schooling certificate in violation of section five of this act shall be fined not more than twenty dollars. Every person authorized to sign the certificate prescribed by section five of this act who knowingly certifies to any materially false statement therein shall be fined not more than fifty dollars.

"Sec. 7. That the inspectors authorized by this act and the truant officers of the District of Columbia shall visit the establishments named in section one and ascertain whether any minors are employed therein contrary to the provisions of this act, and they shall report any cases of such illegal employment to the superintendent of public schools and the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia. The inspectors authorized by this act and the truant officers of the District of Columbia shall require that the age and schooling certificates and lists provided for in this act of minors employed in the establishments named in section one shall be produced for their inspection.

"SEC. 8. That no minor under sixteen years of age shall be employed, permitted, or suffered to work in any of the establishments named in section one more than eight hours in any one day, or before the hour of six o'clock a. m., or after the hour of seven o'clock p. m., and in no case shall the number of hours exceed forty-eight in a week.

"SEC. 9. That every employer shall post in a conspicuous place in every room where such persons are employed a printed notice, stating the number of hours required of them on each day of the week, the hours of commencing and stopping work, and the hours when the time or times allowed for dinner or for other meals begin and end. The printed form of such notice shall be furnished by the inspectors authorized by this act and the truant officers of the District of Columbia, and the employment of any such person for a longer time in any day than that so stated shall be deemed a violation of this section.

"SEC. 10. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to appoint two inspectors to carry out the purposes of this act, at a compensation not exceeding one thousand two hundred dollars each per annum.

"SEC. 11. That no male child under 10, and no girl under 16 years of age shall exercise the trade of bootblackening, or sell or expose or offer for sale any newspapers, magazines, periodicals, or goods, wares, or merchandise of any description whatsoever, upon the streets, roads, or highways, or in any public place within the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 12. That from and after July 1, 1908, no male child under 16 years shall exercise the trade of bootblackening or sell or expose or offer for sale any newspapers, magazines, periodicals or goods, wares or merchandise of any description whatsoever upon the streets, roads, or highways, or in any public place within the District of Columbia unless a permit and badge as hereinafter provided shall have been issued to him by the superintendent of public schools of the District of Columbia, or by a person authorized by him in writing for that purpose upon the application of the parent, guardian, or other person having the custody of the child desiring such permit and badge, or in case said child has no parent, guardian, or custodian, then on the application of his next friend, being an adult.

"SEC. 13. That such permit and badge shall be issued free of charge to the applicant, but shall not be issued until an age and schooling certificate shall have been issued as provided in this act.

"SEC. 14. Such permit shall state the date and place of birth of the child, the name and address of its parent, guardian, custodian, or next friend, as the case may be, and describe the color of hair and eyes, the height and weight, and any distinguishing facial mark of such child, and shall further state that the age and schooling certificate has been duly examined and filed, and that the child named in such permit has appeared before the officer issuing the permit. The badge furnished by the officer issuing the permit shall bear on its face a number corresponding to the number of the permit and the name of the child. Every such permit, and every such badge on its reverse side, shall be signed in the presence of the officer issuing the same by the child in whose name it is issued. The badge provided for herein shall be worn conspicuously at all times by such child while so working, and all such permits and badges shall expire annually on the first day of January. The color of the badge shall be changed each year. No child to whom such permit and badge are issued shall transfer the same to any other person, nor be engaged in the District of Columbia in any of the trades or occupations mentioned in this section without having conspicuously upon his person such badge, and he shall exhibit the same upon demand to any police or truant officer or to the inspectors in this act provided for.

"SEC. 15. That no child to whom a permit and badge are issued as provided for in the preceding sections shall sell or expose or offer for sale any newspapers, magazines, or periodicals or goods, wares, or merchandise of any description whatever after ten o'clock in the evening or before six o'clock in the morning.

"SEC. 16. That nothing in this act contained shall apply to the employment of any child in a theatrical exhibition, provided the written consent of one of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia is first obtained. Such consent shall specify the name of the child, its age, the names and residences of its parents or guardians, together with the place and character of the exhibition.

"SEC. 17. That the juvenile court of the District of Columbia is hereby given jurisdiction in all cases arising under this act."

And the House concurs in said Senate amendments to the House amendment.

J. P. DOLLIVER,

BOIES PENROSE,

JNO. W. DANIEL,

J. VAN VECHTEN OLCOTT,

E. L. TAYLOR, Jr.,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the report be printed and lie on the table until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NELSON subsequently said: Mr. President, I have had a brief opportunity of examining the child-labor bill; and while it does not come up to what I think it ought to be, yet it is a much better bill than I thought it would be. Therefore I withdraw my objection and consent to the consideration of the report at this time.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I will state briefly that the bill agreed upon by the conferees reserves the important amendments which were adopted by the Senate, particularly the amendment submitted by the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] and the amendment presented from the other side of the Chamber in respect to emergencies which sometimes warrant the waiving of schooling certificates. It changes the hour at which newsboys may begin the delivery of newspapers from 8 o'clock to 6 o'clock, it preserves the rights of the pages of the Senate in their present employment, and it involves the House amendment relative to the employment of children of tender years upon the streets, which is an exact copy, I am informed, of the statute of New York.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

REPORT ON DISEASES OF CATTLE.

Mr. DANIEL. The members of the Committee on Printing are absent, and I have been requested by them in their behalf to submit a favorable report on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 176) providing for the printing of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle. It provides for the publication of 100,000 copies of this very valuable book. There is a large call for it. It is now out of print. I ask that the joint resolution may be read, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that there shall be printed and bound 100,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle, the same to be first revised and brought to date under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture; 30,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 60,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 10,000 copies for distribution by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to ask the Senator from Virginia one or two questions. What is the purpose of the distribution of this book?

Mr. KEAN. It is the same resolution that we have always passed. The Members of the Senate and House and the Department will distribute it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. To whom is the book to go ultimately? Mr. DANIEL. Ultimately to the people to whom it is sent by Senators and Representatives and the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I take it, then, it is meant for general distribution throughout the country, probably to farmers.

Mr. DANIEL. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. To inform them concerning the diseases of cattle. That being true, I wish to ask the Senator from Virginia what constitutional authority he thinks exists for the expenditure of the nation's money for this purpose?

Mr. DANIEL. Whatever authority exists, if it is not found in the Constitution—and the Senator of course knows whether it is or not, as he knows all about the Constitution.

Mr. GALLINGER. The public-welfare clause, I think, covers it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think so, too.

Mr. DANIEL. It has been the habitual practice of the Government. It is a road that has been worn in a rut by constant practice and acquiescence. Whether or not there is specific authority, expressed in so many words, the Senator can judge of as well as I can. I am satisfied to vote for it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, I am, too.

Mr. DANIEL. I would rather not argue a national child-labor question on a measure for printing a report on diseases of cattle.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think it is a rather important point, as will develop later. As a matter of principle, I desire to ask the Senator whether, if we have authority to appropriate the nation's money for the purpose of publishing and distributing a book among the farmers to instruct them on the diseases of cattle, on the same principle we would not have the authority to publish and distribute books among children to instruct them on physiology?

Mr. DANIEL. I would like to answer that question when I had longer time, but I would rather not detain the Senate in the closing hours of the session to listen to any discourse of my own on the subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have printed a portion of the Bible.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am informed by the Senator from New Hampshire that we printed a portion of the Bible.

I wish to ask a further question, because these are very important points. They do not appear to be important when we have a subject like this, but on other legislation they are made to be important. I ask the Senator whether he does not think that the question of education, whether of children or of farmers, whether upon arithmetic or upon the diseases of cattle or horses, is not one of the rights of the States.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President—

Mr. DANIEL. If I thought as the Senator does on the subject I would not take the roundabout way of getting at it by loading up all the railroad trains with freight to go by interstate commerce.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; but, as a matter of fact—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. GORE. I want to suggest to the Senator from Virginia, if he will permit me, it might be in order to have the children who are employed in factories provided with purer milk.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. My point is this: We have heard so very much for the last two years about the violation of the rights of the States by the nation, the encroachment upon their province, and so forth; and yet, when a question of this kind arises, which in principle goes to the heart of the whole question, where it is the very extreme of the exercise of national powers that ever has been claimed by anybody; where we are actually appropriating the money of the nation for the purpose of publishing and distributing among the farmers of the country literature to educate them upon the diseases of cattle; when last year we did the same thing with reference to diseases of the horse, not one word was said then or is said now about "the violation of the Constitution" or "stretching our constitutional powers," or any of those phrases that have become so familiar. Nobody sees that the rights of the States are thus being attacked. Nobody perceives any "dangerous tendency toward centralization;" and yet it goes to the ultimate and extreme of anything that anybody has ever claimed for the power of the nation under the Constitution.

When I asked the question of the Senator, neither the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] nor any other Senator who takes that view answered or will answer that there is any constitutional authority for it. From my view point, I think there is abundant constitutional authority for it; and I do not, of course, intend to obstruct this bill—not for a moment—but I merely took this occasion to call attention to the fact that, after all, when Senators want to do a thing they do not see very many specters concerning the "destruction of the rights of the States" or "the dangerous tendencies toward centralization," even when, from their view point, there is no constitutional authority whatever for it and when it is the ultimate and extreme exercise of national power.

Mr. DANIEL. I wish to say only a few words, Mr. President. This publication is in the nature of an official report from the officials of the Government at Washington upon a matter which has already been taken jurisdiction of by the Federal Government. The diseases of cattle, like the diseases of men, are things which are transmitted by wind and wave, and through all of those agencies of creation which pass State lines and go all over the country in a way that can hardly be detected. I shall not undertake now to draw the lines of differentiation on a subject that has been a matter of discussion since this Government was founded; but this is to be observed, that it invades no rights secured by either Federal or State constitutions; it does not interfere with the domestic affairs of any locality, and he who can see an equality of questions between this and the regulation of child labor by interstate commerce has a different kind of vision from myself.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did not mention the latter subject, I will say to the Senator.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18347) "making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 36, 43, 44, 45, 51, 52, 54, 60, 64, 65, 66, 67, 69, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 78, 79, 81, 82, 88, 89, 92, and 93.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 39, 40, 41, 42, 47, 48, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 61, 62, 70, 76, 77, 80, 84, 86, 87, 91, 94, 95, 96, 97, and 98; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 5, line 15, strike out the words "And provided further" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Provided;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 10, line 16, strike out the words "and fifty-one;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 10, lines 15 and 16, strike out the words "four hundred and ninety-seven" and insert in lieu thereof the words "five hundred and forty-eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 13, line 21, strike out the word "six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 14, line 13, strike out the word "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eleven;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 14, line 19, strike out the words "thirty-eight thousand six hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "thirty-seven thousand four hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 18, after the word "actual," insert the word "simultaneous;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 20, after the word "annum," add the words "and to defray the expenses of said headquarters the sum of twenty thousand dollars is hereby appropriated;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 25, after the word "national," insert the words "or State;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 25, strike out the amendment, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That section thirty-eight hundred and ninety-three of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"And the term 'indecent' within the intendment of this section shall include matter of a character tending to incite arson, murder, or assassination."

And the Senate agree to the same.

BOIES PENROSE,
J. C. BURROWS,
A. S. CLAY,

JESSE OVERSTREET,
J. J. GARDNER,
JOHN A. MOON,

Managers on the part of the House.

We agree to this report except action on Senate amendments 43, 44, 51, 76, and 77, the latter two known as "ship-subsidy amendments."

A. S. CLAY,
JOHN A. MOON.

The report was agreed to.

INJURIES TO GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. DEPEW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 21844.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 21844) granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been heretofore read.

Mr. DEPEW. I desire now to offer some amendments to the bill. In section 1, line 6, after the word "harbor," I move to insert "or fortification."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 1, line 6, after the word "harbor," it is proposed to insert the words "or fortification," so as to read:

That when, after the passage of this act, any person employed by the United States as an artisan or laborer in any of its manufacturing establishments, arsenals, or navy-yards, or in the construction of river and harbor or fortification work or the management and control of the same, or in hazardous employment under the Isthmian Canal Commission, is injured in the course of such employment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DEPEW. In section 1, page 2, line 4, after the word "injured," I move to insert "or unless it shall continue for more than fifteen days."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. BAILEY. Has unanimous consent been given for the present consideration of this bill, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent for its consideration was given. The Senator from New York proposes an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 2, line 4, after the word "injured," it is proposed to insert "or unless it shall continue for more than fifteen days," so as to read:

Provided, That no compensation shall be paid under this act where the injury is due to the negligence or misconduct of the employee injured or unless it shall continue for more than fifteen days.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DEPEW. In section 2, page 2, at the end of line 11, I move to strike out "equal" and insert "such;" and in line 12, after the word "portions," to insert the word "and."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, page 2, line 11, before the word "portions," it is proposed to strike out "equal" and insert

"such;" and in line 12, after the word "portions," to strike out the comma and to insert the word "and," so as to read:

That if any artisan or laborer so employed shall die during the said year by reason of such injury received in the course of such employment, leaving a widow, or a child or children under 16 years of age, or a dependent parent, such widow and child or children and dependent parent shall be entitled to receive, in such portions and under such regulations as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may prescribe, the same amount, for the remainder of the said year, that the husband, or father, or son would be entitled to receive as pay if he were alive and continued to be employed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DEPEW. I offer an additional amendment, in section 4, on page 4, line 3, before the word "days," to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifteen."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 4, on page 4, line 3, before the word "days," it is proposed to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifteen," so as to read:

In the case of incapacity for work lasting more than fifteen days, the injured party or his legal representatives desiring to take the benefit of this act shall—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DEPEW. In section 9, on page 5, line 18, I move to strike out the word "July" and insert "August."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 9, on page 5, line 18, before the word "first," it is proposed to strike out the word "July" and insert "August," so as to make the section read:

Sec. 9. That this act shall only take effect as to the right to receive compensation for any damage from accidents as to those occurring on and after August 1, 1908.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

Mr. FULTON. I should like to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to offer an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert what I send to the desk.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that being a substitute, had not the Senator from Indiana better withhold it until the amendments that are to be offered to the bill itself shall be acted upon?

Mr. BAILEY. I thought the amendments had all been agreed to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I thought so, too.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] has just said that he desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator from Indiana proposes to offer a substitute, I should like to offer an amendment, if the Senator will yield to me.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly; I yield.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana withholds his amendment.

Mr. FULTON. I offer an amendment on page 1, line 6, after the word "work," to insert "or work in the reclamation of arid lands."

Mr. DEPEW. There is no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, after the word "work," it is proposed to insert "or work in the reclamation of arid lands."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let me suggest to the Senator from Oregon—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator is going to offer that amendment, would it not be proper to say "in construction work in the Reclamation Service?"

Mr. FULTON. I thought the word "construction," as it applies to river and harbor work, would also apply to my amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. FULTON. I thought the word "construction," in the same line, applying to river and harbor work, would cover that.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course, I do not suppose the Senator would want to include all the employees of the Reclamation Service.

Mr. FULTON. I will be glad to accept the suggestion of the Senator. How does the Senator suggest that the amendment be worded?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think the amendment, if adopted at all, should apply only to those engaged in the construction work.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming what is the character of the construction work in that Service that would make it extrahazardous or would make it expedient for Congress to take such action as is proposed here?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I myself have not expressed any opinion as to the amendment proposed, but construction work in the Reclamation Service is exactly the same as construction work upon river and harbor improvements and fortifications.

Mr. HOPKINS. It was extrahazardous work, then?

Mr. FULTON. I call the attention of the Senator to the reading of the text of the original bill as it is:

That when, after the passage of this act, any person employed by the United States as an artisan or laborer—

It must be in the employment of the Government and not under contract.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. FULTON. It continues:

In any of its manufacturing establishments, arsenals, or navy-yards, or in the construction of river and harbor work—

I suggest that we add there "or work in the reclamation of arid lands."

Mr. CARTER. "Construction work."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think the word "construction" ought to be inserted.

Mr. CARTER. It should read "or in construction work in the reclamation of arid lands."

Mr. FULTON. Very well. I am satisfied that the amendment shall be modified to read "or construction work in the reclamation of arid lands."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as modified will be stated.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

Mr. FULTON. Let us get the amendment worded right first.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, after the word "work," it is proposed to insert "or construction work in the reclamation of arid lands."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I simply want to observe that, when they have included under the provisions of this bill all of the various works of every kind undertaken by the Government, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor will have absolutely no time for the performance of any other duty when he finishes the trial of all these damage suits.

This is the most remarkable proposition, I think, ever presented to an assembly composed largely of lawyers. It is a proposition to submit one of the most difficult questions with which the courts are required to deal to the decision of a man who need not be a lawyer and who, as a matter of fact, generally is not a lawyer. The present Secretary of Commerce and Labor is not a lawyer, and yet, under the terms of this bill, he is required to be both the judge and the jury and to determine some of the nicest questions that arise in the court room upon the trial of cases.

The lawyers of this body all know that one of the most perplexing questions with which a jury must deal is the question of negligence in its various degrees and character, contributory and otherwise, and yet all of these questions are by this bill committed to a man who may have no training in the law, and who generally has none. I am rather inclined to think that the more a man knows about commerce and labor the less he is apt to know about the law, and the man who is experienced in business and whose general knowledge best qualifies him for the ordinary duties of that Department generally will be found to be less qualified to discharge this particular duty.

The time is past, Mr. President, when we regard a Cabinet officer as a constitutional adviser to the President. Men are selected for Cabinet positions now, not because they are supposed to be profoundly versed in a knowledge of the law, beginning with the fundamental of all law, which is the Constitution, but they are chosen rather because of their business and varied experience.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him there?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I would suggest to the Senator that the first section, relating to the question of negligence, is one that is drawn in the spirit of modern decisions and modern law on the question of negligence. The old common-law rule was that negligence was a question of law to be determined by the court. In the State of Illinois in all the damage suits that are litigated in the various courts the question of negligence has become a question of fact to be determined by the jury, and our courts have held that it is error for the court now to take a case from the jury on a pure question of negligence. It is to be left for the jury to determine as a matter of fact whether the party was negligent or not.

While it is true that the present Secretary of Commerce and Labor is not a lawyer, everybody recognizes him as a man of great business ability, and the questions that will be presented to him can be presented in the same spirit that this class of cases is presented to the courts in Illinois, and, in fact, in most of the States of the Union at the present time.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois is not accurate when he says that the question of negligence was, under the common law, always a question of law. That has been true in a very few jurisdictions. The question of negligence was always largely left to the determination of the jury under the instruction of the court.

I have no objection to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor acting as a jury, although I would rather have twelve men than one man, but I object to him being the judge and the jury both.

The Senator is right when he says that the modern tendency is to commit all questions of negligence to the decision of the jury, yet we have not reached the point where the judge is exempted from the duty and the necessity of delivering instructions to the jury in cases involving personal injury. I maintain that as this is a new departure in governmental policy, and a very violent departure, too, it looks to me like the simple, orderly, and proper way would be to allow these injured employees to bring suit in the courts of the country. If you tell me that the litigation produced in that way will encumber the dockets of the courts, I answer that, with the great number of courts in every part of the country, it would not be so serious an embarrassment to them as it would be to the one Department here at Washington.

Moreover, sir, these accidents and these injuries will occur in every part of the country. Under the provisions of this bill the beneficiaries in the case of death, or the employee himself in the case of injury, must arrange to come to Washington to try the case. The inconvenience of that is obvious to every Senator. It is inconvenient enough for him to have to go to the nearest United States court to have his rights adjudicated; but if the Government has determined to allow its employees to present and have adjudicated their claims arising out of these injuries, then I repeat that the orderly, sensible, and proper way is to remit them to the courts, where the rules of evidence are understood and enforced and where the rules of law are presumed to be understood. I use the word "presume" advisedly, because, I regret to say, they are not always understood in all the Federal courts, even within my knowledge and my experience, but they are at least presumed to be understood, and there the injured man, asserting a right under the law, has his twelve peers, instead of one superior officer, to decide his case.

At the proper time, after the Senator from Indiana shall have proposed his amendment, the nature of which I do not know now, I intend to move to recommit this bill to the committee with instructions to provide for a trial in court instead of a trial by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. In connection with what the Senator from Texas is saying as to the particular purpose in view in the selection of what may be called by courtesy a Cabinet officer, I wish, with his permission, to read from the Constitution what is the office of the head of a Department that we call a Cabinet officer and the function as an adviser that he performs. I will read the language of the Constitution—and they are the only words in the Constitution which make any reference to the head of a Department.

There is of course no such officer under the law, as we know, as a Cabinet officer. The only reference made is in this language. Speaking of the powers of the President and his duties the Constitution says:

He may require the opinion, in writing, of the principal officer in each of the Executive Departments, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices.

That is the scope contemplated by the Constitution of their duties as advisers.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Georgia is, of course, exactly correct about that. We have, however, gone far beyond, and much further than it was wise to go; but I never supposed we would go to the extent of constituting one of these Cabinet officers, or, more properly described, the head of one of these Departments, as a judge to try a case. Analyze it as you please, and describe it as you please, this is nothing more and this is nothing less than the trial of a lawsuit—John Smith v. The Government of the United States. If the Government of the United States was not a sovereign, John Smith could sue it in the courts and have his case determined under the law and upon its merits.

The Government of the United States, being sovereign, can only be sued with its own consent, and the consent that it gives here is that the case of Smith against it shall be tried by a man who may not be a lawyer and may know nothing about the law, may know nothing about the rules of evidence, and may be burdened with a thousand other details of more or less importance. It simply remits John Smith to the tender mercy of some $1,800 clerk. I do not mean to disparage the $1,800 clerk, because I have known $1,800 clerks who knew more law and had as much judgment as some Cabinet officers.

But after all the Congress would not commit this directly to the clerk, and yet every Senator in this body knows perfectly well that the result will and must be that there is where it goes at last. You are establishing a judiciary department in the Department of Commerce and Labor. If you are going to commit it to any Department, send it to the Department of Justice, where every man connected with it is presumed to have a knowledge of the law. This is such an inexcusable and indefensible proposition that it looks to me like the Senate will not hesitate to send it back to the committee and let there be a proper provision, if any provision is to be made at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas a question.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. We can understand that if a man is injured in the service of a corporation and negligence exists or is asserted, the corporation will make a contest, but if a person is injured in the service of the Government, who is going to make the contest? Is it not the probable fact that every one will go to the Department of Commerce and Labor, there will be no contest, and damages will be allowed, whether there has been negligence or not?

Mr. BAILEY. If that would be true, it would be true at one place just as well as at the other.

But my opinion is that the district attorney representing the Government in the district where the suit is brought should be required to defend the suit in the interest of the Government, as he is required to defend any other suit brought against the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree with the Senator in his criticism of making the Secretary of Commerce and Labor a judge in cases of this kind. But it seems to me there will not be any suits. A man is injured in a navy-yard, and his case goes to the Department of Commerce and Labor. Who is going to assert that he did not exercise due care?

Mr. BAILEY. That is true. In other words, there is a plaintiff and there is a defendant, in effect, and the defendant's attorney may know nothing about it.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is it exactly.

Mr. BAILEY. And he is a long way from the scene of action. Are you to bring all of the employees associated with him to Washington; or you may say their depositions may be taken? The trouble with that, however, is that a lawyer finds it exceedingly difficult to determine from a deposition so well as from oral testimony whether the witness is telling the truth or not; and as sure as this bill passes in this form almost every man who makes a claim against the Government will have that claim allowed.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no question about it.

Mr. BAILEY. And the Government will be mulcted without mercy and without reference to the facts.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to interrupt him again?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to section 3 of the bill, which provides that in case of an accident a report shall be made by the superior of the injured employee, and that that report, through the proper channels, shall be sent to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and upon that the Secretary is authorized to act. The Senator will see from that section that it is not contemplated by the enactment of this legislation that there shall be any lawsuit or that the person who is injured shall make a claim against the Government or have any rights other than is provided in the bill. The rights provided here emanate with Government officials—the superior of the party injured—and there will be no taking of depositions, no hiring of lawyers, no requirement to bring witnesses to Washington.

Mr. BAILEY. Then that makes it worse.

Mr. HOPKINS. Wait a moment.

Mr. BAILEY. That is a simple proposition to give every man injured in the employment of the Government recourse against the Federal Treasury.

Mr. HOPKINS. Not at all, because the report comes from the superior officer, who is supposed to represent the interest of the Government. This officer is to gather all the information relating to the accident and make a full report regarding it.

Mr. BAILEY. Then does the Senator from Illinois understand that the injured employee is not permitted to furnish the Secretary of Commerce and Labor with a presentation of his side of the case?

Mr. HOPKINS. He would undoubtedly be permitted to present to the officer whose duty it was to make out the report all the facts connected with the accident.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Illinois is a lawyer of long experience, and for years has been connected with the public service. He knows that even the best men, when the recovery comes out of the Public Treasury, are not so tender with their consciences as they ought to be. There is—and I do not say it is discreditable to human nature—in the heart of every man a disposition to do the generous thing to one man when what he receives is contributed by all men.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, if the Senator will allow me—

Mr. BAILEY. There is amongst us a belief that if it comes out of the Government nobody is damaged very much.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think the Senator from Texas has properly stated the principle upon which this legislation is suggested. Everybody recognizes the fact that a poor man who is injured so that he is unable to support himself and his family after an injury must go to the poorhouse or be the subject of charity of some kind.

The framers of this legislation have believed that where such an employee was in the service of the Government and was injured it is better for the Government immediately to give him a certain allowance for that injury than to let him go through the heart-breaking experiences that many of these men do under existing law.

Mr. BAILEY. That kind of philosophy, if carried to its ultimate and proper conclusion, would make all the men who can work work and divide what they make with those who can not work. In other words, we would soon have an ideal state—a socialistic republic. That day may come. I pray God He may postpone its coming until I am gone. I believe in a government under which every man takes the consequences of his own folly, and if a man working for the Government or working for an individual or working for a corporation brings upon himself an injury, nobody ought to be compelled to pay him any sum of money to recompense him for the consequences of his own folly. You ought to teach men in the employ of the Government that they must be prudent; that they must be careful; that they must practice no negligence, because, be it remembered, they are not the only sufferers from their negligence. The injury under which they suffer sometimes falls on others besides themselves, and mere dollars and cents can not compensate for many injuries.

Instead of framing this legislation upon the idea of benevolence—and that is exactly what it is here—let us frame it upon the idea of justice. Let us give to every man who has been injured without his fault a recovery. Let us deny it to every man who is injured through his fault.

When you come to determine whether or not a man has been at fault there are rules of law and rules of evidence which ought to be followed, and a man who, under those rules of evidence and under those rules of law, is not entitled to recover ought not to be made a charge upon the Public Treasury, and the man who is entitled to recover ought to have fair compensation.

I do not subscribe to the theory that the Government shall be permitted to injure men and make no atonement for it.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the Senator that he states the rule of law in its harshest form.

Mr. BAILEY. No.

Mr. HOPKINS. The tendency of the courts everywhere is to modify that harsh rule.

Mr. BAILEY. The old and harsh rule of fellow-servant as it obtained in the common law has been practically abolished in every State of the Union. I will agree with the Senator from Illinois and provide that the recovery in each case shall be governed by the laws of the State in which the case is tried.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Surely in this enlightened age nobody would defend the harsh rule of the common law.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that in the first section it is provided—

That no compensation shall be paid under this act where the injury is due to the negligence or misconduct of the employee injured.

So the Government is protected in that respect.

Mr. BAILEY. That is a little indefinite and unsatisfactory. I prefer myself that if the negligence of the injured employee was slight as compared with the greater negligence that produced the injury, it should be considered in mitigation of the damages and not as a bar to recovery. That is the more humane and just rule; and I would prefer it. But, rather than to devolve upon the committee the duty of working out a Federal liability bill, I would provide that in each case the court trying it should try it according to the State law existing in the jurisdiction where the case is tried.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The bill includes labor employed on river and harbor work. In a great many instances labor on river and harbor work in this country is done by contract. Some individual corporation makes a contract with the Government to do the work, and in that case the contractor has control and direction of the labor. What I want to ask the Senator is who, under the provisions of this bill, if a laborer employed on such work was injured and the injury should be the result of gross negligence on the part of the contractor who has control, would be liable for damages?

Mr. BAILEY. In that case the contractor would be liable and not the Government.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to have that made clear.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; I think myself this section could be clarified in that respect because it uses the words "and control." The Government may be said always to be in control of its public works—

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true.

Mr. BAILEY. Although they are being done under contracts. I will say to the Senator—and I owe the Senate an apology for the fact—that I have not read the bill. Yesterday afternoon when it was read the first thing that struck me was the establishment of a judicial tribunal in the Department of Commerce and Labor. I did intend to take the bill home with me last night and examine it. But I did not. It passed out of my mind.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I want, if the Senator will permit me, to call his attention to lines 3 and 4 on page 1. The Senator from Texas, as well as the Senator from Alabama, will see that the Government of the United States could not be liable to anybody employed by a contractor. The bill limits it to an artisan or laborer employed by the United States. If the laborer or artisan is employed by a contractor engaged in Government work, the Government would not be liable. It would be a question between the laborer and the contractor.

Mr. BAILEY. That is true, except that I can not quite understand—and I say for the second time that I have not carefully examined the bill—why it is that in the sixth line, beginning with the last words, there should be the words "or the management and control of the same." That seems to relate to some work which might not be prosecuted directly by the Government itself. But wholly apart from that, the rule undoubtedly would be that when an employee was working for a contractor he would not be working for the Government of the United States, and his remedy would be against the contractor and not against the Government. That remedy now exists, and of course it needs no legislation. If a laborer is injured in any work being constructed under contract, the laborer can call to the bar of the court the contractor to answer for any damages that may have been occasioned to him by the negligence of the contractor or the contractor's other servants.

Mr. CULBERSON and Mr. MONEY addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. BAILEY. My colleague desires to make a suggestion.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desired to call attention to the provision in the first section to which the attention of my colleague was invited by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to say that I concur in what the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] has said—that the liability should be determined by the lex loci—but what I ask him now is whether that is the meaning of this bill? It strikes me as being a very vague bill. I have not read it; I can not read it; but I have had it read to me. Does it not undertake to fix the responsibility upon the Government, whether the employment is directly by the Corps of Engineers or by contractors, corporate or individual? Is that the intent of this bill?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, a hasty glance at the bill leads me to fear that this might relieve the contractor and impose the burden on the Government, or else I can not, upon one moment, find any meaning to give to the words "or the management and control of the same." I will read it, with the permission of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator from Texas allow me for a moment?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think a careful reading of the first section will clear up any doubt the Senator may have in his mind. It applies only to persons who are employed by the United States, without reference—

Mr. BAILEY. To where they are employed or how.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. I think that is probably true.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I support the position taken by the Senator from Texas, that there should be a court to determine this. I think this very provision ought to have a lawyer to decide it. It says:

Any person employed by the United States as an artisan or laborer—

It should read, continuing—in any of its manufacturing establishments, arsenals, or navy-yards, or employed by the United States in the construction of river and harbor work, or employed by the United States in the management and control of the same.

I think a first-class jurist would give that construction to it; and for that reason I concur in the suggestion made by the Senator from Texas that there should be a court to decide this, presided over by a lawyer, and not a layman.

Mr. BAILEY. I believe we ought to pass a bill of this kind as an act of justice and not of benevolence. I believe if any man in this world, compelled to work for a daily wage in order to support himself and family, is injured while at that work, and without his fault or negligence, somebody ought to pay for the injury. The old idea that you could not call a government into court was purely technical and, I had almost said, mythical. There is nothing sacred about a government, as we view them to-day. But I waive all questions of that kind, and I put it on this ground: If the Government is going to answer, let it answer according to the rules of law, which not only include rules by which men's rights are measured, but also the rules of evidence under which rights are established.

Let us say to the men who are working for the Government of the United States in certain kinds of employment, that if they are injured without their fault they can step into court and call the Government to answer them there just as they can call any other employer. I infinitely prefer that to this other system of doing them some sort of charity or extending them some sort of benevolence.

It is the business of government to be just, and not to be benevolent. A benevolent government in the end is a bad government, because the benevolence which the government bestows upon one man it is compelled to take from other men. But when a government does justice no man under its flag can complain about it. Let us treat these men not as children or wards deserving our charity, but let us treat them as citizens of the United States, entitled to justice at our hands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON], which will again be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, after the word "work," insert "or construction work in the reclamation of arid lands."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I offer the amendment I send to the desk. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert—

Mr. GALLINGER. I have two or three small amendments I should like to offer before the substitute is proposed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well. I withhold it for the time being.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 1, line 3, I move to strike out "passage" and insert "approval," so as to read: "That when, after the approval of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. After the word "navy-yards," in line 6, page 1, I move to insert "or as postal clerks on railroad trains."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the fact that we already have a special law about postal clerks.

Mr. GALLINGER. When was that enacted?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. About four or five years ago.

Mr. GALLINGER. Do they get compensation for injuries?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is compensation to the heirs in case of death. It also applies to the Life-Saving Service.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not think they get compensation for injuries.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It applies to—

Mr. GALLINGER. I would suggest that the amendment be agreed to and let it go into conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "navy-yards," in line 6, page 1, it is proposed to insert "or as postal clerks on railroad trains."

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether he does not think that the remedy these employees have against the railway company is ample? They can now recover for any negligence which arises as to the conduct of the train. I can not understand where any negligence on the part of the Government could result in injury to railway mail clerks.

Mr. BAILEY. There could not be any doctrine of fellow-servant there. They would have recourse against the railroad company. The Government could not be responsible for such an injury.

Mr. DEPEW. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that the law in regard to railway mail clerks as it is now and as it has existed for five years is that a postal clerk is paid his wages for one year unless he is sooner able to resume work, and if he is killed or dies within a year his estate receives $1,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not know that that law existed. I had the impression that there was a law covering his death. I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. GALLINGER. Section 5 provides—

That the employees shall, whenever and as often as required by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, submit himself to medical examination, to be provided and paid for under the direction of the Secretary.

I take it that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is not going to follow these injured persons and be able to determine whether they ought to be reexamined. But it is evident that they ought to be reexamined from time to time. I move to insert after the word "Labor," in line 22, the words "at least once in three months."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator will turn to section 5 of the bill I think he will find perhaps that his view is covered. Section 5 of the bill provides "that the employee shall, whenever and as often as required by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, submit himself to medical examination."

Mr. GALLINGER. That is precisely what I object to. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor never will do that of his own volition, and I think it is but proper that there should be an examination at stated times.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire will again state his amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 4, line 13, after the words "Secretary of Commerce and Labor," I move to insert "at least once in six months."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McLaurin. On line 5, page 2, I move to strike out the words "Secretary of Commerce and Labor" and to insert the words "court of the district in which the injury is inflicted."

Mr. HOPKINS. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that that is entirely too indefinite. For example, suppose a Government employee in the city of Chicago was injured there. There are probably sixty or seventy judges in the district, and there would be no means of determining which court the injured party should go to.

Mr. McLaurin. Surely there is some jurisdiction.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator could say the Federal court.

Mr. McLaurin. I would understand, when passing a law, that it means the Federal court. I am willing to adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois and say "court of the United States in which the injury is inflicted."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I can not yield further if this matter is going to be debated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate has a right to perfect the bill before an amendment is made to strike out and insert.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course I have no objection, but at the same time I understood that I had offered an amendment, and I was withholding it in order that other Senators might offer amendments.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator's amendment is a substitute.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. You can call it an "amendment" or a "substitute;" it is immaterial.

Mr. McLaurin. The reason I proposed to insert "court" was because I understood the word "court" would imply a United States court. I have no objection to the words "of the United States" being put in after "court."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 5, strike out the words "Secretary of Commerce and Labor" and insert "court of the United States in which the injury is inflicted."

Mr. PERKINS. I prepared a bill which applies to the employees of navy-yards, and after consulting with one of my legal colleagues he suggested the following language, which I will read and suggest to my friend from Mississippi:

The employee so injured, or, in case the injury results in death, the legal representatives of such employee, shall have a right of action, in any United States court having jurisdiction over like cases arising between individuals, for the recovery from the United States of compensation for such injuries or death.

Mr. McLaurin. I have no objection to that part.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest, with the permission of both Senators, that instead of "individuals" you say "persons," so as to include corporations as well as individuals.

Mr. HOPKINS. I would suggest to the Senator from California that the adoption of the amendment suggested by him changes the entire spirit of the act; and if it should be adopted, every section in the bill would have to be remodeled.

Mr. PERKINS. That is the object I have in view.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then, if the Senator wants to defeat the bill, let him state it without offering the amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. I have had a great deal of experience in the transportation business and in claims for injuries. When I was connected with the management of the company, I always made a compromise when it was practicable to do so, but I believe in giving the court jurisdiction over those injured in the employ of the Government, as well as those who have claims against corporations or individuals on account of injuries received.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I take advantage of the latitude of debate allowed to-day to say a word about a matter that occurred in my absence from the Senate.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] had read a letter dated Wheeling, W. Va., April 23, 1908, addressed to Mr. LITTLEFIELD, and he stated at the close of the letter that this is "the same case referred to by the Senator from Texas." I sent for the stenographer's notes containing the statement of the Senator from West Virginia, and I ask that it be incorporated as a part of what I am saying. I take this opportunity to say that the letter addressed to Mr. LITTLEFIELD refers to the case of the National Telephone Company v. Kent and others, and the case to which I referred and the bill which I presented is that of the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company v. John Mitchell and others. As far as I am concerned, I never heard before of the case of the National Telephone Company v. Kent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, during my absence from the Senate I understand the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] brought up the case in regard to Judge Dayton's restraining order.

I desire to read the following, in order that it may go into the RECORD.

WHEELING, W. VA., April 23, 1908.

Hon. C. E. LITTLEFIELD,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your favor of March 28, 1908, we appeared in the United States circuit court as counsel for the defendants in the case of National Telephone Company v. Kent et al. No contempt proceedings grew out of the injunction case. We have no criticism whatever to make of the action of Judge Dayton in awarding the restraining order or in granting the preliminary injunction. Our clients directed us to discontinue their defense, and no motion to dissolve or to modify was ever made. The injunction was made permanent as to our clients.

We took no part in the injunction suit brought by the Hitchman Coal Company.

Very truly, yours,

DOVENER & FISKEISEN.

It is the same case referred to by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will not insist upon his amendment. Either the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi or the one suggested by the Senator from California would defeat the very purpose for which the bill was drawn. The purpose of this particular bill is to avoid, if possible, the necessity of sending a man into court to receive compensation for his injuries.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me? I remind the Senator from Wyoming that laborers in the employment of individuals and corporations have to resort to the courts to secure their rights in cases just like this, and I can not understand why a man in the employment of the Government, if given the right to recover, might not be expected and required to recover according to the same course of procedure that his fellow-citizens engaged in other employments have to pursue. I suggest that for the Senator's consideration.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The suggestion is pertinent; but, Mr. President, I have an idea that a lesson might be taught or an example set to other corporations employing large numbers of workmen or to individual employers employing large numbers of workmen by which they would be shown that an easier and a less expensive and a quicker compensation for injury might be realized. This bill may perhaps set an example of that sort.

Mr. President, I do not know what we might call the bill. Perhaps it is an administrative bill. It is simply for the purpose of determining, without expense to the beneficiary, whether the injury received by a man in the employ of the Government, in a hazardous employment, has been received in such a way that the Government ought to compensate him either for his time when he is laid up or compensate his family in a measure in the case of death.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I did not happen to be present when the Committee on the Judiciary considered this bill, and I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Wyoming as to how far the committee made an investigation of the practical features of the administration of the bill. I should like to inquire of the Senator, in the first place, if the committee considered the question as to how great a number of employees would be beneficiaries under the bill?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; the committee had that under consideration.

Mr. BACON. How many employees of the Government did the committee estimate would be beneficiaries of the bill?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The estimate of the committee may be found in the report that was submitted. That report contains the information that was gathered by the House committee. It contains a compilation from each of the Departments to be affected with the exception, I understand, of the War Department, that Department having been unable to collate their records in time to fill the purpose.

Mr. DEPEW. I will state that the House committee made an exhaustive investigation of this subject—in fact, they have been all session on it—and they find that the total number of employees of the Government is 337,751 connected with the classified and unclassified service, and of that number (337,751) the number who would be affected by the bill is 71,600.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask my colleague upon the committee if the committee, after the estimate had been made as to the number of employees of the Government who would be the beneficiaries under the bill, went further and made an estimate as to the number of casualties which would call for the exercise of this judicial power by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The only information the committee had on that point, I will say to the Senator, was the accidents and deaths that had been reported upon Government work. Of course there would be probably some accidents that were not reported to the different Government Departments which would come under the bill, for instance, minor injuries, where the accident might not perhaps lay a man up for more than thirty days. But the committee had in its possession information as to the number of accidents and deaths that had been reported in certain Departments, not in all of them, I will frankly say to the Senator.

Mr. BACON. How many were there?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I could state if I had the report of the committee.

Mr. LODGE. I have it right here.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator from Massachusetts has it.

Mr. LODGE. The report states that—

There are approximately 6,600 artisans and laborers employed in arsenals, armories, and other manufacturing establishments of the War Department, and during the past ten years eight were killed and forty-one more or less seriously injured.

They have not the statistics for the navy-yards.

During the calendar year 1907, under the Isthmian Canal Commission, there were 142 accidents resulting in death, and approximately 1,300 were treated in the hospitals. In the river and harbor work, since the year 1894, there were about 75 casualties, and of those 2 were killed and 1 died.

Mr. BACON. That is very good, as far as it goes.

Mr. LODGE. It covers everything but the navy-yards.

Mr. BACON. It does not cover a great many accidents to which the Senator from Wyoming has alluded. The language of the report is as to serious accidents.

Mr. LODGE. It covers everything.

Mr. BACON. In dealing with the practical purposes contemplated by the bill, it is very important to know the effect of it when we devolve upon the Secretary practically the control of every one of these cases, because in every case of accident under the law as it now exists in the States, where individuals and corporations are concerned, the great question is the question where the negligence has been, and those questions would have to be considered by the Department of Commerce and Labor as carefully as they would be considered by a court. It is the purpose of my inquiry to ascertain whether the committee, when they recommended the bill, in which it is prescribed that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall practically be the judge and the jury for the trial of the crucial questions in the case, had such information as to the probable number of these accidents as would lead them to the conclusion that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor could himself—not through a clerk, but himself—consider and determine the question whether there had been negligence in that vast number of accidents.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not suppose the Secretary of Commerce and Labor himself individually could, by any possibility, in view of his other duties, consider them.

Mr. BACON. Then certainly no one else than the Secretary of Commerce and Labor under the bill would have the authority to do it. He can not delegate it to anybody else any more than a judge on the bench can delegate to a subordinate the power to hear and try a case. It is true that under our machinery of judicial procedure there are delegations to masters in chancery, referees, and so forth, but that is always by authority of law—express authority of law, and not implied authority.

Here the bill provides that it shall be determined by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. The point I have in mind in making the inquiry is to demonstrate the fact, as stated by the Senator himself, that it would be a practical impossibility for the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to discharge the duty which the bill would devolve upon him.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator allow a question? Suppose the bill should become a law and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor had an able lawyer there in his Department and had him investigate and make his report. If the Secretary of Commerce and Labor signed the order, it would be the act of the Secretary, would it not?

Mr. BACON. And so it would be if a judge on the bench should have a lawyer make up a decision and the judge signed the order.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is a different proposition.

Mr. BACON. That would be in compliance with law.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is entirely different; that is a judicial proceeding. I will say to the Senator from Georgia. This is not proposed to be such. This is only such an investigation as a manager of a great corporation would give where an employee was injured to find out the facts without the technicalities of the law surrounding him.

Mr. BACON. It does not make any difference as to technicalities; the duty would be upon the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to ascertain with all the accuracy and all the solemnity of a judge whether the party had been negligent.

Mr. HOPKINS. Not at all, under the bill, if the Senator please. I called the attention of the Senate a little while ago to section 3 of the bill, which provides for an entirely different procedure than at law. The report is sent up by the superintendent in charge and the member of the Cabinet having this matter in charge acts upon that report.

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly. It simply provides the means by which he may get the facts, but when he has secured the facts the obligation is upon him to come to a correct conclusion upon those facts as certainly as it is upon a judge to come to a correct conclusion upon testimony submitted to him.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Some time ago the Senator from Georgia asked me a question. The question directed to me was as to whether the Secretary of Commerce and Labor could himself personally investigate all these matters. My reply was that it would be beyond the range of human possibility for him to do that in connection with his other duties. Whereupon the Senator from Georgia expressed the belief in effect that a personal investigation of all matters connected with accidents would be necessary in order to carry out the provisions of this proposed law and give the relief which the proposed law seeks to give.

I do not care to enter into a legal discussion; it would take too long; but upon that point, being in favor of the bill, I am obliged to differ with the Senator from Georgia. My own belief is that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor can act upon this matter the same as any other head of a Department can act upon matters coming before his Department. He can render a decision, not upon an investigation which he has made personally, but upon investigations which have been made or upon legal points that have been suggested to him. He can act in his official capacity upon the information thus gathered for him by those in the Department and under his control. That is the answer which I personally give to the question. I presume from what the Senator said it would not satisfy his legal mind.

Mr. President, addressing myself once more to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, the adoption of that amendment, as I stated, would absolutely make impossible a bill constructed upon the lines which this is constructed upon. The purpose of the committees of the two Houses of Congress in constructing the bill and presenting it has been, as I said before, to relieve the employees of the necessity of going through the long, tedious, and expensive determination of the court, and it becomes rather an administrative measure than a judicial measure. I think the Senator can see that.

Of course, if the Senator in a general way desires to provide for it, he may do it in another bill. He might remove in four lines the bar of sovereignty so far as the employees of the Government are concerned, and then let them sue in a court of justice. But unless we do that, if we are seeking to give some definite advantage to the employee at this time upon which he can act, upon which his family can be supported during the duration of his injury, or upon which they can derive some immediate benefit at his death, let the bill go along the line upon which it has been constructed, to wit, a measure more administrative than anything else.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish now, if it will not greatly inconvenience Senators, to ask that at this juncture for the information of the Senate, the amendment which I intend to offer to the bill after the bill has been perfected may be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not like to interpose an objection, but it seems to me that the bill should first be perfected.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am not offering it now, I will say to the Senator. What I am now proposing to do I think may change the course of the discussion a good deal. Most certainly it will eliminate a very large portion of the discussion that we have had this evening or rather the questions that aroused it, although perhaps on the contrary it may raise other questions.

The only thing I ask now is that for the information of the Senate, as is frequently done, the amendment which I intend to propose at the proper time be read.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course we understand very well that if the amendment is read now it will simply postpone another day the discussion of this question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That will have to be done in any event. It is perfectly clear that we can not conclude this matter tonight. I hope the Senator will permit me to have the amendment read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will not object, but I throw upon the Senator the burden of the delay of the bill now under consideration.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, I accept that, Mr. President.

Mr. NELSON. I wish the Senator from Indiana would yield for a moment. I think there is a misapprehension about the nature of this bill, and I should like to make a brief explanation of it. Then the Senator from Indiana can offer his substitute.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. All that I am asking, I will say to the Senator from Minnesota, is that I do not wish now to discuss it or any portion of the bill, but merely that the amendment may be read for the information of the Senate. I merely ask for the reading of the amendment for the information of the Senate; that is all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the United States shall be liable to its civilian employees whose compensation is or probable earnings are less than at the rate of $2,500 per annum, including as well those employed under the Isthmian Canal

Commission and by the Panama Railroad and Steamship Line, for an injury or death by accident arising out of or in the course of the injured person's employment. No compensation shall be paid under this act for the first thirty days of incapacity from such injury or where the injury is due to serious and willful misconduct on the part of the employee injured. All questions of misconduct shall be determined by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Sec. 2. That when death results from the injury provided against in the first section of this act, compensation shall be made by the United States, as follows:

(a) If the employee leaves any relatives wholly dependent on his earnings, a sum equal to such earnings during the period of five years next preceding his injury, but not less than $2,000 nor more than $5,000 shall be allowed. If the period of his employment has been less than five years, the amount to be paid shall be computed as for five years, on the basis of his average earnings during the period of such employment, but subject as to amount to the foregoing limitation.

(b) If the employee leaves any relatives partially dependent on his earnings, a sum not exceeding such earnings during the two years next preceding his injury, but not more than $1,800 shall be allowed, the total amount of such payments to be determined by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and to be proportioned to the degree of dependence he shall find. If the period of his employment has been less than two years, the amount to be paid shall not exceed his average earnings computed as for two years during the period of such employment, but subject as to amount to the foregoing limitation.

(c) Payments made to dependent relatives shall be divided among them in such proportions as may seem equitable to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor under the circumstances of the case.

(d) If the employee leaves no relatives dependent upon him, the reasonable expenses of his medical attendance and burial, not exceeding $150, shall be paid.

Sec. 3. That where incapacity for work results from such an injury as is referred to in section 1 hereof, the employee so injured shall be entitled to receive a monthly payment during the entire period of incapacity, computed at a rate equal to 60 per cent of his average daily or monthly earnings during such part of the preceding twelve months as he may have been employed, but such monthly payment shall not exceed $50. Where incapacity for work resulting from an injury described in section 1 of this act has continued for twelve months, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall cause an examination to be made, as hereinafter provided for, and, if it appear to him that such incapacity is then permanent, he shall direct that the monthly payments cease, and that in place thereof the injured employee be paid a sum equal to ten times the annual amount payable to the employee at the rate received by him at the time of such examination.

Sec. 4. That whenever an accident occurs to any employee embraced within the terms of the first section of this act, and which results in death or a probable incapacity for work, it shall be the duty of the official superior of such employee to at once report such accident to the head of his bureau or independent office, and his report shall be immediately communicated through regular official channels to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. Such report shall state, first, the origin and nature of the accident and the probable duration of the injury resulting therefrom; second, whether the accident arose out of or in the course of the injured person's employment; third, whether the accident was due to serious and willful misconduct on the part of the employee injured; fourth, any other matters required by such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may prescribe. The head of each Department or independent office shall have power, however, to charge a special official with the duty of making such reports.

Sec. 5. That in the case of any accident which shall result in death, the persons entitled to compensation under this act or their legal representatives shall, within ninety days after such death, file with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor an affidavit setting forth their relationship to the deceased and the ground of their claim for compensation under the provisions of this act. This shall be accompanied by the certificate of the attending physician setting forth the fact and cause of death, or the nonproduction of the certificate satisfactorily accounted for. In the case of incapacity for work lasting more than thirty days, the injured party or his legal representatives desiring to take the benefit of this act shall, within a reasonable period after the expiration of such time, file with his official superior, to be forwarded through regular official channels to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, an affidavit setting forth the grounds of his claim for compensation, to be accompanied by a certificate of his attending physician as to the cause and nature of the injury and probable duration of the incapacity, or the nonproduction of the certificate satisfactorily accounted for. If the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall find from the report and affidavit or other evidence produced by the claimant or his legal representatives, or from such additional investigation as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may direct, that a claim for compensation is established under this act, the compensation to be paid shall be determined as provided under this act and approved for payment by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Sec. 6. That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall have power, whenever satisfied a change should be made, to increase or diminish, in accordance with the provisions hereof, the payment made, or to discontinue compensation altogether. The employee shall, whenever and as often as required by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, submit himself to medical examination, to be provided and paid for under the direction of the Secretary, and if he refuses to submit to or obstructs such examination his right to compensation shall be lost for the period covered by the continuance of such refusal or obstruction.

Sec. 7. That to seek to obtain by fraudulent means or to accept benefits under this act to which the person is not entitled shall be deemed a misdemeanor on his part and punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

Sec. 8. That payments under this act are only to be made to the beneficiaries or their legal representatives other than assignees and shall not be subject to the claims of creditors.

Sec. 9. That the United States shall not exempt itself from liability under this act by any contract, agreement, rule, or regulation, and any such contract, agreement, rule, or regulation shall be pro tanto void.

Sec. 10. That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall, immediately upon the approval of this act, proceed with the necessary work incident to the putting of it into operation, and there is hereby appropriated the sum of $10,000, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available for the payment of cost of administering and executing this law.

Sec. 11. That this act shall only take effect as to the right to receive compensation for any damages from accidents as to those occurring on and after July 1, 1908.

SEC. 12. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith or providing a different scale of compensation or otherwise regulating its payment are hereby repealed.

Before the reading of the amendment was concluded,

Mr. BEVERIDGE said: Mr. President, it is perfectly clear that, regardless of the amendment which is now being read by the indulgence of the Senate at my request, we can not conclude the bill itself to-night. That has been clear for the last hour. Therefore, in order to save time, I ask that the amendment which I have offered may be printed, so that it may be on the desks of the Senators to-morrow morning.

Mr. ALDRICH. And printed in the Record.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let it be printed in the Record and also in the ordinary way. That will save time to-night.

I want to say just one word more while I am on my feet. It is called out by the kindly suggestion of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]—and I took it as such—which is that this amendment might delay the bill. It has been perfectly clear, as I said once before, for the last hour that it was out of the question to conclude to-night the consideration of the original bill that we are now perfecting, and therefore there was no delay so far as to-day is concerned occasioned by the reading of the substitute.

The truth about it is that the amendment which I have proposed as a substitute, if it had been proposed in the first instance, would have eliminated from discussion nearly all of the principal questions that have consumed this afternoon. I will not say that it does not nor that it does raise other questions. I merely wanted to say these words by way of explanation, and I now ask that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana what committee has reported his proposed substitute?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No committee reports it. It is an original proposition.

Mr. HOPKINS. An original proposition?

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I merely want to say to the Senator from Indiana that, in my judgment, if he hopes to get any legislation along the line of the original bill, he ought not to press the amendment he has offered, because it is going to cause so much discussion and take so much consideration that it will be utterly impossible at this late hour in the session to pass any measure on the subject if his amendment is to be fully discussed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

Mr. FULTON. In my judgment, Mr. President, there are so many objections to the propositions embodied in the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana that, when Senators have read it and considered it, it is going to give rise to a good deal of discussion, and far more time will be required than it will be possible to give to it in these closing hours.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, in answer to that I have to say two things. First, the Senator says it would require more time than could be given to it in these closing hours. What closing hours? No resolution from either House has been reported or adopted as to final adjournment; there has been no official determination of either body to adjourn. Here is a piece of legislation immediately at hand, which requires our action one way or the other. Certainly the great questions and the large human interests involved in this bill, whether one side or the other side be wrong, deserve consideration enough for Congress to remain in session a day or two days longer, if necessary.

I assume that what the Senator from Oregon had in mind was the report—the rumor—that we are going to adjourn on Saturday. Well, I am as anxious as any other Senator to adjourn when we get our work done; but that we shall fix upon an arbitrary date to adjourn, regardless of whether our work is completed or uncompleted, and that a proposition should not be considered merely because it might hold us here one or two days longer is, I think, incorrect in theory. Now, the other answer—

Mr. FULTON. I want to say that whatever may be the Senator's views or mine as to whether these are the closing hours of the session, I think a few days will demonstrate the fact that we are now in the closing hours.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, I think perhaps that is quite true, but ought it to be true. Why not do our work before we adjourn?

Mr. FULTON. And now, so far as these two bills are concerned, I want to say that personally I do not favor the bill that is pending—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Oregon asked me a question.

Mr. FULTON. I understood the Senator from Indiana had yielded to me.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did yield to the Senator, but not entirely.

Mr. FULTON. I did not want the Senator to yield to me entirely. I do not want to take him off his feet.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Just another word in answer to the other suggestion that the Senator from Oregon made to me, and that is, the endangering of the bill itself by any delay caused by the discussion of this substitute. First, at least in theory, everybody will have to admit that there can not be any danger, because there has been no time fixed for adjournment, and therefore we have plenty of time to consider the question. That is the first thing. The second consideration is that it does not need any more discussion than the Senate sees fit to give it. So far as I am concerned, I expect to submit some remarks to the Senate to-morrow, not longer than fifteen minutes, perhaps, and after that time, so far as I am concerned, I will be ready to vote, or would be ready to vote before. So that no more time is needed than the Senate sees fit to give to the measure. We can vote upon it within twenty minutes from the time the amendment is offered. If that does not carry, I shall have other amendments to offer.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will withhold his motion for a moment, at least for a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island withhold his motion?

Mr. ALDRICH. I withhold the motion for a moment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I understand the parliamentary situation with reference to this bill is as follows: That the Senate has proceeded to the consideration of this measure by unanimous consent. Is that correct?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is true.

Mr. GALLINGER. For the present day.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It was not for the present day, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending bill does not become the unfinished business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is what I wished to inquire about. Does the Chair say that the agreement only applied to to-day?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was only for to-day.

Mr. LODGE. It requires a motion to make it the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, Mr. President, before the Senator from Rhode Island renews his motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, I ask unanimous consent that we proceed to the consideration of this measure to-morrow morning immediately after the close of the morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the pending bill be taken up for consideration immediately after the routine business to-morrow morning.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think that at this stage of the public business it is important that no unanimous-consent agreement of that kind should be made by the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Subject to appropriation bills, then.

Mr. ALDRICH. Subject to appropriation bills and conference reports.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Subject to appropriation bills and conference reports; yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am exceedingly desirous of bringing up as soon as possible the inland-waterways bill. Can the Senator from Indiana provide for that in some way in his motion?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am very much afraid that I can not.

Mr. McLAURIN. I am very much afraid that the pending bill has not been provided for yet.

Mr. BACON. I should like to inquire whether the granting of this request would make the pending bill the unfinished business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It would not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There is unfinished business now.

Mr. BACON. It would simply come up in the morning hour.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It would come up in the morning hour.

Mr. McLAURIN. I think we had better let this go over. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. McLAURIN. To-morrow we can see about getting the bill up.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—

Mr. McLAURIN. I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will withhold his motion for a moment until I can make a request in reference to this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do.

Mr. McLAURIN. I request that the bill, with amendments as far as they have been adopted, be reprinted, so that we can see to-morrow what we are to act upon.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendments be printed in italics. I made a similar request the other day, and the bill was printed in Roman, and it was impossible to see what the amendments were.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi asks that the pending bill be reprinted with the amendments which have been adopted, the amendments to be in italics. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish merely to say that I have now made a request for unanimous consent that we should proceed to the consideration of this measure after the morning business to-morrow, subject to appropriation bills and conference reports, and, having in mind what the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] says, I wish to call particular attention to the fact that, so far as I have been able to do so, I have furthered the consideration of this bill, and that delay must not be laid even for a moment at my door. And I repeat that we have all the time necessary to consider this bill; why should we adjourn before we finish our work? The responsibility for killing this measure and other measures will be on those who refuse to consider them—not on those who wish to consider them.

Mr. McLAURIN. So far as I am concerned, any delay that I shall cause I will be responsible for. I merely want to wait until to-morrow to see what comes up, and then we can tell better whether or not we shall be prepared to consider this bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 20883) to establish in the Department of the Interior a Bureau of Mines, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21897) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BARTHOLOMEW, Mr. BURLEIGH, and Mr. BRANTLEY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 21927) to reimburse certain Departments of the Government for expenses incurred incident to the recent fire in Chelsea, Mass., and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 20883. An act to establish in the Department of the Interior a Bureau of Mines was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALDRICH. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. OWEN. I ask the Senator to yield to me for a moment to secure the consideration of a bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I must insist on my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, May 22, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 21, 1908.

[Continuation of legislative day of Tuesday, May 12, 1908.]

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 11 o'clock a. m.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up the conference report on the agricultural bill. The Clerk will read the report. The Clerk read the report as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10158) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and nine, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 8, 16, 21, 40, 43, 44, 53, and 79.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 18, 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 36, 37, 41, 42, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, and 78; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "four thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "one hundred and thirty-two thousand nine hundred dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "one hundred and five thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "eight hundred and fifty-two thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "one million three hundred and forty-one thousand six hundred and seventy-six dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "six hundred thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "three million eight hundred and ninety-six thousand two hundred dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "seven hundred and sixty thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "eight hundred and twenty-six thousand seven hundred and twenty dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "one hundred and thirty-nine thousand seven hundred and ten dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "one hundred and seventy-nine thousand seven hundred and ten dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 80: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "eleven million six hundred and seventy-two thousand one hundred and six dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

CHAS. F. SCOTT,
GILBERT N. HAUGEN,
JOHN LAMB,

Managers on the part of the House.

F. E. WARREN,
J. P. DOLLIVER,
H. D. MONEY,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill, H. R. 19158, an act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, submit the following detailed statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the conference report, namely:

Office of the Secretary.

Amendment No. 1 increases the salary of the solicitor from $3,500 to $4,500. The Senate recedes, with an amendment fixing the salary at $4,000, the sum named in the bill as it was first reported to the House.

Amendment No. 2, to which the House agrees, restores to the bill the language stricken out upon a point of order on the floor of the House providing for the addition of $500 to the salary of the chief clerk as custodian of buildings.

Amendments Nos. 3 and 4 rearrange the engineering force so as to give one assistant engineer a salary of $1,400, and two assistant engineers, $1,000 each, instead of providing for three assistant engineers, at $1,000 each; and the House recedes.

The Weather Bureau.

Amendment No. 8 provides not to exceed $2,000 of the sum appropriated to be immediately available for the pay of observers and employees engaged in evaporation investigations; and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 9 restores the word "establishment," which was always carried in the bill until last year, when it was stricken out in connection with amendments offered in relation to Mount Weather; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 10 increases the appropriation for new buildings for the use of the Weather Bureau from $45,000 to $120,000. The Senate recedes with an amendment fixing the sum at $105,000.

Amendment No. 12 provides for the erection of temporary buildings for living quarters for observers engaged in evaporation work, but it causes no increase in appropriation; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 14 increases the sum which may be used for the maintenance of the printing office in the city of Washington to $30,000, but involves no increase in the total appropriation; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 16 provides that not to exceed $10,000 should be immediately available for evaporation investigations; and the Senate recedes.

Bureau of Animal Industry.

Amendment No. 18 strikes out the following: "Provided also, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to expend not to exceed $5,000 of the amount hereby appropriated to especially investigate hemorrhagic septicaemia, infectious cerebrospinal meningitis, and malignant catarrh, prevalent among domestic animals in the State of Minnesota and adjoining States, to work out, if possible, in cooperation with the Minnesota experiment station, the problem of prevention by developing antitoxin or preventive vaccines, and to secure and diffuse information along these lines;" and the House recedes.

Bureau of Plant Industry.

Amendment No. 20 inserts the word "farm" so as to limit the study of water contaminations; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 22 provides a sum not to exceed $10,000, to be immediately available, for cotton boll-weevil work; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 24 increases the appropriation for the purchase and distribution of valuable seeds from $248,000 to $258,000; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 25 designates the use that shall be made of the increased appropriation for the purchase of seeds by providing that $56,000 (instead of $46,000) may be used by the Secretary of Agriculture for the collection and introduction of rare and valuable seeds, etc.; and the House recedes.

Forest Service.

Amendment No. 29 inserts the proviso that the prevention of the exportation of dead and insect-infested timber from the Black Hills National Forest shall be allowed until such time as the Forester shall certify that the ravages of the destructive insects are practically checked, but in no case after July 1, 1910; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 30 inserts the following language: "And hereafter advances of money under any appropriation for the Forest Service may be made to the Forest Service and by authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to chiefs of field parties for fighting forest fires in emergency cases, who shall give bond under such rules and regulations and in such sum as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, and detailed accounts arising under such advances shall be rendered through and by the Department of Agriculture to the Treasury Department;" and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 33 strikes out the language: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid or used for the purpose of paying in whole or in part the preparation of any newspaper or magazine article" and inserts the following: "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid or used for the purpose of paying for in whole or in part the preparation or publication of any newspaper or magazine article, but this shall not prevent the giving out to all persons without discrimination, including newspaper and magazine writers and publishers, of any facts or official information of value to the public;" and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 34 strikes out the words "And there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of five hundred thousand dollars, to be expended as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests" and inserts the following: "And there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of one million dollars, to be expended as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, fire lanes, telephone lines, cabins, fences, and other permanent improvements necessary for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests." The Senate recedes, with an amendment which leaves the language of the paragraph as passed by the Senate, but reduces the appropriation from $1,000,000 to $600,000.

Amendment No. 36 inserts a new paragraph, as follows:

"That hereafter twenty-five per centum of all money received from each forest reserve during any fiscal year, including the year ending June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and eight, shall be paid at the end thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State or Territory in which said reserve is situated, to be expended as the State or Territorial legislature may prescribe, for the benefit of the public schools and public roads of the county or counties in which the forest reserve is situated: Provided, That when any forest reserve is in more than one State or Territory or county the distributive share to each from the proceeds of said reserve shall be proportional to its area therein."

And the House recedes.

Bureau of Chemistry.

Amendment No. 37 inserts the following language: "to continue collaboration with other Departments of the Government desiring chemical investigations and whose heads request the Secretary of Agriculture for such assistance, and for other miscellaneous work; to demonstrate and illustrate the methods for the making of denatured alcohol on a scale suitable for utilization by the farmer or associations of farmers;" and the House recedes. The first part of this amendment simply restores to the bill language which has been carried for many years, but which was left out of the House bill under the impression that it was not necessary. The second provision is new matter; the language explains its purpose.

Amendment No. 38 increases the appropriation for the miscellaneous expenses of the Bureau from $725,000 to $810,000, and the Senate recedes with an amendment which leaves the appropriation $760,000.

Bureau of Soils.

Amendment No. 40 strikes out the language "to investigate, with the view of improving, the conditions relating to the supply and sale of domestic tobacco to any foreign country or countries where the business of buying and selling tobacco is conducted by the Government;" and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 41 reduces the appropriation for general expenses of the Bureau from $230,460 to $200,000; and the House recedes.

Division of Accounts and Disbursements.

Amendment No. 43 reduces the salary of the custodian of records and files from $1,200 to $1,000; and the Senate recedes.

Division of Publications.

Amendments Nos. 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, and 51 provide a readjustment of the number, classes, and salaries of the clerks, involving a total increase in appropriation of $2,900; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 53 increases the appropriation for the general expenses of the division from $40,000 to $45,000; and the Senate recedes.

Bureau of Statistics.

Amendment No. 55 increases the number of clerks in class 1 from thirteen to fourteen; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 56 decreases the number of clerks at $1,000 each from nine to eight; and the House recedes.

Contingent expenses.

Amendment No. 59 inserts the following language: "For rent in the District of Columbia, not to exceed $8,000; for the construction of a suitable building for shops, stables, and storage, including labor and other expenses, work to be done under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, not to exceed $25,000;" and the House recedes. The purpose of this amendment is to permit the Secretary of Agriculture to pay the rent of necessary buildings in the District of Columbia and also to construct a suitable building for shops, stables, and storage out of the material of certain buildings which it is necessary to remove from their present locations to lessen the danger of fire.

Office of Experiment Stations.

Amendment No. 61 corrects a clerical error by reducing the appropriation from $843,000 to $833,000; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 63 inserts the language, "and the Island of Guam;" and the House recedes. The purpose of this amendment is to permit the Secretary of Agriculture to maintain an agricultural experiment station in the island of Guam, and amendments 64 and 68, to which the House recedes, are the changes in language made necessary to carry amendment No. 63 into effect.

Amendments Nos. 69 and 70 provide for the completion of the apparatus used in nutrition investigations and increases the appropriation for that purpose from $3,000 to $7,000; and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 77 inserts the following language: "To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to inquire into the destruction of forests by the production of turpentine and resin, and the sources and methods of said industry, and in cooperation with the Bureau of the Census to report upon the production of the naval stores industry, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, including the employment of labor in Washington or elsewhere;" and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 78 inserts a new paragraph as follows:

"National bison range: The President is hereby directed to reserve and except from the unallotted lands now embraced within the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, not to exceed 12,800 acres of said lands, near the confluence of the Pend Oreille and Jocko rivers, for a permanent national bison range for the herd of bison to be presented by the American Bison Society. And there is hereby appropriated the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay the confederated tribes of the Flathead, Kootenai, and Upper Pend Oreille, and such other Indians and persons holding tribal relations or may rightfully belong on said Flathead Indian Reservation, the appraised value of said lands as shall be fixed and determined under the provisions of the act of Congress approved April 23, 1904, entitled 'An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment.' And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to inclose said lands with a good and substantial fence and to erect thereon the necessary sheds and buildings for the proper care and maintenance of the said bison; and there is hereby appropriated therefor the sum of $10,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary; in all, $40,000."

And the House recedes.

Amendment No. 79 inserts a new paragraph as follows:

"Mount Tabor Industrial and Manual Training School: That out of the sum of money hereafter annually paid to the State of New York pursuant to the provisions of the acts of Congress relative to agricultural colleges, approved, respectively, July 2, 1862, and August 30, 1870, and of the agricultural appropriation bill approved March 4, 1907, there shall hereafter annually be paid to the Mount Tabor Industrial and Manual Training School for colored youths the sum of $5,000."

And the Senate recedes.

All amendments not noted in this statement are merely verbal or other corrections not affecting the meaning of the bill or the amount of the appropriations under it.

The total appropriation carried by this bill as it left the House was $11,508,806. As amended in the Senate it carried $12,152,406, an increase over the House bill of $643,600. As agreed upon by the conferees the sum appropriated is $11,672,106, a net increase over the amount carried in the bill when it passed the House of $163,300.

CHAS. F. SCOTT,
GILBERT N. HAUGEN,
JOHN LAMB,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SCOTT. I move the adoption of the conference report. The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yeas and nays.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members; as many as are in favor of agreeing to the conference report will, as their names are called, answer "yea;" as many as are opposed will answer "nay;" those present and not voting will answer "present," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 237, nays 1, answered "present" 12, not voting 137, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 21735. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents in fee to purchasers of Indian lands under any law existing or hereafter enacted, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 16743) for the removal of the restrictions on alienation of lands of allottees of the Quapaw Agency, Okla., and the sale of all tribal lands, school, agency, or other buildings on any of the reservations within the jurisdiction of such agency, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF RAILWAY LINES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that at the close of one hour I shall move the previous question, and I ask that one half of the time be controlled by myself and the other half by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, after weeks and months of time spent in conference upon what is known as "the proposition to secure tracks to the Union Station," we come to consider and adopt, if possible, the conference report. The report is signed by the three members of the Senate conferees, and it has been adopted by the Senate without a dissenting vote.

Upon the part of the conferees of the House, it is signed by two Members, and it now remains for the House of Representatives to say whether or not we shall have tracks to the Union Station at this time. I want to say for my fellow Members, the conferees of the House, that they have done their utmost to carry out the wish and will of the House.

Gentlemen, there were five important matters in contention. First, supervision; second, universal transfers; third, the tracks upon the plaza; fourth, cross-town service; fifth, service down New Jersey avenue.

I believe I quote each member of the conferees of the House correctly when I say, if we could have obtained favorable action for universal transfers we would have come here to-day with a unanimous report, and all of us would have said that we yielded our judgment concerning the number of tracks on the plaza because it was largely, if not wholly, an engineering scheme. It is only fair to say of the conferees of the Senate that at no time have they claimed that the plaza proposition was their own, but that they put it in the Senate bill because it was the judgment of the engineers, after two years of work and the preparation of twenty or more different plans. That being the case, gentlemen, there remained four things for us to try to agree upon. The House has secured three of the four remaining things, namely, service down New Jersey avenue, cross-town extension, supervision by the Interstate Commerce Commission; and I want to say in this connection that I would have been entirely satisfied with the District Commissioners, for I have come to regard them as men of unquestioned character and ability, and who have at all times to me seemed desirous of doing that which was for the best interests of the District.

It became apparent to me at least three weeks ago that we were not going to be able to get universal transfers and supervision. I then made it my business to inquire of the Members on both sides of the Chamber and get their judgment as to which they thought the more material, universal transfers or supervision, and I want to say to the House, that with three exceptions, so far as I was able to confer with the Members, that they said to me, "secure supervision by all means in preference to universal transfers, for they can come later."

I know the claim will be made that if we do not get universal transfers to-day, that we will never secure them, but I hardly think this is a fair conclusion.

Since I have been a member of this committee the claim has been made that we would never get the cross-town service, and yet, gentlemen, we have secured it by the provisions of this bill, and there is no reason whatever if we fail at this time in securing universal transfers that we can not secure the same at the coming session of this or some future Congress.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will it disturb the gentleman if I ask him a question in that connection?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to know what provision for service has been promised, or partially promised, to the committee to that part of the city lying west of Fourteenth street over to Connecticut avenue, where the herdies run?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We have a clause in the bill for herdie service up H and Sixteenth streets. There has been no other service provided.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Has anything been said that leads the committee to believe that there will be decent service given to that part of the city in lieu of the obsolete and almost exhausted service?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; I think there will be better service.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Speedily?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; I hope before the next session of this Congress.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say one other thing in connection with the railroads. I know the claim will be made that the railroads ought of their own accord to have consented to the provision for universal transfers. When this bill was first brought to the attention of the House earlier in the session, I was asked by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] whether in my judgment the street railways could stand universal transfers.

I replied then that I believed the Capital Traction Company could, but that I did not know about the Washington Railway and Electric Company. One has a trackage of forty-odd miles, and the other of one hundred and forty-odd miles. There would seem on the face to be an injustice in demanding universal transfers between these two different companies, but of course I would have been glad to have secured this service had it been possible and right, for there is no blessing that can come to the people of the District that will not receive my hearty approbation, and it may be possible to secure it even sooner than we expect, especially if there should be a consolidation of the lines, which, I hope, may be accomplished in the near future. Gentlemen must remember that a considerable burden is being placed upon the railroads, even under the provisions of this bill, if we adopt the report. We must not forget that the electric railroads adjusted their tracks to the two old stations—one on Sixth street, off Pennsylvania avenue, and the other at the Baltimore and Ohio station.

A new station has been built in the Capital City, and one that we are all proud of. We now ask the railroads not simply to change their trackage and go to the new Union Station, but we impose additional burdens upon them by the provisions of this bill. The Capital Traction Company will have to advance $1,400,000—as much money as it cost to build a steam railroad 100 miles long in my State from my home city to Caseville twenty-odd years ago. The Washington and Electric Railway will have to spend $475,000, making a total sum of $1,875,000, almost $2,000,000, and the burden that we put upon them, in addition to getting the tracks to the station, by reason of the service down New Jersey avenue and the cross-town service, amounts in round numbers to about $1,000,000.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Are we asking the street railways to go to the Union Station, or are they asking for the privilege of going there?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think I am safe in saying that we are not simply asking, but practically compelling them to go there.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I had not seen any proposition originated by which they were asked to go there.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I certainly do not know that either one of the companies have ever asked for the service to the Union Station.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. From what I have heard and seen of the officers and managers of the companies they seem to be anxious to have this bill passed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think every member of the committee will bear testimony to the effect that the railroads have not asked for this service.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then why do you grant it? Why do not you authorize an automobile company to carry passengers in and out? It would be just as serviceable as railroad tracks.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The committee and Congress evidently think this a better way.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman yield for a question? I would like to ask the gentleman what is meant by universal transfers? Do you mean the giving of one transfer upon a single ticket, or do you mean a transfer upon a transfer?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We mean this, that the Capital Traction Company shall give transfers to the Washington Railway and Electric Company and its subsidiary companies.

Mr. DOUGLAS. One transfer?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Upon a single ticket?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. On different lines.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Are both railroads owned by the same company?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; they are not.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Has the bill stated that we have legal authority to force separate and distinct companies to give universal transfers?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman will recall, I think, that I put into the RECORD a short time ago an opinion that was written in answer to a letter of Senator GALLINGER, chairman of the District of Columbia Committee of the Senate, to the effect that universal transfers were unconstitutional.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I doubt very much if we have legal authority to do it.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If it is a short question.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the gentleman if his committee has investigated whether or not the Interstate Commerce Commission—I believe you have given them power to control these questions—will have sufficient time to give the matter consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; they will be able to as provided for in this bill.

Mr. NORRIS. With this added to the duties they have in regard to looking after interstate roads—

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think they will have the time.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me they have much more than they can do already.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the Commission will properly look after the business as contemplated in this bill.

Mr. McCALL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will speak later and will be glad to answer the question at that time.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, who introduced the free-transfer bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much to find that the House committee of conference found it necessary to yield on the most important provision of the bill for the extension of the street railways of this District. The brazen effrontery with which the street railway companies of this city dictate the policies under which street railways are allowed to be operated surpasses the impudence of any public-service corporation that I have ever known. Senator BURKETT a few days ago on the floor of the Senate publicly stated—

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I call the gentleman to order for referring to what a member of the other branch—

Mr. MADDEN. Very well, if it is out of order to mention a Senator—

Mr. PAYNE. It is out of order for the gentleman to state what a Senator has said on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. MADDEN. It is a matter of public record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed in order.

Mr. MADDEN. I have not the page of the RECORD here or I would read what he said. [Laughter.] However, I wish to say to the House that a distinguished member of the Senate stated on the floor of the Senate—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to his colleague it is not in order under the rules to refer to what a Senator—

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I will say a distinguished member of the Senate made the statement—I will make the statement that it has been stated somewhere under the Dome of this Capitol that no legislation—

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I again call the gentleman to order.

Mr. MADDEN (continuing). That no legislation could be enacted regulating street railroads within the District unless that legislation was approved by the street railway companies of the District. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will please suspend for a moment. The gentleman from Illinois knows the rules of the House. The Chair trusts the gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. MADDEN. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to be understood as wishing to proceed in order, but I also desire to state the facts as I understand them, so that the Members of the House will understand what they are.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman must confine himself in his statement of facts—

Mr. MADDEN. That is what I am endeavoring to do.

The SPEAKER (continuing). Within the rules of the House, and the gentleman knows the rules.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, one of the conferees on this bill, stated to the House a moment ago that the House secured three provisions in the bill which were sought by the House, and that they receded only on one or two provisions which the House sought to have incorporated in the bill. What were the provisions secured by the House conferees? Crosstown transportation, a line of street cars on New Jersey avenue, and supervision. Supervision by what? Supervision by the Interstate Commerce Commission; supervision by the Interstate Commerce Commission of a street railroad running five or six miles within the city of Washington. What business has the Interstate Commerce Commission to be charged with the regulation of street cars in this city? The regulation needed for these cars is such as to call for the service of a man whose duty it is to conduct the affairs of the city. The Interstate Commerce Commission is not charged with the conduct of the affairs of this city, and to turn the regulation of these street cars over to the Interstate Commerce Commission is an insult to the intelligence of this House, and I am surprised that the gentlemen representing the House on the conference would do such a thing. Everybody knows that the Interstate Commerce Commission will not regulate these cars. The manner of their operation, the kind of regulation they need is to compel them to run at regular intervals, to compel the use of clean cars, of decent cars, to compel them to put on automatic air brakes. Why, you can not get on a car now without being thrown on your face the very moment the car starts, or they attempt to start it. The motor-man of the car can not stop it within a half a block, and if he undertakes to stop it suddenly, every passenger is thrown out of his seat.

The cars that are being operated on some of the streets of this town look as if they were made from the fragments of Noah's Ark after it went to pieces. The kind of regulation we need is to compel these street car companies to understand that the people of Washington are entitled to some kind of decent, respectable service, and that kind of regulation will not be and can not be imposed upon them by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

They can not afford to give universal transfers, they say. Ah, but they can afford to capitalize these companies for four times the amount of money they put into them, and they can pay dividends on this capitalization. The people of Washington, through Congress, give these street car companies the streets, and the streets are the greatest part of the capital invested.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BATES]?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. BATES. Have you made an effort to get 3-cent fares in this bill, as well?

Mr. MADDEN. No, sir. I am not a believer in 3-cent fares, but I am a believer in this, that the public, giving the greatest value that exists in the capital of these railroad companies, is entitled to some consideration, and I believe that no franchise whatever should be given to the street car companies to extend these tracks to the Union Station until the street railway companies recognize the right of the public to participation in the privileges that the railroad companies are permitted to enjoy. I believe that when we give the use of the public streets to these railroad companies they should be given upon such terms as will enable the public to understand that they are participants in the benefits to be derived from the exercise of the privileges granted to the railway companies. It is not of so much importance that we have railroad tracks laid to the Union Station as it is that we compel the railroad companies to understand that there are principles of vital import to the people involved which they must recognize, one of which is that for the privileges given to these railroad companies by the people the railroad companies in return must recognize the right of the people to have something to say and to have the right to enjoy a part, at least, of the privileges which have been given to them. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] if he wants to use some of his time now?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I shall support the report of the conference committee, and I believe it is the duty of the House to do so, and thereby secure the extension of the several railway tracks to the new Union Station. This legislation was under consideration in the early part of 1907, during the Fifty-ninth Congress, it being the hope at that time to secure the construction of these tracks by the time the new station was opened to the public in December last. Since the convening of this present session of Congress on the first Monday in last December this proposition has been again under consideration, and it is to be hoped we have now reached the stage of action, so that the people of the District may not longer be subjected to the present inconvenience in reaching the station.

As originally presented, the purpose was simply to authorize the laying of these tracks to the new station. When the bill was reported to this House by the District of Columbia Committee it was encumbered with other provisions not necessarily involved in the original proposition. As stated by the chairman of the committee, the most important of these were: The more rigid supervision of the railways; second, universal transfers; third, cross-town service; fourth, service down New Jersey avenue. This House agreed to the amendments proposed by our committee, and the bill was sent to conference, and then came the serious controversy between the two Houses.

The main differences were upon the question of supervision and of universal transfers. After a disagreement was reported, the question was again submitted to the House, and the conferees were directed to insist upon all the House amendments. After weeks and months of delay in trying to adjust the differences, the conferees have at last reported an agreement to this House. The agreement provides substantially for all the contentions of the House, except as to universal transfers. The question of supervision was settled by placing the street railways of the District under the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, who have authority to enforce existing laws and also to make such general regulations as may be needful to compel the performance of their duties in the interest of a satisfactory service. This is a very valuable provision and one which will prove of great value to the people of the District. I have heretofore voted to instruct the conference committee to insist upon universal transfers, and while no evidence has been presented showing that such a provision was valid and within our power under all the circumstances, yet the House has been willing to follow the judgment of the committee upon this point.

If universal transfers are really essential in the public interests, and if Congress can and ought to enforce such a condition upon the several companies, then there will be another opportunity to discuss that proposition and to enact appropriate legislation. For the present, at any rate, there appears to be an irreconcilable difference between the Senate and the House upon this question.

There is every indication that the House conferees have observed the utmost good faith and diligence in their effort to carry out the will of this body. The distinguished chairman of the committee, Mr. SMITH of Michigan, not only enjoys the confidence of the House generally, but it is well known that he entertains rigorous views upon the duty to the people upon the part of public-service corporations, and of the necessity of wise regulation. It appears to be conceded that the bill, as agreed upon, contains wise and meritorious propositions, the only objection being that it does not include a provision for universal transfers. While I have favored this provision, it is proper to say that there is some doubt as to whether it ought to be enacted, both because there has been no sufficient investigation to determine the extent to which revenues of the company would be affected and because serious doubt has been expressed as to the power of Congress to compel the several independent companies of the District of a different length and different financial ability to assume this additional burden.

Having secured a good bill, the question it now squarely presents to the House whether we will reject the conference report and send the bill back to conference. If such shall be our action, it is practically certain that there will be no legislation at this session of Congress. This will mean that another summer, and particularly another winter, will pass without street car facilities to the new Union Station. This magnificent and convenient structure is a credit to the national capital, and every facility should be afforded for the convenience of travelers. While the people of the District ought naturally to have the first consideration, yet they are not alone interested in this bill. The national capital has become more and more a political center of the country and a veritable mecca for sight-seers and tourists. The large majority of travelers do not patronize carriages or other vehicles upon leaving or entering a city. With scarcely an exception, the street car lines in every city either converge at the union station or are convenient of access. More and more women and young people travel alone and ordinarily with more or less hand baggage. In order to reach this station from the present car line involves a walk of more than a quarter of a mile, involving many discomforts during inclement weather.

The primary consideration at the inception of this legislation was to secure the extension of tracts to the Union Station, but some Members seem to have lost sight of this purpose in their struggle to secure universal transfers. One would almost suspect that some gentlemen are more anxious to attack street car companies, and at the same time to acquire notoriety, than they are to serve the people of the District. I have received a letter from Mr. Alexander Britton, chairman of committee on railroads of the Washington Board of Trade (and I suppose each Member received a similar letter), stating that there was no local demand for universal transfers, and that the people wished better and not cheaper service. I shall insert this letter in the Record at the close of my remarks.

The government of the District of Columbia is under the control of Congress. We are, if you please, the board of aldermen of this capital city. In legislation upon District matters we ought to remember that we are legislating not from the viewpoint of our own sections and States, but from the viewpoint of and for the good of the District of Columbia. I believe that a board of aldermen of a city elected by a popular vote who, under the same conditions, should refuse longer to provide this convenience for the people of their city would receive just and merited criticism at the hands of the voters. I believe that we will merit like criticisms if we longer delay favorable action upon this bill. I hope the conferees' report will be accepted, and in so doing we will discharge a plain duty to the people of the District and to those who visit the city. [Applause.]

WASHINGTON BOARD OF TRADE,
Washington, D. C., May 18, 1908.

HON. JOHN H. SMALL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In pursuance of specific and forceful directions by the Washington Board of Trade, I have the honor to urge prompt and favorable action on the report of the conferees on the bill providing for the extension of street railway lines to the Union Station.

Statements have appeared in the public prints which indicate opposition in the House when the report comes up for consideration, the opposition insisting upon universal transfers.

The Board of Trade (consisting of nearly 700 business and professional men) fairly represents the spirit of the community when it reiterates the statement that there is no local demand whatever for universal transfers, nor for reduction of fares in any form. The people want better, not cheaper service.

Herewith are recent editorials from Washington newspapers substantiating our statements with respect to the real desires of the residents of Washington.

Hoping you will support the conference report (already adopted by the Senate) and thus enable the public to comfortably reach the Union Station at an early date, I am,

Very, respectfully,

ALEX. BRITTON,
Chairman Committee on Railroads.

Mr. McGAVIN. Mr. Speaker, as one member of the District Committee I am opposed to the adoption of this conference report. Throughout the hearings that were had on this trackage bill every member of the District Committee sought to give the street railway companies and everybody interested in this proposition fair and honest treatment. We called the presidents and representatives of these street railway companies and gave them an opportunity to show some reason why they could not give the people of the District of Columbia universal transfers. Their attitude throughout the whole hearings that were had was one of brazen misstatement, intolerable indifference, and skilful evasion. [Applause.] Every time a question was put to them as to their ability to give universal transfers in the District of Columbia the questions of the different members of the committee were met with the same responses.

Now, it is not a question with me as to whether or not they ought to have universal transfers in the District of Columbia so much as it is a question of principle involved here as to whether or not the District of Columbia shall be run by the street railway companies of this District and by the Commissioners of this District, and only give to Congress the right to make necessary appropriations for carrying on the business. [Applause.]

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] put the matter very plainly and very accurately when he stated that it was all the concessions that could be had from the street car companies. [Applause.] That was all the question that there was involved in this case—the question as to what concessions we could get from the street railway companies. Imagine it! The Congress of the United States getting concessions from the street railway companies! [Applause.] The principle involved in this is worth fighting for. Now, if the people of the District of Columbia can not walk two blocks for a while in order to secure some rights which they ought to have and which the street railway companies are bound to respect, then it does not speak very well for the people of this District. And if the newspapers, instead of pointing their darts at the Members of Congress here, would direct their attention to the street railway companies perhaps they might get for the people more concessions. [Applause.] Why, every bill that comes before the District Committee of late has given to the District Commissioners some power—absolute power, rather—either to enforce or abridge the law, whatever they might see fit to do, and when the committee, after looking over the situation down there, concluded that it was dangerous to have four tracks in front of the Union Station, where crowds of people were coming in and out and cars would be going in opposite directions—that four tracks would be imperiling the limbs and lives of the people—every member of the committee thought that two tracks were sufficient; yet when they go back into conference they make some more concessions to the street railway companies.

Mr. SMALL. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGAVIN. Certainly.

Mr. SMALL. I was not listening just a moment ago, but I understand the gentleman interprets my remarks as saying that the conference committee had endeavored to obtain concessions from the street railway companies. The gentleman is wrong in that. I was referring to concessions from the Senate.

Mr. McGAVIN. If the gentleman has made an error, his apology is accepted. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the District of Columbia Committee, I wish to say that I have not heard anybody who has discussed this subject discuss it except from one standpoint, and that is from the standpoint of the citizen or the resident of the District of Columbia. The gentleman who has just preceded me has taken his text from that standpoint, and he has said that the people of the District of Columbia would no doubt be willing to continue to walk the distance between the station and the street cars in order that they may yet get the universal transfers. I speak from the standpoint of my constituents and yours, who come here throughout the year by the hundreds and thousands, and they are compelled, and not the citizens of the District of Columbia, to walk between the railroad station and the street car tracks. More than that. In the interest of the citizen of the District of Columbia you ask this universal transfer that he may be benefited a few pennies, and at the same time you ask to impose upon my constituent and upon yours that he be compelled to pay from 50 cents to a dollar to find his way to a hotel, the location of which he knows not, by hiring a cab, instead of finding a street car at the door of the station. It has been said also, and then corrected, that a concession is asked of the railroads. I do not stand for the street railroads; I stand for the people. But I say that when Congress comes and asks that the street car people surrender a constitutional privilege, if they grant it, it is then a concession upon their part. But I say to you that from my investigation into this matter I find the street car people do not want to go to the Union Station. I say to you that, in my belief, it will cost them three-quarters of a million of dollars to get there, and when they have gone there they will not be benefited to the extent of one-tenth of 1 per cent on their additional investment. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is somewhat similar to a question with which, in a modest way, I was identified in my own home city; a contest which began some years ago, to ascertain whether the street railways owned the city or whether the people were in control. That contest in the city of Chicago has resulted in the granting of franchises, taken most eagerly by the capitalists, giving not only universal transfers, under which you can ride for more than 25 miles, but in addition 55 per cent of the net receipts to the city of Chicago. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. MANN. No; I will not. The gentleman knows that that will only consume my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The question is as to securing an extension of the street railway tracks.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will pardon me. The question is whether we will sell our birthright, which is control of the street railways, for the mess of pottage which the gentleman from Kansas proposes, a little line extending to the Union Station.

The citizens of Chicago, who were more vitally interested in that question than the citizens of Washington are, for years "stood pat," refusing to give away their control of the question, insisting that they should control the franchises which would be granted. The street car service ran down there as it has run down here. The street railway companies insisted that no better service could be given, or would be given, unless they obtained franchises on their own terms. They refused to extend tracks unless they could obtain franchises on their own terms; but in the end, when they were met with the determined resistance of the people and the municipal authorities, they seized eagerly those franchises, which provided not only for universal transfers, not only for the 55 per cent of net receipts, but many other provisions, including the expenditure of millions of dollars. Can we not do as much as the city of Chicago did? [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, the street railway companies of this city should be required at the earliest possible day to begin the extension of the service provided for in this conference report.

After all, it is important that street railway service be extended to the Union Station and in the sections of the city that now ask such service. We provide for this extension in this conference report.

It is little short of an outrage to the people of Washington and those who in large numbers daily visit the capital city that these transportation companies are not now carrying the people to all parts of the city and to the Union Station.

One day some two weeks ago I stood at the junction of Delaware avenue and C street, under an umbrella, in a cold, drizzling rain for half an hour watching these street railway companies dump passengers for the Union Station off in the mud and rain a quarter of a mile from their destination.

I saw young girls, with large and heavy suit cases; I saw mothers with a baby in one arm and a bundle in the other; I saw old, gray-haired women, with heavy satchels, all get out into the mud and rain and find their way as best they could to the station.

For the same fare of 4½ cents all these unhappy passengers should have been carried by these companies to the portico of the station, where they could get off the cars in the shelter of the station.

As I left the scene, where these unhappy and unpardonable incidents are multiplied in some form every hour in the day, I said, "I shall do my part before this Congress adjourns to stop this and to require these street railway companies to carry these passengers and such bundles as they may have with them to their destination, at the door of the Union Station—with universal transfers, if I can; without universal transfers, if I must."

The House conferees have insisted for months on the position of the House. We have held out for universal transfers and supervision especially. We got all we could get. The Senate refused to yield on the transfer question. We yielded in the last moment, in order that in the closing hours of this session we might require these companies to do what they have never asked to do, to do what they do not to-day want to do, to build tracks to the Union Station and in other directions as provided in the conference report.

We require them to expend about $2,000,000 of money in making these extensions provided for. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I now yield two minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CARY].

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the District of Columbia Committee I am in favor of universal transfers and thoroughly believe that it is the only proper way to handle the people of this District in the matter of transportation. I have had my attention called to several lines in the city where passengers pay two fares to reach a certain point. Only the other day several gentlemen spoke to me about getting on a yellow car in front of the Capitol and riding up to Eighth street or Fourteenth street and asking for a transfer to the same car line to reach the Buffalo Bill show at Fifteenth and H streets NE. They were refused, and told that they would have to pay another fare. It was the same line, and I can not understand why the people of the District of Columbia should pay two fares when they ought to ride for one. For this reason I insisted on universal transfers being put in this bill.

I asked General Harries, who is president of the Washington Railway and Electric Company, if he was willing to give a transfer on a straight 5-cent fare, and he said "Yes, if people would ask for the transfer when they paid the fare." I said, "Then they would get the tickets and the straight 5-cent fare mixed." He replied he did not know about that. I said, "When a man gets on a car, he sometimes forgets to ask for the transfer, and about the time he does ask for it the conductor would have punched his ticket and he couldn't pay the extra penny."

General Harries said "No." To this I answered that we would have to increase the police force of Washington—just about double it—to attend to the disputes that would take place on the street cars. Yet some gentlemen say that the people of the city of Washington do not ask for universal transfers. I say that they do, and that they should have them. [Applause.]

I told General Harries at this time that a man with two tickets in his pocket would use them both before he would pay a nickel, my idea being that the cash looked larger in his eyes than the ticket, and that the company would be the gainer by the transaction. General Harries admitted that this might be so, but that the auditing and accounting of the transfers would be quite an expense. I admit that I can not understand the logic of General Harries's position, for one would naturally imagine that the company had rather receive the equivalent of 8 cents in tickets than a straight fare of 5 cents, the more especially as General Harries has repeatedly said that he would not oppose the universal-transfer system. However, the ways of corporations and corporation managers are past finding out; at least for plain people who are not familiar with corporation methods.

Closely allied to these corporation interests, apparently, is the Washington Board of Trade, which busied itself when the conference report on the extension of the street railway lines to the Union Station was expected to come before the House. On the 18th instant a letter bearing the signature of Alexander Britton, as "chairman of committee on railroads," was sent to each Member of this body. In the course of this letter Mr. Britton said that the board of trade, consisting of nearly 700 business and professional men, "fairly represents the spirit of the community when it reiterates the statement that there is no local demand whatever for universal transfers, nor for reduction of fares in any form. The people want better, not cheaper, service."

I fully agree with Mr. Britton in part but not all of the sentence last quoted. The people do want a better service, but they want also a cheaper service, and it is an insult to the intelligence of this House to expect it to believe otherwise. The "700 business and professional men" who form the Board of Trade of Washington are, with few exceptions, men of means, to whom a nickel more or less is a matter of no earthly consideration. These gentlemen have their private carriage or automobile, or both, and are not dependent upon the service of the street cars or affected by the price they pay for it. In these circumstances they have little, if any, interest in a universal-transfer system, but it should not be forgotten that Washington contains many thousands of men and women employed at nominal salaries who have need of every nickel they possess, and in their philosophy it can truly be said that a nickel saved is a nickel earned.

On the day that Mr. Britton's letter was received by Members of the House the Central Labor Union of this city placed itself on record as favoring universal transfers. President Lorch, in his address to the delegates, pointed out the necessity for legislation of this character. "Hundreds of our members," he said, "reside just within the District limits and are forced to pay a double fare to reach their work. This means that 20 cents daily, at least, is taken from the families of these laboring people and placed in the pockets of the corporations. I favor trackage to the Union Station also, but believe I am voicing the sentiments of the 50,000 men of the District when I say that the universal-transfer provision is to be preferred to any other regulation relative to the street-car system."

The machinists' union, representing 1,500 families, has gone on record for this provision, and I am quite certain that the 30,000 employees in the Executive Departments of Washington also favor it.

How feebly then, Mr. Speaker, compares the "700 business and professional men," who compose the Washington Board of Trade, with this vast army of organized labor and departmental employees who desire the universal-transfer system, and whose interests I am trying to represent. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I now yield one minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS].

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I visit the city of Chicago frequently, and I must confess to this House that I was much edified by the addresses of the gentlemen from Illinois, all of whom have heaped maledictions on the street car people and the street car service of the District of Columbia—presenting a spectacle of representatives from a city that for years has had the worst street car system in the world [laughter and applause] abusing the service in a city which, in my judgment, has the best street car system in the world.

I opposed the bill brought in here some time ago for placing temporary tracks to the Union Station, because I felt that it would hinder and postpone the laying of the permanent tracks. The result of that opposition, it seems, which was participated in by other gentlemen of the committee, has been to obtain an arrangement for laying permanent tracks to the Union Station. That is what we were contending for.

I am heartily in sympathy with this measure. I do not believe that there is any demand, either from the outside or from the citizens of the District of Columbia, for universal transfers. I have never heard of it myself. I want these tracks laid to the Union Station in order that the 100,000 Republicans who will come here at the next inauguration will have means by which they can get from the station to their destination by the street car lines. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I now yield one minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I want to corroborate the statement of my colleague from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] in relation to the comparative efficiency of the street-car service of the city of Chicago and of the capital city of the Government. I am frequently in the city of Chicago, and I undertake to say that Washington, with its 300,000 population, has infinitely better, cleaner, and cheaper service than the great city of Chicago with its 2,000,000 of people. [Applause.]

Now, I am for this conference report. This question has been held up and has been in controversy for three months, and I would have been glad if we could have gotten universal transfers. We could not do it, and the question is now, Shall we vote down the conference report and withhold from the public in and out of the city of Washington this important convenience and carry this wrangle over to be renewed during the next session of Congress, or shall we end the controversy now? I think the conference report ought to be agreed to, and let the question of universal transfers be taken up in the future. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to answer the last two gentlemen from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER and Mr. LANDIS], who cast aspersions on the street-car service in the city of Chicago. I do not live in Chicago, and I do not know about the facts, but one thing I do know and that is that the people of my district are not taxed to help pay the bills of the city of Chicago, like yours and mine are for the people of the District of Columbia. [Applause.] If the Government paid one-half the bills of the city of Chicago, then they might have a great deal more than they have. Thank God, they have got some men on the floor of this House who do not bow and cringe every time a corporate whip is cracked in their presence. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, talk about holding up the tracks! Who held them up? Four years ago a bill was introduced in this House and in the Senate to permit the Great Falls and Old Dominion Railroad Company, a corporation of the State of Virginia, to put tracks to the Union Station, and tracks all over East Washington, and tracks to the navy-yard.

And provided that—

The said Great Falls and Old Dominion Railroad Company, and all other street railways in the District of Columbia, shall reciprocally issue free transfers at all connecting or intersecting points on their respective lines.

Four years ago that bill had the indorsement of this House, but not its action. Who were the stockholders, who were the promoters, who are the owners of that railroad away out in Virginia with $2,000,000 of capital, as reported by a sworn statement to Congress? Senator S. B. ELKINS, who owns 9,135 shares; Hon. John R. McLean, Washington, 10,351 shares—men of great financial resources. They came here and knocked at the door of Congress for permission to go to the Union Station to lay tracks to keep "the poor children" referred to by my friend and conferee from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] from walking to the station. [Applause and laughter.]

Those tracks would have been there now if it had not been for the autocratic power of the street railway companies in the city of Washington to hold up the Congress of the United States in its desire to pass that bill. The House committee never had strength enough to report it. What happened? They say they can not give free transfers here in the city, in the crowded, congested parts of it. Well, if they can not, what did they do in this particular case in order to defeat a bill to put tracks to the station? Turned around and gave that company of these great millionaires a universal transfer over the Capital Traction lines, which remains a fact to-day. If you want to go to church from the navy-yard 4 miles out in Virginia, the Capital Traction Company will send you there on 4½ cents, the cost of a ticket. If you want to go from this Capitol down to the Catholic Cathedral, on Ninth street, or any other church on Ninth street, the Capital Traction Company has a rake-off of one ticket and the Washington and Electric Railway Company a rake-off of another. [Why did they make this rebate? It is nothing else. Nobody can go from here to the Aqueduct Bridge and connect with the Old Dominion line except on the Capital Traction. Nobody can go out on the Virginia line of the Old Dominion except to go on its lines. In other words—

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I have heard it stated that to grant universal transfers would bankrupt and confiscate the property of one of the companies. I have great confidence in the judgment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], and I know that he is informed on these questions. I would like to hear his opinion on that.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, any man who says that and knows anything about it has already bankrupted his veracity. [Applause and laughter.] Of course this remark does not apply to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman yield? Will the gentleman please define what he means by universal transfers before he gets through.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I would like to have a little more light on that.

Mr. SIMS. I must proceed in my own way, because I have so much to cover. To prevent competition and prevent these great capitalists who had the money from building tracks to this station the Capital Traction Company made a rebate which they are giving to-day to the Old Dominion Company by way of a free transfer by which they take you from the navy-yard to the end of the line in Georgetown for 2½ cents. Having no law to force them to give universal transfers they use that power to throttle competition and keep other companies out of this city which might enjoy these charity franchises which we give them. To-day, when you vote for this conference report, you vote to ratify present conditions. What else did our conferees do? When we spoke of providing for a free transfer, the railroad people said, "Oh, there will be a whole lot of fraud, people will get the transfers and sell them." We put in a provision when we provided for the transfer to make it a crime to sell or give away a transfer, because we made it a crime not to issue or receive one. When my noble conferees knocked out the free transfer provision, they kept in the provision creating the crime. What will you think of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] and his 100,000 Republicans when they come here to see Uncle Joe inaugurated? [Applause.] What will they think if this bill becomes a law, and they go down to the police station and see some poor negro or some poor white person in the workhouse because he has violated the provision making it a crime to give away a contemptible little piece of paper called "a transfer?"

I know you want "Uncle Joe" nominated, therefore I am speaking in reference to the sentiment of the House. If you nominate and elect your heart's choice, and the Senate refuses to concur and send the tracks down to the station after pulling out of the pockets of the people about $6,000,000 in money and property to help build this station, we will walk in the mud up to our shoulders to help inaugurate the old commoner from North Carolina, for he looks like he is not afraid of a little mud anyway. He has been here thirty four or five years and never yet has he surrendered to a corporation. If we elect W. J. Bryan, we will feel so good that we will not care whether there are any tracks to the station or not, just so the road to heaven is left unobstructed. I ask every man to vote against this ignoble surrender.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has nine minutes remaining.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield one minute to a member of the committee [Mr. NYE].

Mr. NYE. Mr. Speaker, I shall support this conference report because I dare not take the responsibility of standing in the way of securing important legislation at this session. I shall support this report because I believe the conference committee have used every honest and faithful effort to secure something that should be beneficial to the people of Washington and of all the people, and I do not believe that any man in this House should take the responsibility to cut off legislation entirely. I do not understand that by adopting this report we concede anything. The law remains the same. We have the right to alter, amend, or repeal charters at any time; we can deal with the question of universal transfers as an independent question at the next session. We waive no right, we lose no right, and I think we should secure what we can secure in the interest of the people at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is a very clear and plain question. The conference report comes here with all its provisions satisfactory to all of the conferees, as I understand from the discussion, save the one proposition of universal transfers, a proposition, as I understand it, of doubtful constitutionality. I do not plume myself, Mr. Speaker, as a constitutional lawyer; fortunately we have gentlemen in this House who are such admittedly. Now, the only proposition on which the gentleman from Tennessee opposes the confirmation of this report is that it has been impossible to compel one railroad, one corporation, to give universal transfers for the carrying of a passenger upon the cars of another corporation, and in his earnest desire to accomplish this questionable constitutional provision he overlooks the rights, he overlooks the needs and requirements not alone of the Members of this House, who need to use the railroads constantly, but of all our constituents, and it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly plain that the railroad companies, as the gentleman from Michigan has stated, are asking nothing of Congress. They have not asked the privilege of laying further tracks. It is rather unusual for corporations to ask the privilege of paying out a couple of million dollars, but we are asking them and propose under proper restrictions that they be permitted to lay tracks to the Union Station for the accommodation of tens of thousands of citizens of this Republic, who are coming here every day, every week, all the time, and when the simple proposition is a question of doubtful constitutionality, shall we subject all the people of the country who visit this beautiful capital to constant inconvenience for months to come? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen seem to forget that the Senate is a coordinate branch of Congress and that we can not pass legislation unless that legislation meets with the assent of the majority of that body. Now, we have had four points in difference in this bill, every one of them in favor of the people of this District and against the railroad companies. The conferees on the part of the House, after weeks of effort, have gained three of those points. They come in with a report that they are unable to get the Senate to agree on the fourth one, in my opinion one of the least important.

They have preserved in this bill the sixteenth section, which provides that these railroad companies shall furnish clean and healthy cars to transport the people without crowding as fast as possible, not exceeding 15 miles per hour in the city, and shall have safe and proper appliances and all that sort of thing, and then refers the question to the Interstate Commerce Commission to make proper rules and regulations to enforce the provisions of that section; and, in addition to that, it imposes a fine, I think, of $1,000 for every violation of these rules and regulations. That is accomplishing a great deal. I have heard much in the years that have passed about the cars being overcrowded, about the companies furnishing more frequent service, running the cars more frequently to accommodate the people. Now, we leave this question subject to the rules that shall be imposed on these railroad companies by the Interstate Commerce Commission as to the running of these cars, as to the proper appliances for the safety of the passengers, as to the cleanliness and the accommodations for all the people that desire to ride. I hope the report will be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OLCOTT].

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal said that I think is not germane to this question. We have had the pleasure of listening to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] in one of his usual speeches about corporations. But the only question to be considered is as to whether we will, as expeditiously as we can, give the people who live here in the District of Columbia, and the people who are constantly visiting here, better car service than we have now. Remember that the railroad companies never asked to make these extensions. They say they do not want to make them, are quite desirous to let things stand exactly as they are, and have not any particular care as to whether we can get to the Union Station or not. The only possible advantage to the railroad companies is that perhaps a few people who now use cabs will use cars afterwards, and the amount of money involved in that is so trivial as to be scarcely worthy of consideration. When the bill was before the committee in the House I was opposed to the present system of trackage provided for the new plaza, and we in the House committee had mapped out an entirely different plan. Notwithstanding all the engineers, the engineers of the District of Columbia, the engineers employed by the railroad, and outside engineers, said that our plans were not practicable, we said that we were going to insist upon them, as anything in these days was practicable in the present condition of the science of engineering. The House receded and adopted this Senate plan. The Senate plan is strictly against the railroads' interests in that regard, because it provides for more tracks, and certainly costs the railroads more money. In order to secure proper, convenient, and respectable treatment to this great capital this conference report should be accepted.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I want to make one suggestion in conclusion, and that is this: I repeat that the conferees on the part of the House have sought in the utmost good faith to carry out what the House has asked us to do. It is rarely ever that conferees are expected to secure a favorable report on all the matters in dispute. We have not been able to secure universal transfers for reasons already given. This bill provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission is to have charge of the street railways of the District. The Commission will have time during the coming vacation to investigate the subject of universal transfers; and if, in their judgment, it is feasible and legal, they can so report to Congress at the coming session next December; and I say to you, as a member of this committee, that if the Commission so reports, I for one will favor the passage of a bill for universal transfers. I want to say one thing further. In my judgment, unless you adopt this conference report, it means that there will be no tracks to the Union Station for some time to come.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seem to have it.

Mr. MADDEN. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 165, nays 123, answered "present" 7, not voting 92, as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. McMILLAN with Mr. STANLEY.

Mr. THRELL with Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN.

Mr. RODENBERG with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky.

Mr. HUBBARD of Iowa with Mr. GREGG.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut with Mr. FAVROT.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts with Mr. ASHBROOK.

Mr. DAWSON with Mr. LLOYD.

Mr. BARCHFELD with Mr. GOULDEN.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7184. An act for the relief of citizens of the United States and the Philippine Islands;

S. 7172. An act concerning the transportation of passengers coastwise;

S. 1508. An act granting an increase of pension to Lydia P. Wint;

S. 671. An act to construct a road along the south bank of the Anacostia River; and

S. 565. An act to prevent and punish the desecration, mutilation, or improper use of the flag of the United States of America.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6190. An act authorizing a resurvey of certain townships in the State of Wyoming.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 20120. An act to authorize the construction of a railroad siding to the United States navy-yard, and for other purposes;

H. R. 15641. An act for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4639) to provide for participation by the United States in an international exposition to be held at Tokyo, Japan, in 1912.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 565. An act to prevent and punish the desecration, mutilation, or improper use of the flag of the United States of America—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 671. An act to construct a road along the south bank of the Anacostia River—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 7172. An act concerning the transportation of passengers coastwise—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

APPALACHIAN AND WHITE MOUNTAIN FOREST RESERVATION.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21986, to suspend the rules, and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the following bill, to suspend the rules, and pass the same. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21986) to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the conservation of the navigability of navigable rivers, and to provide for the appointment of a commission.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of the Congress of the United States is hereby given to each of the several States of the Union which may wish to do so to enter into such agreement or compact, not in conflict with any law of the United States, as it may deem desirable or necessary with any other State or States for the purpose of conserving the forests and the water supply of the States entering into such agreement or compact.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the National Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with any State or group of States, when requested to do so, by supplying expert advice on forest preservation, utilization, and administration, and on the reforestation of denuded areas. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, on such conditions as he deems wise, to stipulate and agree with the owner or owners thereof to administer and protect, for a definite term of years, any private forest lands situated upon the watershed of any navigable river; but such stipulation or agreement shall provide that the owner of such private lands shall cut and remove the timber thereon only under such rules and regulations, to be expressed in the stipulation or agreement, as will provide for the protection of the forest in the aid of navigation: Provided, That in no case shall the United States be liable for any damage resulting from fire or any other cause.

SEC. 3. That a commission is hereby appointed, to be called the National Forest Commission, and to be composed as follows: Five members of the Senate, to be appointed by the presiding officer thereof, and five members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker.

SEC. 4. That the duties of said commission shall be to investigate all questions tending to show the direct and substantial connection, if any, between the preservation of the forests within the watersheds of the navigable rivers having their sources in the White Mountains and Southern Appalachian Mountains, and the navigability of said rivers. And in case the commission shall determine that such direct and substantial connection exists, it shall then be its duty to ascertain to what extent, if at all, it may be necessary for the Government of the United States to acquire land within the watersheds referred to, the number of acres of such land, and the probable cost, or whether it may be advisable, if within the power of the United States, to exercise, without purchase, such supervision over such watersheds as may be necessary to conserve the navigability of the rivers proceeding therefrom.

SEC. 5. That the National Forest Commission, herein established, shall report to the President of the United States not later than January 1, 1909, and their report shall be forthwith transmitted by the President to Congress, with such recommendations as he may deem proper.

SEC. 6. That said commission may expend not to exceed $20,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the employment of such stenographers and clerical assistants as may be needed, and for the actual necessary expenses of the members and employees while engaged in the performance of their duties, and also for the actual necessary expenses of such experts as may be requested, by a vote of the commission, to appear before them.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LAMB. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, a second is ordered. The gentleman from Kansas is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Virginia is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas what this bill virtually does—appoint a commission to consider the matter, or do what?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi asks me what this bill virtually does. In reply, I will say briefly that it provides, in the first section, that the consent of the United States is given to any State to enter into any compact or agreement, not in violation of the law of the United States, with any other State or States. The second section makes an appropriation of $100,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into cooperative arrangements with the States or with owners of private woodlands for the administration and utilization of the same. The remaining sections of the bill provide for the appointment of a commission of ten Members, five to be appointed by the Speaker of the House, and five to be appointed by the presiding officer of the Senate; these ten to take into consideration all the questions relating to the proposed forest reservations of the White and Appalachian Mountains.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The main object of my question was to ascertain whether—and I thought it was probably—it was to provide that, or whether the Republican Congress was simply going out into creating another commission.

Mr. SCOTT. Then the gentleman is satisfied with the answer I have given.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SCOTT. I desire to close the debate myself, and I would prefer gentlemen having questions to ask to defer them until that time. I desire to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, this is the third Congress which has given careful consideration to the question of the advisability of entering upon a national forestry policy which shall include other territory than that set aside for forestry purposes taken from the public domain. A bill was passed by the Senate in the Fifty-ninth Congress, and a similar bill has been passed by the Senate during this session of the Sixtieth Congress, providing for a broad general policy of establishing these reservations. The Fifty-ninth Congress appropriated $25,000 for the purpose of making investigations and reporting them to this Congress. That appropriation was expended under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, and a voluminous report was made, which recommended the purchase of 600,000 acres of land in the White Mountain region and 5,000,000 acres in the Southern Appalachian Mountain region. Several bills were introduced at or soon after the convening of this Congress proposing, in different ways, to establish this policy and make an appropriation to put it into effect. These bills were considered by the Committee on Agriculture, and hearings were given, at which appeared a large number of people interested in protecting the forests, in the conservation of water power, and in developing and maintaining the navigability of streams. At one of these hearings there were present representations from sixteen States, including the governors of two States and delegations having not only full authority to represent officially the other fourteen, but also to represent many of the largest industries located in them. I refer to this hearing and those who attended it to indicate the interest which is being taken in this movement—that it is in no sense local, but is practically as widespread as the country itself.

The hearing to which I have just referred was given while the Committee on Agriculture was considering the bill providing for appropriations for that Department, and while this work was going on a resolution was introduced by Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia questioning the constitutionality of the General Government purchasing lands and setting them apart for the purposes defined in the forestry programme. This resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and remained in its hands nearly two months, so that it was not until the 20th of April that the Committee on Agriculture was enabled to take up this work and consider it on its merits. This was due to the fact that it was necessary to rewrite and reintroduce the bills which had already been presented, so that they would comply with the finding on the subject which was made by the Judiciary Committee. The opinion rendered by that committee was, in effect, that the United States could not constitutionally purchase lands for the express purpose of creating forestry reservations or conserving water power or for any other purpose than to develop and maintain the navigability of streams, and that this connection should be clearly defined.

After considering the revised bills referred to for a considerable time, it became apparent that there was much difference of opinion in the committee, not only as to the advisability of undertaking a forestry policy, but also as to the methods of bringing it about. It has been suggested that, as far as possible, forests should be protected by the States or by an association of States covering the particular forests under consideration; others have believed that the Federal Government should cooperate with the States or with individual owners in protecting and conserving the forests, and a third party has contended that the Federal Government should undertake a general system of buying lands, not only for the purpose of protecting watersheds, but for general forestry purposes, contending that the preservation of the forests would not only protect the navigability of streams, conserve and give uniformity to water powers, but that it would be a source of material profit to the Government for all time to come.

The bill which has been given most attention, not only by the officials of the Forestry Bureau, but by others who have been heartily interested in this work, is known as the Currier-Lever bill. The committee, by a small majority, voted adversely on reporting this bill, but the sentiment in favor of doing something was so strong that it was decided to appoint a special subcommittee to prepare and report a substitute bill. The result of that action is the bill H. R. 21986, which was reported to the House and is now under consideration. This bill provides for three distinct purposes: First, it enables the States in which forests are located—

Mr. SHERLEY. Right at that point will the gentleman tell the House whether the question was considered of the power of Congress to give blanket right to the States to enter into such an agreement? If the gentleman will permit me to suggest, the Constitution provides that no State shall, without the consent of Congress, enter into any agreement or compact with another State. Now, I am not going to take the gentleman's time unnecessarily.

Mr. WEEKS. I am not a lawyer, and it will be idle for me to indulge in a constitutional argument, but I believe that States may enter into agreements which would enable them to take up a forestry policy in cooperation, as well as individually.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is no question as to the right of the Government to ratify such an agreement, but the question is whether you can give a blanket agreement in advance.

Mr. WEEKS. I can not answer that question definitely, but I think we can.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if that matter was considered in the committee.

Mr. WEEKS. It was so considered, and I believe it is the opinion of the committee that it can be done.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. That we can give blanket consent in advance without knowing what the agreement will be?

Mr. WEEKS. I think so.

To continue what I was about to say when interrupted by the gentleman from Kentucky, the committee decided to insert section 1 of this bill. Personally, I do not believe that it will be in any way operative or effective. Such a programme has never been undertaken by States acting together, and it seems to me that the best opinion indicates that any project of this kind should be undertaken by the General Government rather than by a few States cooperating for such purpose. I do not hesitate to say that I believe this legislation should be made general in character rather than applicable to the two regions constantly referred to in proceedings which have taken place heretofore and in this bill. The present necessity seems to be greater in these regions than elsewhere, but there is no reason why the navigation of rivers rising in other States should not be protected as well as those located in New England or in the Southern Appalachian region, and when this forestry policy is properly determined it will, in my judgment, include every section of the United States. I would have preferred this bill without section 1, and should have so written it if I could have done so.

In its second section the bill provides for an appropriation of $100,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with any State or group of States or with individuals, supplying them with expert advice and undertaking with them a policy of administration of forestry lands. The Secretary is authorized to enter into agreements making regulations for the manner of cutting and removing timber and for protecting forestry lands against fires, but it very properly provides that in no case shall the United States be liable for damages in case fire results. This idea has been a part of practically every bill which has been introduced, and without doubt it should become a part of the permanent policy of the Government when this programme is worked out in all its details. The same general benefits may be obtained from the protection of watersheds through private ownership as through Government ownership, provided the Government can stipulate the methods used in removing timber.

Section 3 of the bill provides for a National Forest Commission, to be composed of ten members—five to be appointed by the President of the Senate and five by the Speaker of the House. It is desirable, in my judgment, that this be done. Every Member of Congress knows how difficult it is to properly consider 1 per cent of the legislation which is proposed for Congressional action. Even many of the members of the Committee on Agriculture, who have given considerable attention to this subject, have not yet determined in their own minds just how this policy should be undertaken to bring about the desired results and at the same time protect the Government.

I think it will be difficult to understand the necessities for the inauguration of this policy without visiting the sections referred to and giving much time on the ground to the whole question. Even those members of the committee who are familiar with these regions and with the damage which is being done through the unscientific and destructive manner in which timber is being removed are not absolutely sure in what way the Government can provide for the purposes of this programme, which eventually will mean appropriations involving at least a hundred millions of dollars, and probably much more, without incurring the liability of purchasing lands which are not necessary or desirable or involving the Government in expenditures which should not under any circumstances be made. Therefore I say when we are instituting a new policy of as great future significance as I hope this will be, it is eminently wise that the fullest investigations be made before any considerable appropriations are made. It is proposed that the National Forest Commission authorized in this bill shall report to the President of the United States not later than January 1, 1909, and the bill provides a suitable appropriation to pay the expenses of the investigation.

One of the most significant movements which have been made during this Administration was the calling together of the governors of all the States to consider the conservation of our natural resources. There is no doubt in the mind of any person who has given the subject the slightest consideration that we have been extremely prodigal in the past, and that we are approaching the time when it will be necessary to carefully conserve water powers and other means of replacing power which has heretofore been furnished by fuel supplies. This movement is simply an incident of this broader policy which was advanced at the recent conference at the White House, only it is an incident which preceded the undertaking of the broader policy, and there is no doubt in my mind about our establishing a forestry policy which will not only preserve the natural beauties of the mountain region, conserve the water powers on our streams, protect—to a certain degree, at least—their navigability, but will also prove a source of large profit to the Government. While I regret that this bill does not take a more decided stand, does not mean a longer step in advance; while it is apparent to anyone that it is inadequate to supply a suitable basis for this policy as it will finally be undertaken, still I consider it a step in advance, a means to keep before the public the desirability of the whole question. It will have an educational effect on Congress itself, and through it, or as a result of it, at the next session of Congress or in some early future Congress we will have instituted this most beneficent and useful public policy. For those reasons I am going to give the bill my support, regretting, as I do, that it does not furnish greater encouragement to the friends of our national forests.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. CURRIER].

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, this bill comes as a great disappointment to the friends of the forest preservation in the East, but it is a step in the right direction, and I shall vote for the proposition. We shall not relax our efforts, however, to bring about the policy in this House of purchasing tracts of forest land for the purpose of preserving the navigability of the navigable streams. One reason which leads me to support this bill is a provision in the bill which reads that the commission shall report what lands ought to be acquired within the watersheds of the country, the number of acres of such lands, and the probable cost to conserve the navigability of the rivers.

The forest reserves in the West are said to be worth $1,500,000,000, all located west of the Mississippi River. The bill which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] and myself introduced calls for an appropriation of one-tenth of 1 per cent of that amount to establish reserves for the purpose of preserving the navigability of streams east of the Mississippi River, and, in our belief, the ultimate expenditure necessary to acquire the proper land would not exceed 1 per cent of the value of the lands held in forest reserve west of the Mississippi River.

It is said that we have never acquired lands for forest-reserve purposes by direct purchase from the Treasury. That is true. But what difference does it make to the taxpayers of this country whether you appropriate money directly from the Treasury to secure the lands, or take property easily convertible into cash and appropriate that? If these lands were sold, they would be sold for the benefit of all the taxpayers in the country, and $1,500,000,000 would be put into the Treasury.

It would have been infinitely better, in thousands of cases, had the Government purchased lands for forest purposes in the Far West, instead of allowing private owners to exchange lands for similar lands in other sections. [Applause.] Under that provision tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of acres of cut-over land have been exchanged for virgin timber growth. The Government would have saved millions if it had purchased directly from the Treasury instead of allowing this exchange of lands. The rivers flowing into the Pacific have their headwaters protected by vast tracts of land included in national forest reserves, but the rivers flowing into the Atlantic, though of tenfold greater value for navigable purposes, are without protection.

Opposition in Congress to the well-settled policy of improving the rivers and harbors of the country no longer exists. Many fail to realize that in no way can money be spent more wisely to that end than in preserving the forests on the great mountain ranges—forests which are nature's own storage reservoirs. Millions of dollars could be dispensed with in every river and harbor bill but for the fact that rivers and harbors, year by year, are filled up with silt brought down by freshets from the deforested slopes of mountain ranges. The most economical way in the world to preserve the navigability of your rivers is to preserve your mountain forests. How can any reasonable man insist that it is a constitutional, proper, and wise expenditure of money from the Federal Treasury continually to dredge the rivers and harbors located in the various States to remove the silt carried down by the floods caused largely by the destruction of the forests, and unconstitutional, improper, and unwise to appropriate money from the Federal Treasury to keep the silt from going into the rivers by establishing forest reserves which will, to a great extent, prevent these floods? Proper to dredge out a channel, but improper to prevent its filling up again. The mere statement of such a proposition refutes it. [Applause.]

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. POLLARD].

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Speaker, while this bill does not entirely express my views as to what action Congress should take, yet I propose to support it. The Committee on Agriculture has been devoting time more or less all winter to the consideration of this subject. Shortly after we began consideration of the appropriation bill, at the opening of Congress, we temporarily set aside that bill and devoted one day to the consideration of this subject and invited the people living in sections affected by this bill to come before us and be heard. We have since had hearings covering parts of three days on the subject. Before our committee there were presented three distinct propositions—one looking toward the purchase of the watersheds of these streams in order to conserve the flow of water of navigable streams, from the Treasury another looking to the purchase of the watersheds of these streams out of the earnings of the forest reserves, and another proposition looking to the supervision by the Government over these watersheds without the necessity of purchasing them. The last Congress appointed a commission and appropriated $25,000 to investigate the watersheds of these two mountain ranges and was directed to report back to Congress their findings. In their report, on page 32, the Commission states that there are 75,000,000 acres of land in that area that ought to be acquired in order to give full protection to the watersheds in the Southern Appalachians. This same report goes on to say that the average price of that land will be $3.50 per acre. The report also states that there are approximately two and one-quarter millions of acres in the White Mountains that can be purchased for $6 per acre.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the adoption of any of the bills looking to the purchase of these areas ultimately will lead to the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars. It will cost the Government before we get through more than we will expend in the construction of the Panama Canal. Consequently, this committee felt that before we launched the Government on a policy looking to the expenditure of vast sums of money we should first go down there and look the ground over for ourselves, so that when we brought the bill before Congress we would be in a position to state with authority from our own investigation what the facts were and how much it would be necessary to purchase in order to accomplish the object sought. For that reason I am in favor of the pending bill.

Mr. Speaker, I will, with the permission of the House, submit herewith as a part of my remarks the bill that I introduced on this subject (H. R. 21767) to create forest reserves outside of existing national forests in order to conserve the waters of the navigable streams, and for other purposes, which is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby directed to appoint a commission of five men, whose duty it shall be to make an investigation of the watersheds of the United States not included in existing national forests which contain the sources of navigable streams and report to him by particular description what parts of these watersheds have a direct and substantial connection with the conservation and improvement of the navigability of rivers actually navigable in whole or in part.

Sec. 2. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to declare, by proclamation, such parts of these watersheds having a direct connection with the conservation and improvement of the navigability of navigable streams as may be particularly described by the commission, provided for in section 1 of this act, as parts of the forest reserves of the United States. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to make all needful rules and regulations for the supervision of said forest reserves. The object of such supervision shall be to conserve and improve the navigability of navigable streams by preserving the growth of immature timber, by preventing an unwarranted destruction of timber by wasteful methods of cutting the same, by reforesting cut-over or denuded lands best suited for forest purposes in such manner as may be agreed upon with the owner thereof, and to protect the same from the ravages of fire. Any person, firm, or corporation that violates any of the provisions of this act, or the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture as herein provided, shall be subject to a fine of not less than $1,000 or imprisonment for not less than six months for each and every offense.

Sec. 3. That whenever any owner of forest lands sustains any financial loss as a result of the application of the provisions of this act to his property or seriously injure the value of his property, he may make application to the chief forester having supervision over the forest reserve of which his forest lands may be a part, or to the Chief of the Bureau of Forestry, Washington, D. C., for compensation therefor. Upon the receipt of such application for compensation the chief forester, or such person as the Chief of the Bureau of Forestry may direct, shall make a careful investigation of all the facts in question, and if possible make an amicable settlement with the owner, and report to the Chief of the Bureau of Forestry the terms of settlement. If settlement is agreed upon, together with a detailed statement of all the facts in the case, or where it is impossible to reach an agreement, what, in his opinion, would be a fair compensation to the owner. If the Secretary of Agriculture approves said terms of settlement, he shall cause warrants to be drawn in favor of said owner upon the Treasurer of the United States, to be paid out of any funds appropriated by Congress for the maintenance of the Forest Service. If the owner of said forest lands and the representative of the Forest Service are unable to agree upon the amount of compensation that should be allowed, or if, in his opinion, the amount of compensation is excessive, the Chief of the Bureau of Forestry shall direct the appointment of a board of three appraisers, one to be appointed by the Chief of the Bureau of Forestry, one to be appointed by the owner of the forest lands in question, and the two appraisers thus selected to choose the third; and said board of appraisers shall determine what, in their opinion, would be fair compensation to the owner of the forest. When a majority of the appraisers agree upon the amount of compensation that should be allowed, they shall report the same to the Chief of the Bureau of Forestry, who, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, shall cause a warrant to be drawn in favor of the owner for the amount of compensation as determined by the board of appraisers: Provided, however, That when the owner is dissatisfied with the amount of compensation allowed by the appraisers he shall have the right to appeal from their decision to any district court of the United States for review.

Sec. 4. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the expenses of the Commission herein provided for and for carrying into effect the terms of this act during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, some weeks since the rivers were in flood at Pittsburg. The accounts of consequent damage, loss, and suffering were heartrendering. Miles of territory in Greater Pittsburg were submerged.

Many persons were driven from their homes and places of business. Thousands of cellars were flooded. The streets were navigated in skiffs. Live stock perished in considerable numbers. Disease and death followed the hardships imposed upon the people during the flood period, while the money loss ran into the millions. Under present conditions, other floods, with even more disastrous results, will continue to occur in different sections of our country in the years to come.

The public is anxiously asking the question, whether the causes of these floods are known, and if known, whether they can be corrected and controlled by human activities.

Science and experience are agreed on the causes and the remedy.

The most potent cause is deforestation, the remedy for which is reforestation.

Every country which has destroyed its forests has paid the inevitable penalty in silted streams, ravaged hillsides, water courses which are roaring torrents at times and dwindling rivulets at others, barren deserts, and destructive droughts.

The Holy Land was once a country of rivulets and gushing fountains. The evidences of this are abundant. Her hills and mountains were stripped of verdure. What followed? The gushing fountains ceased to flow, the streams either disappeared or dwindled to mere threads, drought and desolation settled on the land, and ages will be required to restore the country to its ancient fertility.

Nor are other historic illustrations lacking to make good the assertion that water in a country and uniform stream flow depend upon the number of its trees.

When the Dutch took possession of the Spice Islands, they were covered with a dense growth of spice trees. Rainfall and water courses were abundant. In the interest of their monopoly, the Dutch destroyed an immense number of trees. By this shortsighted policy they converted the islands into savage and barren wastes.

The hills and mountains of Greece have been shorn of their forests, and in consequence, many famous fountains now "flow only in song, while rivers of historic fame have shrunk into scanty brooks."

The same story is told of France, Portugal, Asia Minor, central Asia, Italy, and many portions of the New World. In a word, these results have followed in every country where shortsighted man has destroyed the forests that clothe the everlasting mountains.

When Cortez conquered Mexico, the city of that name was like Venice—a city of waters. Now it is far inshore, and the explanation of this recession of the lake is found in the destruction of the forests which clothed the neighboring hills.

In South America the famous Humboldt noted that Lake Valencia had fallen 5 or 6 feet in a century, and its shores advanced many miles. Later the forests, which had been largely cut away, were allowed to grow again, and with this growth the waters in the lake continued to rise until they attained their former volume.

In Portugal drought, famine, and destitution have followed the destruction of her forests.

But we need not draw all of our illustrations from the past. Recently Consul Harris, of Smyrna, reported as follows upon the effects of forest depletion in Syria:

The disappearance of the forests in this country, especially in the vilayet of Smyrna, has been marked by greater degrees of heat and cold. The date palm has practically become extinct in these parts. In the winter and spring there are usually floods, which are destructive of life, property, and crops. In the summer there is not sufficient moisture in the soil of many districts, for the reason that the rain passes away at once, down the woodless ravines, without being absorbed by the ground. As a result large tracts have become sterile. Creeks and brooks which formerly retained considerable water, even in the heat of summer, are now completely dried up a few weeks after the spring rains. These same creeks and brooks are becoming deeper each year by the process of floods, so that not only is the surface of the country greatly disfigured, but no bridges can be built strong enough to withstand the annual rush of waters. It thus becomes impossible to get the crops and fruit to market at the proper time.

Crop failures and famine in Asia Minor may therefore be traced to the lack of forests.

But if the influences of deforestation are certain, are the benefits of reforestation equally assured? The answer is again in the affirmative.

Wherever the experiment has been tried on any rational, extended, and scientific plan, the results have conformed to the predictions of science.

In the little island of St. Helena, reforestation has doubled the supply of water since the time of the great Napoleon.

In France, where reforestation has cost over $40,000,000, the results have been equally happy.

In transmitting a report concerning the methods employed in securing the highest possible returns from the cultivation of pine in France, Consul Murphy writes as follows from Bordeaux during the present year:

Prior to 1803 the 2,500,000 acres comprised in the Department of the Landes were little more than shifting sand dunes and disease-breeding marshes. This section is now one of the richest, most productive, and healthful in France. This marvelous change has been brought about by the intelligent cultivation of pine forests. Immense forests now cover the country, the sand dunes and marshes have long since disappeared, and the wood, charcoal, turpentine, rosin, and kindred industries have brought wonderful prosperity to the entire department, which was formerly the most barren and miasmatic in France. The climate is now mild and balmy, the great change being wrought by the forests. The thin layer of clay beneath the sandy surface, formerly impervious to water, has been so pierced by the roots of the pine, that there is now thorough drainage to the spongy earth below.

The manufacture of rosin, tar, turpentine, pitch, pyroligneous acid, wood vinegar, etc., is conducted about the same as in Georgia and the Carolinas.

The trees destined for "short life," are bled as soon as they are big enough to stand bleeding, when they have a circumference of a foot or 15 inches, the sapping of young trees being the only production of a new forest for a time, and when the "thinning out" time comes, they are "bled to death," and the timber used largely for pit props, the English demand guaranteeing a steady and profitable market. The "standing trees," those giving promise of most vigor, are never tapped until they are about 3 feet in circumference. When these have reached the age of 50 or 60 years, they are cut down and utilized for telegraph poles, railway ties, etc.

According to recent reports, about 2,000,000 acres of the forests belong to private individuals and corporations, and 125,000 acres to the Government. The Government now derives a handsome revenue from the forests, $95,811 in 1905, the last year for which statistics are available, against $640 in 1885, the first year showing any revenue therefrom, since which it has grown steadily.

To prevent the spread of forest fires, wide trenches are dug about limited areas, and the space kept clear.

In this country reforestation is in its infancy, but deforestation has gone on apace. There is nothing in the history of the world, that furnishes a parallel to the slaughter of our forests. With our inventive genius spurred to action by the immense returns promised from the conversion of timber into lumber, we have produced new and wonderful appliances for this great work of forest destruction. An immense acreage of stately trees has been converted into savage, fire-swept wastes, and the work goes steadily ahead, "entailing on posterity two great evils, a scarcity of timber—whether for lumber or fuel—and a scarcity of water."

In the last few years, coincident with our disappearing forests, and increasing uses for water power and lumber, a portion, at least, of the public has begun to awaken to the fact that we are killing the goose that lays the golden eggs.

In New England, where so many industrial towns are dependent upon the steady flow of her streams, it has been found that the destruction of the forests has had its effect in disastrous floods at one time, and equally disastrous droughts at others. Hence the demand for a "White Mountain Forest Reserve." In the South, in the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, the wonderful development of their industrial enterprises have made them students of water power, and water supply. They have been quick to learn two lessons: First, that their industries are dependent on water power, and, second, that water power is equally dependent on forests at the sources of the streams. Hence the demand for an "Appalachian Forest Reserve." These movements have received the valuable aid and enthusiastic support of President Roosevelt, and of Mr. Gifford Pinchot, Chief of the Forestry Service.

Nor has the country at large been slow to realize that what is to be done in this respect must be done quickly. Boards of Trade, Civic Organizations of many kinds, Farmers' Alliances, Women's Clubs, Forest Associations, Mountain Clubs, Institutes of Engineers, Federation of Women's Clubs, Associations of College Presidents, Associations for the Advancement of Science; these are some of the factors in the present movement to establish a great forest reserve in the White Mountains and Southern Appalachians.

At the present session of Congress Mr. LEVER, of South Carolina, introduced a bill to acquire "national forests in the Southern Appalachians and the White Mountains." This bill, which was duly referred to the Committee on Agriculture, provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall, in his discretion, acquire for the purposes of national forests by purchase, or by gift, not by condemnation, lands more valuable for the regulation of stream flow than for other purposes, and situated on the watersheds of the navigable streams in the Southern Appalachian Mountains within the States of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Kentucky, and Tennessee, and in the White Mountains within the States of New Hampshire, and Maine.

This acquisition may, in many cases, be conditioned upon the exception and reservation to the owner from whom title passes to the United States, of the minerals and of the merchantable timber, or either, or any part of them, within, or upon such lands at the date of conveyance, but in every such case such exception and reservation, and the time within which such timber shall be removed, and the rules and regulations under which the cutting and removal of such timber and the mining and removal of such minerals shall be done shall be expressed in the written instrument of conveyance, and thereafter the mining, cutting, and removal of the timber and minerals so excepted and reserved, shall be done only under, and in obedience to, the rules and regulations so expressed.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall advertise in the several States named in section 1, for lands to be acquired under the provisions hereof; and as between lands of equal value, the lowest bids shall be accepted: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall have the right to reject any, and all bids.

SEC. 3. That no deed or other instrument of conveyance shall be accepted or approved by the Secretary of Agriculture under this act, until the legislature of the State in which the land lies shall have consented to the acquisition of such lands by the United States for national forest purposes.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture may do all things necessary to secure the safe title in the United States to the lands to be acquired under this act; but no payment shall be made for any such land, until the title shall be satisfactory to the Attorney-General, and shall be vested in the United States.

That portion of this reserve which begins in Georgia, South Carolina, and North Carolina, enters Virginia in the counties of Grayson, Carroll, and Patrick and proceeds through Franklin, Bedford, and the tier of counties lying along the Blue Ridge, until the Potomac River is reached. The other portion of the reserve is found in the eastern portion of the States of Tennessee, Kentucky, and West Virginia, reaching likewise to the Potomac, and going slightly into Maryland.

In this great forest area is found the largest body of hard wood in the United States—in fact, it is stated that the future hard-wood supply hinges on the control of the Appalachian Mountains. "Forty-eight per cent of the hard wood of the country was produced in the Appalachians in 1906, and they must be counted on for a much larger proportion in the future."

While the demand for hard wood has been steadily growing, the cut has been as steadily declining, and the end is in sight, unless some wise methods of conservation are put into effect without delay.

Including the timber in the Appalachians, the present supply of hard wood will last for about sixteen years, according to the latest statistics.

It will be seen from these figures that the bill for this great reserve was not introduced a moment too soon, nor should there be any delay in its passage. A similar measure was passed by the Senate in 1907, so that if the bill now before us passes the House, it may be reasonably presumed that it will become a law at the present session.

Should this be done, unborn generations will rise up to bless us.

Nor will the attendant cost of this great scheme be excessive. The lands are to be secured by peaceful negotiations with the owners, and not by condemnation. Much of this land is rough and valueless for any purpose, save for growing trees. Clearing for cultivation has been going on in these mountains for years. On the lower slopes and foothills there is, or rather was, some shallow, but fertile soil. This soil has long since been gullied out, and washed away, so that the owners have abandoned the lower clearings, for clearings higher up on the face of the mountains. And so the process ever goes on from year to year, as the settlers push their way toward the steeper, and more rugged portions of the mountains.

The movement is always toward the higher lands, those lower down having finished their course.

But all of these abandoned areas are "fundamentally forest lands," and under a comprehensive and properly administered system, the forests will be readily replaced.

It is true that scattered here and there throughout this vast area, and entirely within its confines, are some good farming lands, the homes of contented and prosperous people. But the establishment of the forest reserve will in no wise interfere with the conduct and operation of these farms, or, indeed, of any farms, whose owners do not care to voluntarily part with their possessions at an agreed price. The process of acquisition will make a market for lands that are not salable, in the main, for agricultural, or other purposes, and, on the whole, a considerable expenditure of money will be required, but, in comparison with the certain results to be secured, this expenditure will be comparatively insignificant.

Few people realize the capital, the population, and the industries, that are dependent upon the maintenance of steady stream flow in the rivers that head in the Southern Appalachians.

In the Piedmont regions of North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, water power operates sawmills, planing mills, woolen mills, knitting mills, furniture factories, and cottonseed oil mills to an extent equal to that used in the cotton factories. Hence, the preservation of the Appalachian forests is a matter of vital importance to these industries.

The following figures relating to the cotton factories in these States will be of interest:

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE APPALACHIAN FOREST RESERVE TO THE COTTON MILLING INDUSTRY OF THE SOUTH—STATISTICS OF THE COTTON MILLS OPERATED BY WATER POWER IN THE PIEDMONT REGIONS OF NORTH CAROLINA, SOUTH CAROLINA, AND GEORGIA, WHOSE INTERESTS AND OPERATION ARE VITALLY INVOLVED IN THE PRESERVATION OF THE APPALACHIAN FORESTS.

The accompanying table gives a list of the cotton mills which are being operated in the Piedmont regions by water power. It gives other data, as exhibited by the heading of each column. The table is compiled to show what interests are involved in the maintenance of the regular flow of water in the various streams on which the power is made. It shows the cotton consumed, the operatives, the number of spindles and the number of looms. The number of operatives should be multiplied by at least three in order to show how many people are dependent upon this resource. It seems that it would be entirely fair to assume that the water power used for all other manufacturing, such as operating sawmills, planing mills, woolen mills, knitting mills, furniture factories, cotton-seed oil mills, etc., would make an additional amount equal to that employed in the operation of the cotton mills and would involve the interest of as many people in respect to employment.

Therefore it is seen that the preservation of the mountain forests, which is the main influence in regulating the flow of these streams from the mountains, is a matter of the most vital importance. It has been said that when the mountains of Lebanon were covered with cedars and other forest trees Palestine supported in affluence a population of 10,000,000. After and since the denudation of the mountains of Lebanon, Palestine has scarcely supported 500,000 people, and these, in the main, in poverty.

The following aggregate figures are the totals taken from the table:

Capital stock.....	$44,226,100
Number spindles.....	2,759,201
Number looms.....	63,308
Number employees.....	60,710
Number horsepower.....	120,516
Number bales per year.....	820,395

Counting eleven-hour day.

The total value of the annual production of the mills enumerated is approximately $86,504,644.

In the table North and South Carolina and Georgia are considered.

Virginia, Kentucky, and Tennessee have extensive interests, not comprehended in this enumeration, which must be added to swell the grand total given.

The cotton manufactured in these factories is worth over $70,000,000 in its final form. Over 60,000 hands are given employment, and counting families, something like 240,000 people are dependent on these mills.

In the White Mountains will be found the sources of four important streams, the Connecticut, the Merrimac, the Saco, and the Androscoggin. These streams furnish a very large amount of water power, and support a considerable population engaged in industrial operations.

It is stated that the Merrimac alone, supports a population of 350,000 people, with property assessed at $240,000,000, and drives mills worth $100,000,000, employing 80,000 people, who earn annually in wages $37,000,000.

All of these great industries, North and South, are menaced by the continued deforestation of our mountains. Their continued operation and prosperity, depend upon the sustained and orderly flow of the streams which furnish the water power necessary to drive their wheels.

Cut away the trees, and the streams become mere threads at times, and destructive torrents at others. These torrents, in their roaring progress, sweep away dams and buildings, spread sand and gravel over fertile fields, and later silt up the lower reaches of navigable rivers.

This is no fanciful picture, or overdrawn statement. It is estimated that each year the flood damages in the United States exceed $100,000,000.

"Our inland waters are our greatest national resource. The water flowing down our Western mountains, far exceeds in value the fabulous wealth represented by all the metals and minerals lying between the Rockies, and the Pacific. To-day most of this resource is wasted."

Is this the nation to idly allow this vast wealth to be annually lost to us when a wise system of reforestation and forest maintenance will save a large portion of it, not at once, but in increasing proportions from year to year?

Should we hesitate to enter upon a comprehensive policy of forest preservation and maintenance, when the experience of all other countries points the way in that direction?

We are investing hundreds of millions in the Panama Canal, and are prepared to invest other hundreds of millions in our internal waterways, all upon the idea that, in a certain large sense, these investments will pay. Now, it is just as certain that forest reserves will pay.

Are we not all agreed as to the terrible effects that deforestation has caused in China, in the Mediterranean states, and in many other countries?

If torrential overflows, destructive droughts, barrenness, and desolation have resulted from the destruction of the forests, is it not a clear case that fertility, rainfall, and uniformity of stream flow will return when we replace the trees?

The process may be a slow and tedious one, for it is far easier, in this case as in many others, to destroy than to build up, but the results are certain and definite. Other countries have learned by sad experience what it means to destroy that precious national asset, the stately forest, which has been the growth of ages.

Speaking from the experience of his own country, Mr. Jusserand, the French ambassador, made the following statement at the National Rivers and Harbors Congress in Washington on December 4, 1907:

It is an absolute principle: No forests, no waterways. Without forests regulating the distribution of waters, rainfalls are at once carried to the sea, hurried sometimes, alas! across the country. After having devastated the neighboring fields, the rivers find themselves again with little water and much sand; and with such rivers, how will you fill your canals? * * * The question is as clear as can be: Do you want to have navigable rivers, or do you prefer to have torrents that will destroy your crops and never bear a boat? If you prefer the first, then mind your forests. We can tell you, for we know. * * *

If the Mississippi is the "Father of Waters," the forest is the father of the Mississippi.

He might have added that two-thirds of the torrents of Europe are in France, and that the losses which they have caused, are almost incalculable. These torrents are now largely under control, as the result of a comprehensive system of reforestation, and scientific forestry.

The situation with us is one of rapidly vanishing forests, increasingly destructive floods, and irregular and diminishing water power.

Such is the diagnosis of the case, by common agreement.

The prognosis is, that the evil will increase, unless some remedy is applied. At this point the Forestry Department offers a remedy which has been tried, with the happiest results, in other countries. This remedy is simple in statement, and simple in practice. Conserve existing forests, and plant new ones.

"Many people in this country think that forestry had never been tried, until the Government began to practice it upon the national forests. Yet forestry is practiced in every civilized country in the world, except China and Turkey. It gets results which can be got in no other way, and which are necessary to the general welfare.

"Forestry is not a new thing; it was discussed two thousand years ago, and has been studied and applied with increasing thoroughness ever since. The principles of forestry are everywhere the same. They rest on natural laws which are at work everywhere, and all the time. It is simply a question of how best to apply these laws to fit local needs, and conditions. No matter how widely countries may differ in size, climate, population, industries, or government, provided only they have forests, all of them must come to forestry at some time, as a matter of necessity. The more advanced and progressive countries arrive first, and go farthest in forestry, as in other things. Indeed, we might almost take forestry as a yardstick with which to measure the height of a civilization. On the one hand, the nations which follow forestry most widely and systematically, would be found to be the most enlightened nations. On the other hand, when we applied our yardstick to such countries as are without forestry, we could say, with a good deal of assurance by this test alone, 'Here is a backward nation.'

"The countries of Asia and Europe, taken together, have passed through all the stages of forest history, and applied all the known principles of forestry. They are rich in forest experience. The lessons of forestry have been brought home to them by hard knocks. Their forest systems have been built up gradually, as the result of hardship. Every step of the way toward wise forest use, the world over, has been made at the sharp spur of want, suffering, or loss. As a result, the science of forestry is one of the most practical, and most directly useful, of all the sciences. It is a serious work, undertaken as a measure of relief, and continued as a safeguard against future calamity. It is a living science.

"The United States, then, in attacking the problem of how best to use its great forest resources, is not in the position of a pioneer in the field. There is no need for years of experiment with untried theories. The forest principles which hundreds of years of actual practice have proved to be right, are at its command."

In the management of our national forests, the Government is not working in the dark. It is merely putting into experience principles tried, and found to be correct.

In the German Empire are about 350,000,000 acres of forest lands. A diminishing wood supply and a need of forests to protect agriculture and conserve streams drove Germany to take up forestry. The results of this undertaking have been very satisfactory. A great improvement in the stream flow, and a large increase in the yield of wood, both for fuel and timber, have resulted from the systematic administration of the German forests.

"Starting with forests in as bad shape as our own, forestry in Germany has raised the average yield of wood per acre from 20 cubic feet in 1830, to 65 cubic feet in 1904. In the same period of time it trebled the proportion of saw timber got from the acreage cut, which means that through the practice of forestry, the timber lands of Germany are of three times better quality to-day than formerly, and in fifty-four years it increased the money returns from an average acre of forest, seven-fold."

It must not be supposed, however, that there is no scientific forestry in the United States, or that no systematic efforts have been made to repair the ravages of the lumbermen, and to conserve one of our greatest national assets. Fortunately for the country, Mr. Gifford Pinchot, in 1898, was asked to take the head of the new Bureau of Forestry, and from that time he has been steadily pushing its work, in the face of many discouragements, and in spite of many difficulties. The results secured have been astonishing.

The acreage of our national forests has been enlarged by over 100,000,000 acres, and the number of foresters has been increased from twelve, to twelve hundred, all trained men, experts in their line of work.

The public attitude has been completely reversed, active interest has replaced apathetic indifference, while tree planting has been taken up the country over.

What has brought about this wonderful change in the public attitude, this acute, popular interest in the work of the Bureau?

In part it has been induced by the intelligent and well-directed activities of Mr. Pinchot's department, and in other and larger part it has been caused by observation of the stupendous results of forest destruction.

An impressive statement of these results was recently made by the League of Improvement Societies of Rhode Island.

First. Floods upon the rivers, which even now are estimated to cost the nation one hundred millions a year, and which are constantly becoming more disastrous.

Second. Loss of soil, valued at many millions of dollars a year, and amounting to at least a billion tons, which fills up and destroys storage reservoirs and navigable rivers and chokes harbors along the whole eastern and southern coast line of the country.

Third. Extinction of the nation's supply of hard wood, together with the great industries dependent on it.

Fourth. Increased cost of building materials, placing a burdensome additional tax on every property owner and rent payer in the United States.

Fifth. Loss of agricultural production, by the destruction of soil fertility.

Sixth. Destruction of recreation places, needed for the health and enjoyment of the people.

Seventh. Devastation of thousands of square miles of national domain, which are being rendered wholly unfit for habitation, or any other public use.

Eighth. Failure of navigation and water power, caused by the floods of springtime, and the increasing severity of the summer droughts, destroying navigation on scores of rivers, and annihilating the possibilities of future water power for industries now producing $500,000,000 a year. Side by side with this statement I put that of Mr. Pinchot:

When the forests fall, the lumber business, now the fourth greatest industry in the country, will of course disappear. Suffering among all building industries will immediately follow; mining will become vastly more expensive; then naturally the price of coal, iron, and all other minerals will rise; by this the railroads will be directly affected, and the cost of transportation and water power for lighting, manufacturing, and transportation will immediately increase. All goods made from products of these mines will increase in price, which will hamper not only agriculture, but the cost of production generally. In fact, when the forests fall every man, woman, and child in the United States will feel the pinch. And through misuse the forests are falling rapidly.

We know what will happen when the forests are gone. We know that if the present processes of destruction continue unchanged, our rivers, in time, will run dry, and "the barren, ghastly Appalachians will rear their scarred and ravaged sides" above silent deserts.

These things are not on us as yet. There is still a rich heritage to waste, a heritage that will yield "wealth beyond the dreams of avarice," but the end is in sight.

"Shall we continue the waste and destruction of our national resources, or shall we conserve them?" This is the pregnant question, put by President Roosevelt, and to this question there can be but one answer.

We must, and will conserve them.

We will not wait until the last hard lesson is learned, until waste and ruin admonish us that we must begin the slow and painful process of restoration and replenishment. In advance of that time, this nation will acquire those great domains in which the rivers of twelve Eastern and Southeastern States have their sources. We will conserve them for ourselves and for posterity. In these great forests a host of active and busy men will be at work. New forests will be planted. Old forests will be intelligently cut. Barren hillsides will be restored. The old and destructive processes of lumbering will be abolished.

Taking the forest principles which have been approved by the experience of centuries, we will not blindly follow precedents, but will evolve a system truly American in its spirit, and its adaptation to our conditions, while it conserves all that is best in the systems of the Old World. Nor is it to be supposed that these forests are to be a burden on the Government. They will be more than self-supporting. They will yield an annual revenue which, if we may accept the experience of other nations, will increase from year to year. Germany, France, Austria, Switzerland, and many other countries of Europe, all show "how great a yield of wood and money may be brought about by the systematic, coherent, and continued application of scientific forestry."

It is an illuminating experience for an American to travel over the continent of Europe, and to see the care and scientific skill with which the governments there look after the woods.

I know of communities in Germany where the forests, owned in common by the municipality, pay the entire taxes by their annual yield under a system by which they are kept unimpaired. Happily for Switzerland, the early inhabitants, over a thousand years ago, saw the effects upon their valleys and hillsides, of the destruction of the forests. After visiting deforested mountain sides, and devastated valleys in the United States, it is a liberal education to see the Swiss mountains cultivated up to the snow line, the farmhouses perched so high that they look like fairy cabins in the air, and the trees growing so as to catch and hold the water from the melting snows. Except for this intelligent care, Switzerland would to-day be uninhabitable, these farms would have long ago disappeared from the mountain sides, the valley farms would have been destroyed by torrents, and the streams rendered useless by the uneven fall of water. There is almost as much care in Switzerland, France, and Germany, of the tree, as of the human being, to prevent injury, or to punish injury."

This direct return of lumber and revenue from our national forests will be something distinct from and in addition to their effect upon climate, rainfall, and stream flow.

The time may well come in the near future, as predicted by a distinguished engineer, when the water of our rivers, secured by dams at short intervals, may furnish the homes of our people with the warmth which we now derive from burning coal or wood.

If our homes are to be heated by the falling waters of our rivers, as this scientist predicts, then we can not begin too soon to take the steps necessary to maintain the steady supply and needed volume in these streams. In a word, we must conserve our forests.

The pithy statement of Mr. Jusserand is true: "No forests, no streams."

The project is not one in which the East or the South is exclusively interested. Apart from the other benefits that inure to the entire country, from the establishment of this great reserve, the preservation of the hard woods of the Appalachians will insure the continued existence in the Middle West of many wood-working establishments, which will derive their raw material from this quarter. These establishments represent millions of capital, and employ thousands of men. Hence they are vitally interested in a project that, if carried out, assures them not only a regular, but an increasing, supply of the material so essential to the maintenance and steady conduct of their business.

So far the forest reserves of the United States have been confined to the Far West. In the East we have but little idea of what a great forest reserve is. Somehow most of us picture it as a wilderness, a solitude uninvaded by man, where through the age-long centuries, the monarchs of the grove flourish untouched, until at last the whole vast area will be clothed with trees as stately and as mighty as those which formed the "forest primeval." And yet nothing could be farther from the reality. Such a reserve will be a hive of industry. Trees will be falling all the time. Every form of timber will be sold or put to some use. The whole adjacent country will reap immediate advantage from its proximity to such a forest.

The establishing of a national forest—

Says the president of the Appalachian National Forest Association—

Instead of taking the region and its products from the public, converts the territory into public domain of such a character that the surrounding States, directly or indirectly, reap every advantage. Timber suitable for lumbering is annually disposed of; where the land is fitted for pasturage, grazing permits are issued; if there be mineral wealth, the mines may be developed by any citizen; hotels, resorts, residences, stores, power plants, and mills may be built; the streams may be fished, the lands hunted, and campers may take their holidays in the forest solitude at will. In short, a great national park, self-supporting, fostering home industries, preserving our highways of commerce, our water power and supply, the fertility of our soil, the salubrity of our climate, and the general welfare of our section, and giving to our mountain counties a steady source of income, is the purpose of the proposed Appalachian national forest.

Mr. Speaker, a most impressive conference has recently adjourned in this city. Called to consider the great question of the conservation of our national resources, this conference has presented to the country in its discussion of subjects related to this great theme an impressive mass of pregnant facts and fruitful suggestions.

We are justly proud of our greatness, but this greatness, in a measure, has been thrust upon us. Such has been the plenitude of our resources, that it has required no special effort, no notable struggle, on our part to become great. We have seen no end to our riches, but have treated our resources as an inexhaustible storehouse, and in the enjoyment of the present, have apparently taken no thought of the future.

But this attitude is not only unphilosophical, it is unpatriotic. We must begin to build for the future, to arrange for posterity. As parents we should transmit an ample, if not an undiminished, inheritance to our children.

The establishment of this forest reserve is only one phase of this great policy of conservation, of taking thought for the morrow.

The time has come—

To quote the striking words of the President—to inquire seriously what will happen when our forests are gone; when the coal, the iron, the oil, and the gas are exhausted; when the soils shall have been still further impoverished and washed into the streams, polluting the rivers, denuding the fields, and obstructing navigation. These questions do not relate only to the next century or to the next generation. It is time for us now as a nation to exercise the same reasonable foresight in dealing with our great natural resources that would be shown by any prudent man in conserving and wisely using the property which contains the assurance of well-being for himself and his children.

We at least have all the facts squarely before us in the matter of our forests. We know that we face their exhaustion before the middle of the century is reached.

We know that the growth of our forests is but one-third of the annual cut. We know what a timber famine will mean. We know into how many homes and industries the effects of this famine will penetrate. We know, unless the experience of the Old World countries is at fault, what forestry has done, and what it can do. We know that like causes, under the same conditions, will produce like effects everywhere. We know that we are not exempt from the operation of natural laws, and that a treeless country, in time, will be a waste and desolate country. And knowing all of these things, which reveal our plain duty to the people of the plains, and of the mountains, to the people of the sections immediately affected and, in the larger view, to the people of the entire country, should we hesitate to pass a bill which will establish this great forest reserve, and turn it over to the custody and fostering care of the nation, so long as it shall endure? [Applause.]

[Mr. SMITH of California addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, while I do not approve of all of the provisions of this bill, and I concur somewhat in the view with regard to some of its provisions expressed by the gentleman from California [Mr. SMITH], particularly with regard to the effect of section 2, which, I agree with him is dangerous and likely to lead to the rankest sort of paternalism if not carefully administered, yet this legislation is so conservative compared with the extravagant ideas of paternalism and federalism run mad which have been promulgated widely with regard to forestry legislation, that I shall vote for it as possibly the best compromise to be had. I am one of those who believe that the States, if they will and desire to, if there is a proper public spirit among their citizens, can and ought to care for the forests within their borders. I believe it is the duty of the States, and I can not give my assent to the ideas of the establishment of Federal forest provinces covering vast areas of sovereign States which have been so widely promulgated.

The first section authorized agreements among the States which may be helpful in securing needed cooperation among them not only for forest preservation in the East, but to settle vexed questions of water rights in the West. The provision for a commission is, in my opinion, a wise one and will, I trust, lead to recommendations which will point the way to proper forest preservation by the individuals and the States with proper encouragement by the National Government and without embarking on the extravagant, unwise, and dangerous experiment of the purchase and control by the nation of vast areas of woodland. Mr. Speaker, if this measure shall be carefully and conservatively administered, it may accomplish good results, and I hope it will.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

Mr. LAMB. That is, on the subject-matter.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request is granted. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, if the provisions of the bill, known as the "Lever-Currier bill," are as important to the people of the United States as its advocates contend, and if the Government ought to expend many millions—probably hundreds of millions—of dollars in acquiring title to many millions of acres of worthless land for the alleged purpose of preserving and conserving the forest in that vast territory and maintaining the water flow in section covered in that bill, then we ought to meet the issue squarely and courageously and enact the Lever-Currier bill. If we are not willing to do that, we should not compromise on this measure, which fails to meet the demands and expectations of the supporters of the Lever-Currier bill, but which, I fear, will commit the Government to a policy which will result in the ultimate enactment of such legislation. At present I am opposed to the Lever-Currier bill. This bill will involve the Government in the administration of the private business of thousands of private citizens, entail enormous expense, and, in my judgment, result in endless litigation, without producing any corresponding or substantial benefits to the people, hence I shall vote against it.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, this bill to create a forest commission to investigate something and report next year nothing regarding the protection of the forests within the watersheds of the White Mountains and the Southern Appalachian range is a sad disappointment to the real friends of genuine forest preservation. It means more delay—and procrastination has been the order of the day—in this momentous matter. We had indulged the hope that the Appalachian forest reservation bill would be reported and passed before this session of Congress adjourned; but, alas, our fondest expectations are again destined to be shattered by this little apology for the real legislation so earnestly demanded by the far-seeing people of the country.

Now, I want to say that I am opposed to this delay. I look with suspicion on this makeshift. Instead of the House of Representatives responding to the appeals of the people and meeting this great question in a broad and statesmanlike way, the powers that be in this House direct that the committee bring in this bill to delegate away our legislative rights to a perfunctory commission. It is a great mistake. The people are being humbugged. The pretext will not answer. We are sent here to legislate on this question, and on all other questions, and we should not seek to escape the responsibility. The Congress is the lawmaking body of this Government. The people elected us to legislate, and if we are too indolent or too ignorant or too incompetent to do it, we ought to be manly enough to say so and resign and go home and let the people elect Members who are capable enough and competent enough and industrious enough to legislate, not only on this matter, but on all other matters.

I am opposed to delegating away the powers of the legislative branch of the Government to irresponsible commissions. I am against legislation by commission. I do not like too much commission-made law. I am opposed to this legislative commission business—to a commission to investigate the tariff schedules, to a commission to report on banking and currency, to a commission to look into this matter of forest preservation, and to commissions to do various other things. It is all wrong. It all means delay—more procrastination. These commissions to do this, and to do that, and to do something or other, are merely excuses for delay and for junketing parties, called into being to have a good time, created to spend the people's money, and nine times out of ten utterly useless and barren of beneficial results. We are sent here to do the people's business. Let us obey their mandates and endeavor to meet their expectations.

I am in favor of preserving our forests by intelligent forestry legislation. I am in favor of protecting our watersheds, and utilizing to the utmost our numerous rivers as they flow from the mountains to the seas; and I believe that now is as good a time to begin as some time in the future. We must preserve our forests; we must protect our watersheds; we must promote the utilities of our rivers from source to sea. This is the plain duty of the hour; and if we fail to do it, we invite the deluge and create the desert. This is a great economical question. I warn the House that delay in this matter is dangerous. Let us do our duty now and not endeavor to escape responsibility by delegating our powers to this commission that will be impotent to accomplish permanent results.

Now, what does this little commission bill do? Briefly, it provides, in the first section, that the consent of the United States is given to any State to enter into any compact or agreement, not in violation of the law of the United States, with any other State or States. The second section makes an appropriation of $100,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into cooperative arrangements with the States or with owners of private woodlands for the administration and utilization of the same. Just what the result of that will be I know not. The remaining sections of the bill provide for the appointment of a commission of ten members, five to be appointed by the Speaker of the House and five to be appointed by the presiding officer of the Senate; these ten to take into consideration all questions relating to the proposed forest reservations of the White and Appalachian mountains.

The action of the committee in this matter—from the bill to do something, now pending in the committee, to this commission bill, just sprung on us, to do nothing—is the merest kind of a makeshift—the rankest kind of an apology—intended only for delay and to escape responsibility; and the whole proceeding is most deplorable. I regret it exceedingly, and I appeal to the wisdom and to the sagacity and to the patriotism of the Members of Congress to do something substantial now before it is too late. We are behind the age on this all-important question of the conservation of our natural resources. We have received a mighty heritage and with it a corresponding responsibility. We are the trustees for future generations; and we will be false to ourselves, false to our country, and false to our trust if we do not do our duty and preserve, in so far as we can, what we enjoy for the benefit of those that come after us. Let us be true to our trust and true to the ages yet to come, and always bear in mind that willful waste makes woeful want.

Mr. Speaker, we must preserve our forests; we must protect our watersheds; we must look after our rivers, from their source to the sea. It is one of the most important questions of the day, and further delay is criminal. We must wake up before our forests are denuded and our rivers destroyed. After the forests are gone this is what will happen: The soil dries up, loses its fibrous life, and by erosion is rapidly washed down into the rivers, where it is deposited to the detriment of navigation, necessitating millions of dollars of Government money each year for dredging. The heavier forest debris, which is not removed, dries up and becomes a tangled mass of timber, that takes fire from the hunter's or the woodman's match, or when the lightning strikes it. The fires, beginning in this debris, spread to the forests that are left and every year do incalculable damage; then the springs and the multitude of tiny brooks that feed the rivers are dried up, and the latter in the dry season get very low, causing enormous loss of the water power which runs the great mills; then the snows melt and the heavy later rains begin. There is no soil now to hold back and distribute equably this downfall on the steep slopes, and so we have the devastating floods, which annually entail enormous losses.

And so, sir, it follows like the night the day that after the devastation of the forests comes the deluge and then a barren waste and then death to all living things and then the rainless desert. It is thus that annihilation has come upon some of the greatest empires and richest domains that the world has ever seen. Once upon a time, before the mountain forests of Lebanon were destroyed, Palestine blossomed like a rose and supported in much affluence a population of 10,000,000. The mountains have long been denuded. Forbidding slopes, barren and ugly, rear their weird forms sharply above dismal and desolate valleys. Scarcely 400,000 people remain in all the region, and most of these are in hopeless and abject poverty.

The valley of Babylon, where once stood the metropolis of the world, is abandoned and forlorn. Nineveh, the magnificent city of the ancients, is buried beneath the shifting sands of time. Desert wastes cover the sites of Carthage and Tyre and Sidon, yet bountiful nature once provided for these places its richest gifts of fertility and abundance. Antioch is gone and all Syria is a scene of irreparable ruin. The destruction of her forests, followed by the disappearance of her soil and the decay of her industries, foreshadowed the inevitable result. Man destroyed the forests, and the lands which once flowed with milk and honey were transformed into desert wastes. One-third of China, it is said, has been rendered uninhabitable, and the ruined hills of southern Italy will no longer support their population, and testify in mute eloquence the consequence of forest slaughter. Is such a mournful record of devastation and destruction, of decay and annihilation, to be repeated in America? I trust not. But I warn my fellow-countrymen that if the carnival of loot of our natural resources is not stopped, and speedily stopped, and the forests administered for perpetual use, history will repeat itself, and the inevitable must follow here as in other lands. We can not escape if we destroy principal and interest. Let us do our duty now or sooner or later this will be a national issue that will sweep all opposition aside.

The intelligent conservation of our wonderful natural resources means much to our glorious country now, and much more in lasting benefits to future generations. The willful waste of these natural resources—the devastation of our forests, the destruction of our watersheds, the elimination of our rivers—means decay and death and desert wastes, means in the centuries yet to come the conditions we now witness in northern Africa, in western Asia, in Italy, and in Spain. The world is learning by experience. We must learn in the same school. We can not have our cake and eat it, too. We can not violate natural laws with impunity; we can not neglect fundamental principles and escape the consequences; we can not decimate our forests and have our rivers, too, and without them our fertile fields will ere long be barren wastes. Shall the history of the ancients repeat itself here? Shall we never take heed? In the story of the past let us realize the duty of the present, and by intelligently responding to the essential demands of the hour we will be true to our trust, true to humanity, true to ourselves, and future generations appreciating our work will rise up and call us blessed. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, please notify me when I have consumed seven minutes. Mr. Speaker, I regard it as exceedingly unfortunate that we are not permitted to bring in here as a substitute for this bill the Currier-Lever bill, which was considered so long and carefully by the Committee on Agriculture. This parliamentary situation is of course embarrassing. I want to give some reasons why gentlemen on both sides of this Chamber should not support this measure. I have often heard it said that no speech in the House of Representatives ever secured a vote. If you will give me your attention I think I will win some votes from both sides against this makeshift bill that has been reported by a majority of the Committee on Agriculture. In the first place, gentlemen, read the first section of the bill. In your boyhood days you have heard the comment of the cart being put before the horse.

That is what this section does. I am not going to discuss it any further than to make this observation and to say I turn it over to the lawyers on both sides of this Chamber. In the next place the only section in this bill that can be defended from any reasonable standpoint is the second section. If you will take the Currier-Lever bill and read one section of their bill you will see that the only good thing that is contained in this measure is copied almost identically from the Currier-Lever bill. The milk in the cocoanut, if I may call it so, is in the suggestion of a commission appointed by the Speaker of this House and the President of the Senate to go through these mountains and report facts. Save the second section there is nothing else in the bill as we know this work has already been well done.

The report of the Secretary of Agriculture will convince any man who will read Senate Report No. 91 that this has been well done by the Commission that was appointed at the last Congress. We gave, when the Senate bill was passed, $25,000 to form a commission to report. That Commission has reported, and here it is. The committee report we have here criticizes this Commission report and attempts to show that it is not full enough. Read this report, together with the full and able introduction by the Secretary of Agriculture, and see how this work has been done. Then, if that be a fact—and it is indisputable—I ask you in all candor and frankness, What is the use of this bill that has been brought in here? What is it? It is a measure to formulate an idea of "how not to do it;" that is it.

It is a measure to delay this work another year. It is upon the same principle that a lawyer acts in court when he sees he has got a bad case and asks for a continuance until the next term of court. That is just what this bill is, and all it is.

Mr. Speaker, there is no politics in the Lever-Currier bill that we would like to be able to offer here as a substitute for this one. Let me call your attention to this fact, that there has been but very little politics in the Agricultural Committee. On a vote on the Lever-Currier bill, which has been referred to here by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], there were seven votes for it, and four were from Members of the majority side and three from Members of this side. And it is a pity, a huge pity, that that measure could not have been brought in here. What would have been the result?

It would pass this House, and in conference with the Senate, on a measure they passed the other day, the only difference being the amount of money carried there, this measure would have been enacted into law during this session of Congress. It would have met a demand that is coming up from twenty-seven States of this Union.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I understand that the gentleman concedes that it is impossible to get the Lever bill passed at this session?

Mr. LAMB. Oh, I said we could not get it passed in this House; yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That being so, do the forestry people oppose the bill now before the House?

Mr. LAMB. I do not know what the forestry people think. I oppose it for the reason that I am trying to give you—because it does not meet the necessities of the case, because it appoints a commission to do what has already been done, and done better than any commission of Congress will be able to do. And then, it does not recognize the burning principle of all these measures save this one, that in order to do anything you must acquire possession of these lands by the General Government; and if you read the opinion of the Judiciary Committee on this matter you will find that we can do it; that if you can clean out the rivers you can conserve the waters of the rivers that have their source in these mountains.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is a step in the right direction.

Mr. LAMB. The step has been taken before. We have an able report now.

Mr. BEALL of Texas rose.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL]?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. The gentleman says that we have information enough to act upon this proposition. Can he give the information to the House as to whether, under the provisions of the Lever bill, it would be necessary to buy 3,000,000 5,000,000, 10,000,000, 50,000,000, or 75,000,000 acres of land?

Mr. LAMB. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. And can the gentleman tell whether the cost would be $10,000,000, $50,000,000, $75,000,000, or $300,000,000?

Mr. LAMB. If my colleague had read this report as carefully as I had hoped he had done—

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I have read it.

Mr. LAMB. He would have found those questions answered by the Commission we appointed last year. There is one point that has been made for the bringing in of this measure here, that the new members of the Agricultural Committee—

The SPEAKER. Seven minutes of the gentleman's time have expired. The gentleman has five minutes more.

Mr. LAMB. I want to say here now—

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LAMB. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEFLIN. Did the majority of the committee express a desire to go for themselves and visit these forests in order that they might report and do whatever is necessary to be done?

Mr. LAMB. Oh, the majority of the committee reported this bill, and that does it. Certainly, I will answer that question.

Mr. HEFLIN. And did not the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] oppose that?

Mr. LAMB. I did, and Mr. LEVER did also, I think.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I said, and I again declare, that this bill is an intellectual freak. That is what it is, and if it were not for the affection I bear my colleagues on the committee I would unhesitatingly declare what the country will declare and what intelligent men and women in twenty-seven States of this Union will declare, that it is a legislative trick. The country will call it a flimflam bill. Now, I do not know about flimflam. I know the meaning of it as it was given in the dictionary when I was a boy, and it means a freak and a trick. I say that the country will pronounce it a flimflam bill. I do wish that the substitute we offered in the Agricultural Committee could be brought before the House. Twenty-seven States of this Union demand some such measure as has passed the Senate. The debate in the Senate on the 16th instant shows the necessity for sane legislation.

The hearings before the Committee on Agriculture have shown the importance of it, and the press of the country and every chamber of commerce and every business men's league all over this country are demanding some legislation. They ask you for bread, and you give them a stone. They ask for a fish, and you give them a serpent.

I yield one minute to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think that if you would strike out section 2 of the bill it would improve it considerably?

Mr. LAMB. I said that was all there was in it. If you strike out section 2, you would have a roving commission and nothing more. Section 2 invites cooperation with the States. The bill appropriates only $100,000. It is inadequate and, in my judgment, worthless.

I yield a minute to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. SCOTT. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas has eight minutes remaining and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] has one minute remaining.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

Mr. SCOTT. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. That gives the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] three minutes in all.

Without objection the request of the gentleman from Virginia to extend his remarks in the Record is acceded to.

There was no objection.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, the bill before the House does not meet my views nor my wishes. If we had the opportunity to submit the so-called "Lever-Currier bill" to a vote of this House, I should be glad to take such opportunity to present it and to test the opinion of the House upon this proposition as against the bill before the House. But those of us on the committee are familiar with the fact that the majority of the Committee on Agriculture are opposed to the propositions and the provisions involved in the Lever-Currier bill, and the best that we could do was to force from the committee this compromise introduced by the chairman of the Agricultural Committee. So that, therefore, as a friend of the proposition to set aside forest areas in the White Mountains and Southern Appalachian region, I feel that the only thing for us to do is to take this proposition—which is, in a measure, nothing—as the best that we can get.

Mr. HASKINS. Say that it is an abortion.

Mr. LEVER. My friend from Vermont [Mr. HASKINS] suggests that it is an abortion. It is to some extent an abortion, but it is the best that we could get out of the committee, and as far as I am concerned I intend to vote for it and I trust that the friends of the proposition on this subject will join with us. I had hoped to get a full-grown child from that committee in the shape of the Lever-Currier bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back my time.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute of my time to my colleague from Kansas [Mr. REEDER] to make a request.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, so intimate is the subject of forest conservation with irrigation, navigation, and the water power, that I have been considering the subject ever since we passed the national irrigation law. And I wish to call attention, now, to a bill for forest conservation reported from the Committee on Irrigation recently after years of effort.

The time is so short for the consideration of this bill that I rise simply to ask that I may extend my remarks in the Record on this subject.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the leave will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, this nation is becoming so great as to demand of Congress so much in the way of routine work as to cause us not to give proper heed to matters that do not absolutely demand present attention, however important they may be, viewed as to their future consequence to the Republic. Viewing it as to the far-reaching benefits to accrue, I will concede that I take considerable pride in the fact that I had something of a prominent part in the passage of a law which comes clearly within the category of provisions that are of vastly more importance in their effects for the future than for any benefit to result for the present. I refer to the national irrigation law.

Before I proceed to call your attention to some matters I hope to see looked after by Congress in the not distant future, I desire to occupy a few moments of your time in calling your attention to the work that is being accomplished under this law and that will be accomplished by it if it is permitted to remain in operation.

We are at the present time putting under irrigation about 1,000,000 acres of land which in its present condition will scarcely furnish sustenance for a single family.

When this land is transformed by the application of water it is quite safe to state that it will directly and indirectly furnish homes for 250,000 people, most of whom will live under more benign influences than is possible for any set of citizens under present conditions, as far as I have any knowledge.

They will have the privilege of rural environment, with the assurance of ample provision for all their needs, for a minimum of labor. The density of population in these settlements will give them most of the advantages of an urban settlement, and they will be relieved of many of the undesirable features of city life.

With the telephone, rural mail delivery, and the centralized public schools these people will have fully as good an opportunity for information for themselves and their children as the most favored citizen, with even a better opportunity to utilize it. The circumstances of their existence will practically insure that none of them will become either abnormally rich or degradingly poor, from which two classes come nearly all of those citizens who are a menace to our peace as a nation. It will require about sixteen years to complete the irrigation of this 1,000,000 acres with the $40,000,000 now in the fund set apart for that purpose and to get the settlers located thereon and the money repaid into the fund, as provided in the law.

Six such periods of sixteen years will make a century. Thus you will see we can with the present munificent fund reclaim 3,000,000 acres of our desert each century.

It is estimated by those who have opportunity to know that we have more than 60,000,000 acres of arid and semiarid land that we may by means of this law make suitable for homes.

If it requires a century to prepare and dispose of 6,000,000 acres, but little calculation is required to ascertain that unless our fund increases more rapidly than the difficulties of irrigation it will require ten centuries to consummate the task we succeeded in inducing the Fifty-seventh Congress to commence. But if we thus make homes for fifteen to twenty thousand human beings annually, who will be so environed as to insure a first-class citizenship where practically no one could exist before, we will be satisfied that we have conceived a good method of using the proceeds of what many regard as a worthless portion of our public domain. Some denominate it the land that God forgot.

Permit me to indulge a prophecy: That this same section of our country is, by means of rural environment and centralized country schools, to develop the greatest citizenship yet known on this old world of ours.

When the task is completed we have the satisfaction of looking forward to a population of good citizens, equal in number to one-fourth of the present population of the United States and sustained on soil that without some such preparation would support but few.

Exactly the same may be said as to swamp drainage. But the matter I have taken the floor to call your attention to is the advisability of giving more attention to the conservation of our national resources. Since the passage of the national irrigation law I have been observing from day to day the destruction of our national resources, with seemingly no opportunity to stay the prodigality of the waste. My observation of this waste was probably accelerated by watching the funds, which the Fifty-seventh Congress so kindly turned over to us with which to reclaim the desert, gradually disappearing into the pockets of the land speculators until $100,000,000 at least has so disappeared by means of a law now on our statute books, which permits the sale of our timber lands at the rate of $2.50 per acre regardless of their value. Since the passage of the national reclamation law we have sold at this figure 6,800,000 acres of this timber for about $17,000,000. Some of this timber would have cut 50,000 feet, board measure, to the acre. If you will get a publication called "Forest Conditions," edited by Dodwell and Dixon, and published in 1902, and examine the map attached you will see that considerable of the timber on the Western slope will cut 50,000 feet, board measure, or more. If it will average 5,000 feet per acre, and is worth, say, $2.50 per thousand feet, or $12.50 per acre, the net loss to the irrigation fund is nearly $70,000,000 already, or nearly double the vast sum now in that useful fund, and if we sell the balance of the timber on the public domain outside of the forest reserves as we have sold our timber in the past instead of at something near its value, we will lose at least $200,000,000 more to the irrigation fund. See Professional Papers, by Henry Gannett, published in 1902, page 13; also Professional Papers, No. 5, page 12. The publications here referred to are Government publications. I also base my estimate on letters inserted below.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 19, 1908.

Hon. W. A. REEDER,
House of Representatives.

Sir: I reply to your letter of the 6th instant, I have the honor to call attention to the fact that according to table furnished you March 4, 1908, showing the number and acreage of timber and stone entries made from July 1, 1900, to June 30, 1907, was 50,041 entries, embracing 6,801,970.32 acres, for which the Government received $17,017,844.91. The value of each claim was estimated at $1,500. It would appear, therefore, that there was paid $17,017,844.91 for timber and stone lands, which have an estimated value of $75,061,500.

It is not practicable for this Department to give the average stumpage of the timber upon the lands so disposed of with any greater degree of exactness than heretofore indicated.

As to the amount of public timber lands yet undisposed of, you are advised that this Department, by reason of the fact that no classification of such lands has been made, except the return of the surveyor who executed the survey of such lands as have been included within the lines of the public surveys, and which is necessarily not accurate, as such surveys are confined to the exterior lines of townships and sections. However, it may be roughly estimated that there are within the territory of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, between twenty and twenty-five million acres of undisposed-of timber and stone lands. Twenty million acres would equal 125,000 claims of 160 acres each, which, if disposed of at $2.50 per acre, the present price of timber and stone lands, would bring $60,000,000, whereas the value of same may be estimated at about $187,500,000. This estimate is based upon a valuation of $1,500 per claim, which it is believed is a fair one when it is considered that while to a large extent the choicest timber has already been disposed of, that remaining possesses a greater value because of the increasing scarcity of timber and the increasing demand therefor.

In connection with this matter attention is directed to the fact that if the timber were disposed of upon a stumpage basis, and the title to the land retained by the Government, this acreage could be retained by the United States for reforestation, or could be disposed of under appropriate land laws, and it may be estimated that for either of these purposes the land should, after the timber has been removed, be worth in the neighborhood of $10,000,000.

Very respectfully,

FRANK PIERCE,
First Assistant Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., March 19, 1908.

Hon. W. A. REEDER,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. REEDER: With reference to value of timber on lands disposed of under the timber and stone act during the past ten years, I have a rough estimate from the Forest Service which indicates that the value is, at a conservative figure, not less than $25 per acre.

In a previous letter I made a rough estimate on the basis of $10 per acre, but I think that you can safely increase this rate to $25 per acre.

Very truly, yours,

F. H. NEWELL, Director.

The loss of one hundred millions to the irrigation fund, when so much could be done with this vast amount in the way of making homes for a class of our people who so much need homes and would utilize them for the sustenance of themselves and their families, is bad enough to cause every Member of Congress to cast his vote to stop this waste.

I note in the circular called "An Appeal of the West to the East" this statement, referring to the public domain:

The East has had its cake and eaten it; in turn the West, too, desires to munch its cookie in its own way.

The Denver public-lands convention, which met last summer, seemed called to emphasize the right of the West to "munch its own cookie." These lands and this timber do not belong to the West more than to the East, in my opinion. A prominent Western man at the national irrigation congress at Boise, Idaho, declared from the platform his purpose to educate the people of the nation up to his notion, which is well expressed in the words here quoted, "Our own cookie, to be munched in our own way."

This theory is absolutely wrong. The young man in Pennsylvania, New England, or elsewhere who desires to secure a home on the public domain has, in my opinion, a better right to that 160 acres of the public domain which he needs for a home than has the whole Denver land convention when he is ready to take him a wife and establish a home thereon. Further, if a certain tract of land contains timber to the value of $40 per acre, no one citizen has a right to that land for $2.50 per acre, thus getting $37.50 of value for nothing, which belongs to his neighbor as much as to himself. Our land laws are absolutely wrong where they permit either of these citizens to lose their right in land by the Government turning the same over to other persons.

No agriculturist who lives in a city or town and gains wealth farming the farmers has any moral right to exact from such farmer a bonus when he wishes to go upon the public domain to improve the country by building a home for himself and family thereon. The safest foundation for our civil institutions is a citizenship who own the soil they cultivate for a sustenance, and Congress has no more important duty than to look after and preserve for the people this national resource—the public domain.

At the Boise convention I took the ground—which I regard as the only just position—that the public lands, including the timber, minerals, and waters, are the heritage of the whole people, but that I thought it not only was right, but advisable, that persons in the West should have the use of all the resources of the soil and the mines, but not to the extent of ruthlessly destroying their value for those who may in the future desire to go to the West to make homes.

Nor to the extent of putting into the pockets of land speculators vast sums in the way of title to the public domain or the products thereof, which any poor boy of the East or the South has an interest in if he desires to go West and make a home therewith. Such placing of the wealth of all in the pockets of a few we not only have a right to question, but as lawmakers we are criminally negligent of our duty if we do not stop it, and to-day I find myself with the first opportunity I have been able to get in the nine years I have been a Member of this body to offer you a plan that will save a balance of this one cocky—the timber on the public domain—which consists of the difference between $2.50 per acre and a fair value for this timber. I refer to H. R. 21140 and the report thereon, and can assure you if you will assist in passing this bill and thus keeping this wealth out of the hands of the speculators, it will, by means of the national irrigation law, forestry conservation, and drainage, be used for making homes for settlers, whether these settlers live in the West or come from the North, South, or East.

H. R. 21986, in the consideration of which I am permitted to set these facts before the House and the country, most of which I had hoped to present during the consideration of H. R. 21140, which can not now be considered owing to the lateness in the session, seems to shy at purchasing mountain lands for forest reservations, which has caused me to conceive the idea that H. R. 21140, when it comes up for passage next term, should be so amended that one-fourth of what we save by selling the balance of the timber on the public domain outside of the forest reserves at its value instead of the $2.50 per acre at which it has been sold in the past be used to purchase the necessary land for the Appalachian and the White Mountain forest reserves and for the reforestation of Government land where advisable, one-fourth for the drainage of swamp lands, and one-half to go into the irrigation fund.

The estimates of this Department as to what this saving will amount to vary from one hundred and twenty-seven to four hundred and forty million dollars (see letters inserted above), which warrants the statement that at least fifty millions would thus go toward forest establishment, and not deplete the Treasury a dollar.

Forestry is a more important work than either irrigation or drainage, because every day's delay of a proper forestry policy adds to the difficulties of its consummation, while, except for the loss of water storage caused by the destruction of the forests, irrigation can be done at one time as well as another.

This legislation will prove very wise and far-reaching if we buy and manage our forests with one-fourth of the savings of a single law, especially if our care of the forests prove as successful as has the forest policy of Prussia.

The Prussian method of management adopted calls for a sustained yield—that is, no more wood is cut than the forest produces. Under this management the growth of the forest, and consequently the amount cut, has risen sharply. In 1830 the yield was 20 cubic feet per acre; in 1865, 24 cubic feet; in 1890, 52 cubic feet, and in 1904, 65 cubic feet. In other words, Prussian forest management has multiplied the rate of production threefold in seventy-five years, and the quality of the product has improved with the quantity. Between 1830 and 1904 the percentage of saw timber rose from 19 per cent to 54 per cent.

It is a striking fact in this connection that in the United States at the present time we are using about three times as much timber as our forests grow. If we were everywhere practicing forestry with a resulting improvement equal to that made in Prussia, our forests would be growing as much as we use.

The financial returns in Prussia make an even better showing. Net returns per acre in 1850 were 28 cents. In 1865 they were 72 cents; in 1900, $1.58, and in 1904, $2.50. They are now nearly ten times what they were sixty years ago, and they are increasing more rapidly than ever.

In Saxony, which has about 430,000 acres of State forests, the increase of cut under forest management, which always means also a corresponding increase in wood produced, has been nearly as marked as in Prussia. The yield rose 55 per cent between 1820 and 1904, and is now 93 cubic feet per acre—greater than that of the Prussian forests. Since the chief wood is spruce, which yields more saw timber than the average of trees making up the Prussian forests, the increase in the percentage of saw timber in Saxony naturally exceeds the increase in Prussia. It increased from 26 per cent in 1830 to 66 per cent in 1904. The net yearly revenue is $5.30 per acre. The yearly expense is $3 per acre. Our forests, 190,000,000 acres, at the same rate would produce $900,000,000 annual net revenue.

These figures are in striking contrast with the corresponding ones for the United States. We spent on our national forests last year 9¢ mills per acre, and our net revenue from them was less than 1 mill per acre.

A number of the private forests of Germany are managed with great success. As a result of a canvass of 15,000,000 acres of State, municipal, and private forests it was found that the average net revenue per acre, from good, bad, and indifferent land, was $2.40 a year.

What, then, has forestry done in Germany? Starting with forests which were in as bad shape as many of our own which have been recklessly cut over, it raised the average yield of wood per acre from 20 cubic feet in 1830 to 65 cubic feet in 1904. During the same period of time it trebled the proportion of saw timber got from the average cut, which means, in other words, that through the practice of forestry the timber lands of Germany are of three times better quality to-day than when no system was used, and in fifty-four years it increased the money returns from an average acre of forest sevenfold.

Have we a right to sit idly by and see men from pure greed destroy the forests, when they might be made a source of such profit, and especially when they are the greatest source of water necessary to transform our deserts into homes, especially when these national resources are placed in our care for the use of any citizen who desires to make a home therewith?

Out of over $140,000,000 worth of the wealth that Eastern men helped to take out of the Treasury to assist in this commendable work of transforming the West, one hundred millions have been turned into the hands of speculators through the influence of these same men whom we sought to assist, and many of them now urge that we should take other millions out of the Treasury, direct, to make up that which has been thus wrongly diverted. It was with difficulty that a resolution demanding $100,000,000 of an appropriation from Congress was defeated in the Boise irrigation convention. When one hundred millions of this fund, generously set apart by Congress to improve the West, is thus despoiled, surely it is high time we as guardians of the people's inheritance should take cognizance.

And in another part of the circular, "An Appeal of the West to the East," we find the following, which emphasizes what I have been stating. It says:

It is entirely right that the press should devote much space to the work and benefits concerned with forest reserves; it is proper enough that the nation should be educated to a startling realization of how we have recklessly squandered our heritage of forest, soil, and other natural resources for over a hundred years. Our prodigality has been shameful and criminal; no doubt about that.

Yet this is the least of several species of folly we are committing by the present means of disposing of the timber on the public domain. A worse feature lies in the fact that the timber on the land sold under this law at $2.50 per acre is cut so closely as to leave the hillsides bare of trees to reseed the land for a future crop of timber, and much of this land is fit for nothing else.

Then the brush is strewn about in such a way as to insure the spread of fires over vast areas, which so completes the devastation as to leave nothing to prevent the rainfall from washing the soil from the surface, which precludes a future reforestation, while if taken hold of by the Government, the matured timber can be used and the lands reforested.

FORESTS FOR PERPETUAL USE.

The forests must be administered for perpetual use and for an annual crop instead of a grand carnival of loot preceding their everlasting destruction. Properly developed, they can be made to produce many times their present annual crop of usable lumber. We can not survive if we destroy principal and interest.

PROPER FOREST REGULATIONS PAY.

A leading lumberman of Wisconsin recently, in advocating the Appalachian bill and the Government control of forests, said: "The Government regulations are thoroughly practical and but moderately expensive. We have demonstrated that by several years' experiment. If during all those former years in which we have been denuding this valley we had operated on the same plan, piling the brush and burning it to prevent forest fires, we should now be growing upon the same land three times as much timber as we took out." "This is a practical answer," says Forestry and Irrigation, "to those who think that the national forests should continue to be looted in the good old-fashioned way."

History shows us that torrents and drougths follow these devastations of the forest.

MATURE TIMBER USED—FOREST GROWN—MORE TIMBER CAN BE GROWN.

An attempt was made in France to check torrents by sodding instead of planting. This, however, proved a failure, and recourse was again had to planting, by the law of 1882, which provides that the State shall bear the costs. Since then the excellent results of planting have completely changed public sentiment. The mountaineers are most eager to have the work go on and are ready to offer their land for nothing to the forest department. In addition to lands secured by gift the State acquires 25,000 or 30,000 acres a year. Over 500,000 acres have been acquired and more than one-half of this area has been planted. Already 163 of the torrents have been entirely controlled and 654 are beginning to show the controlling effects of the forests on their watersheds. Thirty-one of the torrents now entirely controlled were considered hopelessly bad half a century ago.

It is expected that $50,000,000 will have been spent before the work of reforesting for protection is complete in France. The sand dunes on the coast of France, mainly in Gascony, which the winds drove farther and farther inland, wasting the vineyards, have now largely been fixed in place by forest plantations which were begun in 1793. Of the 350,000 acres of sand dunes, 275,000 have been planted in forest, and the dunes, instead of being a constant menace to the neighboring farmers, now are growing crops of pine which produce valuable wood and resin. In all, about $2,000,000 was spent in the work; and an additional $700,000 was laid out in bringing the forests under administration. Now, though about one-half of the lands have been acquired by private persons and the State retains only about 125,000 acres, the State has received $120,000 above all expenses and possesses a property worth $10,000,000, acquired virtually for nothing.

Some 2,000,000 acres of shifting sands and marshes toward the interior of the country, a triangular territory known as the "Landes," has been changed from a formerly worthless condition into a profitable forest valued at $100,000,000. Reforestation was begun about the middle of the last century. This work was done principally by the communes, aided and imitated by private owners, and encouraged by the State. The resulting forest produces both pine timber and resin, upon the yield of which the present valuation is based.

In the little island of St. Helena reforestation has doubled the supply of water since the time of the great Napoleon.

In France, where reforestation has cost over $40,000,000, the results have been equally happy.

In transmitting a report concerning the methods employed in securing the highest possible returns from the cultivation of pine in France, Consul Murphy writes as follows from Bordeaux during the present year:

"Prior to 1803 the 2,500,000 acres comprised in the Department of the Landes were little more than shifting sand dunes and disease-breeding marshes. This section is now one of the richest, most productive, and healthful in France. This marvelous change has been brought about by the intelligent cultivation of pine forests. Immense forests now cover the country, the sand dunes and marshes have long since disappeared, and the wood, charcoal, turpentine, resin, and kindred industries have brought wonderful prosperity to the entire department, which was formerly the most barren and miasmatic in France. The climate is now mild and balmy, the great change being wrought by the forests. The thin layer of clay beneath the sandy surface, formerly impervious to water, has been so pierced by the roots of the pine that there is now thorough drainage to the spongy earth below.

"The manufacture of resin, tar, turpentine, pitch, pyroligneous acid, wood vinegar, etc., is conducted about the same as in Georgia and the Carolinas."

FAILURE OF NAVIGATION.

We shall see the failure of navigation upon scores of rivers that are now very useful for transportation, and this will be accomplished by the freshets of springtime, by the droughts of midsummer, and by the filling up of the channels with silt and debris from the denuded hills.

As ex-Governor Pardee, of California, has said, "The rivers and harbors begin in the mountains." The navigable rivers of the South practically all have their rise in the Appalachians, and the four principal rivers that rise in the White Mountains are navigable in their lower reaches, yet the removal of the forests has so disturbed the laws of nature that serious difficulty is being experienced by the season of low water, which is constantly lengthening.

NO USE TO DIG OUT.

"The Government has expended $30,000,000 to deepen these streams, and expects to spend $26,000,000 more, but that investment will be rendered useless in a few years unless something is done to regulate the drainage." The forest is the one natural factor that equalizes the flow, and with the forest supplemented by storage-reservoir systems, the depth of many streams could be properly maintained. "Thirty-five per cent of the Monongahela may be economically stored. That would almost eliminate flood damage at Pittsburg and Wheeling and secure the coveted height of water to Cincinnati." This is impossible of accomplishment except by the maintenance of the watershed forests, to equalize the flow and prevent the filling of both reservoirs and rivers with soil waste from the hillsides.

MULTIPLIED MILLIONS WASTED.

Instead of spending "multiplied millions" to dig out the rivers and the harbors, would it not be better policy for an "economical Congress" to attack the root of the difficulty and remove the chief cause of trouble?

"The present process involves dredging, and more dredging, until kingdom come," testifies Mr. Leighton, of the United States Geological Survey. "It is cheaper to keep soil out of the top than to dig it out of the bottom, and a private corporation that handled such a situation in the manner that the Government does would be a fit candidate for a receivership."

REPORT OF SENATE COMMITTEE, APRIL 1, 1906.

The loss of the forest is followed by that of the soil and by recurring floods, the devastation of property, the obstruction of navigable rivers. Alternate high and low water periods and Government expenditures for dredging and harbor improvements follow. Yet deforestation is only in its first stage. Eventually the stripped mountains will become so inimical to the public welfare that the Government must reforest them.

Fourth. The creation of these reserves is in the interest of agriculture.

Erosion is so rapid that within five or ten years there is not enough fertile soil to bear crops. All the land that is truly agricultural is now exposed by denudation of the forests to severe floods. In the distant lowlands the effect of forest destruction is felt in floods, which sweep away bridges, dams, and houses and spread barren sand over acres of fertile fields.

Fifth. The creation of these reserves is important to manufactures. The water power of these two reserves is of vast importance and will be more so with the development of electricity. The present course with the forests will entail a severe blow and lasting detriment to the entire country.

FLOODS FOLLOW FOREST DESTRUCTION—ALL ENGINEERS AGREE.

Professor Swain spoke for the American Civil Engineers' Society, which has a membership of over 5,000 and includes nearly all the engineers of the country. They had never memorialized Congress before. "The fact is," he said, "there is absolutely no difference of opinion among scientific men." "They are all very apprehensive about the timber supply," he continued. "Despite the use of concrete and other substitutes, there is more timber needed than ever before. The soil is being carried more and more into the valleys. The destructiveness of floods is not only much increased by their greater volume and velocity, but by the cutting power of the sand which they are bringing down. The river channels are being filled, the streams spread over more acres of fields, rivers are becoming less navigable, water powers less valuable, agriculture less possible. Appropriations for dredging are more and more needed. There is no question but all these disasters are rapidly increasing."

I have known the Connecticut for over thirty-six years. Until recently the wooded hills kept the flow of the river even. Now, in the spring, we have floods, while in the summer the water sometimes will not run our mills.

THEOPHILUS PARSONS,
New England Manufacturer.

DESTROYING THE SOURCES.

"What is the use to try and make rivers navigable," asked Doctor White, "if the sources are all going to dry up? You cannot keep commerce between Pittsburg and Cincinnati without that belt of timber on the Southern Appalachians." "Upon a single river," said Professor Glenn, "the Government is spending $8,000,000 to remove debris from the steep slopes of distant States that ought never to have been cleared."

COTTON MANUFACTURERS ALARMED.

"One thousand members of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers," said Mr. Woodbury, secretary of that association, "are becoming thoroughly alarmed." He said that the Connecticut River had diminished in its summer volume at least 20 per cent in the last ten years.

STORAGE RESERVOIRS DESTROYED.

Mr. A. M. Schoen, Mr. W. S. Lee, Mr. Waddell, and electrical engineers told how the storage reservoirs were quickly destroyed by mud from the denuded hillsides in far-away States. As for the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, Mr. Schoen said: "When the subject of forest preservation was first brought up some of the members had been a little skeptical as to the gravity of the situation. They had appointed a special committee, who have been studying the matter for three years.

"They agree now that the perpetuation of power depends absolutely upon the preservation of headwater forests."

Electric transmission had been looked forward to as the great hope of Southern industry, and great systems of storage reservoirs have been planned to improve the navigation of hundreds of miles of inland rivers, but the reservoirs would be useless unless the forests were cared for. "Yes, sir," replied Mr. Lee. "Perhaps you could wash out a reservoir if you wanted to spend as much as the whole plant was worth, and then the silt would fill up the next one beyond, and the next one, and so on. Then it would destroy the river below for navigation; also the harbor at its mouth, and the Government would spend a few millions on jetties to push the stuff into the ocean."

DREDGING MONEY WASTED.

Mr. Leighton, who has been in charge of investigations for the River and Harbor Commission, spoke of the futility of dredging operations as conducted by the Government. He spoke also of the permanent depreciation of waterside property from Pittsburg to the Gulf of Mexico as far exceeding the $100,000,000 damage that the floods themselves had caused.

Mr. Waddell compared the even flow of the French Broad River, which rises in the protected forests of Biltmore, with the erratic variation of rivers coming from deforested country. One of these streams, that had been measured, in a single season had brought down 12,000 cubic feet of sediment to a single pond, from but fourteen miles of drainage area. "That river," he said, "dries up each summer."

Where streams are subject to severe droughts or great floods, commercial development is practically impossible. Nature has provided for the uniformity of flow by covering the watersheds at the headwaters of these streams with forests. When these forests are cut, great freshets result. (Charles A. Stone, Stone & Webster, electrical engineers.)

From the standpoint of those who know floods are superfluous. There is no more need of the periodical inundation of great areas of fertile land, the sweeping away of mills, factories, railway tracks, and residences and the destruction of lives by river overflows than there was need for water pouring, at every rain, through the roof of the patient native interrogated by the "Arkansas Traveler." The up-to-date man mends his roof before the rain comes. When, as a nation, we get up to date, we will mend our river systems before the floods come.

No informed man claims that forests alone will completely prevent all floods. The forest, however, is a potent factor in flood prevention. Reservoir systems, well understood by engineers, are other factors. Here, as in the case of the roof and the pestilence above referred to, the remedy is incomparably less expensive than the disease. Which shall we have?

FLOOD DISASTERS TO CITIES.

The floods of 1907, which caused a damage of $9,900,000 at Pittsburg and Cincinnati and Louisville, were but a hint of future disasters to many cities. These freshets are forever menacing all the riverside towns along the Ohio and Mississippi, as well as those on the rivers within the Appalachian region, and if the menace continues to increase it will scarcely be possible to maintain cities except on the hilltops. Already the flood damage in the United States exceeds $100,000,000 per year. "With our water controlled and utilized, this sum might be saved and fourfold greater value produced."

MANUFACTURES THREATENED.

Professor Shaler once remarked that "the future of manufactures in our country will depend upon water power transmitted by electricity." Nearly every drop of water that can turn a wheel in the South comes from the mountains. Upon the principal streams of the Southern Appalachian region there is nearly 5,000,000 horsepower for development. If 1 horsepower is worth $20 per year, which is the commonly estimated rate, it will be seen what a mighty factor are the mountain brooks for the future industrial development of this country in furnishing the possibility for vast development in manufacturing, in lighting, and in transportation. It is estimated that the capital invested in the manufacturing enterprises which utilize about two-thirds of the power of the four principal rivers flowing from the White Mountains amounts to $400,000,000. The industries dependent upon the power of these rivers in five New England States and nine or ten Southern ones certainly produce an annual output of nearly or quite half a billion dollars, but the floods of springtime and the ever-increasing severity of the midsummer droughts offer a constant menace to their prosperity, and instead of the vast future development that would otherwise be looked for it is feared that decay will set in and that the diminished streams of summer will barely trickle past a few abandoned wheels that have managed to escape the springtime freshets.

SWITZERLAND.

In Switzerland, which has 2,000,000 acres, or 20.6 per cent of its area, in forest, the communal forests are the largest, and make up 67 per cent of the total; the cantons own 4.5 per cent; and private persons own 28.6 per cent. The communal holdings are constantly growing by the purchase of private lands. The general Government, or Bund, owns no forests. From $6,000,000 to $8,000,000 worth of wood (300,000 tons) and wooden ware are annually imported. This comes mainly from Austria-Hungary, southern Germany, and France.

The state forests yield about 64 cubic feet per acre, the corporation forests 42 cubic feet; the average yield of both together is about 45 cubic feet. The average wood growth per acre has been estimated to be 50 cubic feet. In the state forests of Bern the figures show a growth of 60 cubic feet for the plateau country, 73 cubic feet for the middle country, and 75 cubic feet in the Jura. Wood prices, which are higher than in Germany, have been rising for forty years.

The expenditures in forest management vary greatly among the Cantons, ranging from $1.50 to $7 per acre. The net annual returns range from $3 per acre in the forests, where least is expended to $8 or $9 per acre in the city forests, where most is expended.

Forest regulations came very early in Switzerland. The first forest ordinance of Bern was issued six hundred years ago. The city forest of Zurich, famous as the Sihlwald, has been managed under a working plan since 1680, and is to-day one of the most perfectly managed and most profitable forests in the world. It yields, on the average, a clear annual profit of $12 an acre. From time to time, as the evidence shows, the Swiss people stood in dread of a timber famine. Ordinances were passed forbidding the reduction of the forest area, the making of clearings, and the exportation of wood from one Canton to another. In the middle of the eighteenth century, as modern industrial life began, various Cantons sought to follow the examples which Bern and Zurich had set in forestry. A severe flood in 1830 brought home the need of more vigorous measures in guarding against torrents. The floods of 1834 and 1868 further enforced the lesson. An investigation of Swiss forest conditions was ordered by the Bund in 1857, and the same year provision was made for an annual appropriation of $2,000 to the Swiss Forestry Association for engineering and reforestation work in the Alps. In 1871 the Bundesrath was empowered to carry on this work, with an annual appropriation of $20,000. After the flood of 1868 $200,000 of the collections made for the relief of the sufferers was devoted to reforestation. In 1876 the Bund assumed supervision of the water and forest police in the High Alps above a certain elevation, and undertook to give aid in the work of engineering and reforestation for the control of the Alpine torrents. Since 1898 the Bund has supervised all this work, and in 1902 the present forest policy was firmly fixed by a revision of the existing law.

All the Swiss forests comprised in the Bund are now classified as protection and nonprotection forests. Whether public or private they are all controlled by the Government. In protection forests all cuttings must be such as to preserve the protective value of the forest cover intact, and for this reason clean cutting is usually forbidden. In such forests stumpage sales are forbidden, and all wood must be felled and measured under the direction of a forest officer. Otherwise, privately owned protection forests are supervised in the main as are those publicly owned. Nonprotection forests are also subject to a number of regulations. When they are in private hands clearings may be made only with consent of the Canton, logged areas must be reforested within three years, and existing forest pastures must be maintained.

Where protection forests can be created by planting, this may be ordered, and where forests are converted to farming land or pasture an equal area may be ordered reforested. Where barren ground is required to be forested for protective purposes, the Bund assists by paying from 30 to 50 per cent of the cost. Between 1876 and 1902 16,000 acres were reforested at a cost of $1,000,000, in round numbers, the Bund having paid one-half.

Grazing has been regulated for centuries. In protection forests it is entirely prohibited; but on all the rest of the forests great success has attended the efforts of the forest service to safeguard both pasturage and the forest by supervision and range improvement. Despite differences in local conditions, the experience of Switzerland in forest grazing is, therefore, strongly in support of the policies which are directing the efforts of our own Forest Service. Indeed, the experience of all Europe shows the necessity of controlling the public range.

To sum up, forestry in Switzerland, where every foot of agricultural land is of the greatest value, has made it possible for the people to farm all land fit for crops, and so has assisted the country to support a larger population, and one that is more prosperous, than would be the case if the valleys were subjected to destructive floods. In a country as small as Switzerland, and one which contains so many high and rugged mountains, this is a service the benefits of which can not be measured in dollars. It is in Switzerland also, in the Sihlwald, that forestry demonstrates beyond contradiction how great a yield in wood and money it may bring about if applied consistently for a number of years.

The fires then come, and then the soil is soon washed away.

WILLFUL WASTE MAKES WOEFUL WANT—ANNUAL SOIL WASTE A BILLION DOLLARS.

The waterways of the United States annually sweep from land to sea a billion tons of earth. Of this, 90 per cent is chiefly soil matter. In weight it is comparable with the total annual tonnage of all our railroads and river and lake vessels. Applied as a fertilizer, it would cover to the depth of a quarter of an inch an area of about 340,000 square miles, or the land surface of all the Atlantic States from Maine to South Carolina, inclusive, with Vermont, New York, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and one-third of Georgia thrown in. Its value may be estimated as at least a billion dollars. Its loss is the heaviest impost borne by the American farmer.

Soil wash and river ravage are largely to be traced to the absence of forests from slopes on which rivers rise.

W. J. MCGEE,

United States Inland Waterways Commission and Bureau of Soils.

SOIL WASHED AWAY—PITIFUL FLIGHT WITHOUT POWER.

Of our great sources of power, by which we operate our industries, our means of transportation, our light, and the heat of our houses, there are three—coal, wood, and water. The first is irreplaceable, and the world's stock will not last for long. Wood we can raise as an annual crop if we adopt intelligent means, but water is the great future source of power. We must preserve its sources. Pitiful, indeed, would be our condition if it were gone.

If we are to have waterways, we must have trees on the hillsides, and the future of this country undeniably rests upon the preservation of those trees.

HOW DESOLATION STARTS.

After the forest is gone, this is what happens: The humus or soil dries up, loses its fibrous life, and by erosion is rapidly washed down into the rivers, where it is deposited to the detriment of navigation, necessitating millions of dollars of Government money each year for dredging. The heavier forest debris, which is not removed, dries up and becomes a tangled mass of timber that takes fire when the hunter's or the woodman's match falls into it. In some cases lightning strikes it. The fires, beginning in this debris, spread to the forests that are left, and every year do incalculable damage.

DROUGHT AND DELUGE.

After this process is complete and the watersheds are left bare, comes death and the deluge. First, the springs and the multitude of tiny brooks that feed the rivers are dried up, and the latter in the dry season get very low, causing enormous loss of the water power which runs the great mills of the Connecticut, Merrimac, and Saco rivers. Then the snows melt and the heavy later rains begin. There is no soil now to hold back and distribute evenly this downfall on the steep slopes, and so we have the devastating floods, which annually entail enormous losses. And what goes on in New England pertains with far more serious consequences on both sides of the Appalachian Mountain Ranges from Pennsylvania down.

WHY FOREST PRESERVATION IS VITAL—SPEEDY RUIN IN DISTANT STATES FOLLOWS DESTRUCTION OF MOUNTAIN-SIDE FORESTS—THE PROCESS OUTLINED—ARE WE THE CHAMPION SLEEPERS?

"Floods and forest fires do damage annually in New England, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and the Southern States amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars. This loss is very directly traceable to the enormous denudation of the forests on the mountain sides." The speaker was Mr. Charles S. De Forest and the occasion was a meeting of the New Haven Chamber of Commerce a few nights ago.

HARBORS AND SOIL WASTE.

Vast sums are spent each year in raising the levees and digging out the channels of the Mississippi and its tributaries and upon the harbors of the Gulf and ocean coast. We are told that a billion tons of the most fertile topsoil of the land goes off each year into the sea, and that it is worth a billion dollars. That is as much as it costs each year to run the Government of the United States. It is said to be twice the value of all the lumber products of the country, and surely is a tremendous lot more than the lumber products will be worth if present conditions continue.

There is no other question now before the nation of equal gravity with the question of the conservation of our natural resources; and it is the plain duty of us who for the moment are responsible to take inventory of the natural resources which have been handed down to us, to forecast the needs of the future, and so handle the great sources of our prosperity as not to destroy in advance all hope of the prosperity of our descendants.

Facts which I can not gainsay force me to believe that conservation of our natural resources is the most weighty question now before the people of the United States. If this be so, the proposed conference, which is the first of its kind, will be among the most important gatherings in our history in its effects upon the welfare of all our people. (President Roosevelt.)

THE EXPERIENCE OF FRANCE.

If we wait until forest and soil are gone before beginning a sound policy of handling these mountains, we shall invite the bitter experience of France, who, at infinite pains and an expenditure of $40,000,000 within her limited area, is endeavoring to restore both soil and forest to her mountains after a course of destruction such as ours at present.

The streams of the Appalachians are of enormous value to the nation for water power and navigation. If the forests are removed from the mountains, this value will be reduced to a fraction, because the soil from the denuded watersheds will so rapidly fill reservoirs and channels that even the resources of the Government itself will be insufficient to keep them clear.

JAMES WILSON,
Secretary of Agriculture.

The following statement in reference to the James River appears in the Report of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, for the year 1885, part 2, page 947:

"It has been estimated that at least 275,000 cubic yards of solid matter pass Rocketts Reef in twenty-four hours when there is a freshet not higher than 10 feet. No account is taken in this estimate of the heavy material rolling along the bottom. It is probably far within limits to say that in such a freshet not less than 300,000 cubic yards pass in twenty-four hours. Large quantities of the lighter particles held in suspension are carried far down the river, but the heavier pieces that roll along the bottom move only by a rapid current and stop as soon as the freshet subsides and must be taken out by dredging. It is therefore believed that it will be necessary in the future, as it has been in the past, to keep on hand a dredging plant ready for emergencies."

This is a significant statement. It means that, year after year, the expense of maintaining and operating a dredging plant must be kept up in connection with James River navigation; and while the cost in any single year may not appear great, a succession of years will produce a total expense far in excess of the cost of providing reservoir capacity sufficient to prevent the silting up of the lower channel. Up to July 1, 1905, the Government had expended in round numbers $1,250,000 on the James River, and the total estimate for the finished improvement of that river is $5,375,000. But, even with this expenditure, high maintenance charges will continue so long as freshets continue to bring down material that must be dredged from the navigable channel. The same is true of the Potomac River. The conditions upon the drainage areas of both rivers with reference to the possibilities of water conservation may be summarized as follows:

"In the Potomac basin, topographic surveys reveal six reservoir sites of sufficient capacity for the storage of the entire annual discharge from 1,350 square miles. That is, if these reservoirs were constructed and the gates closed, a year would pass before the water would spill over the tops. These reservoirs would thus place under control 12 per cent of the entire drainage area of the Potomac above Great Falls. Many other reservoir sites might be designated on more careful survey. The total capacity of these reservoirs is 58,510,000,000 cubic feet."

The low-water stage of rivers could be augmented and the reservoirs made ready for the next freshet by emptying the reservoirs into the river as the flood recedes. History shows that deforested regions become almost uninhabitable for human beings.

PALESTINE HAS BECOME A DESERT—WHY SHOULD NOT NORTH CAROLINA AND NEW HAMPSHIRE?

The intelligent use of our resources means for the United States a great and happy future. The waste of these resources means that we shall repeat the conditions we see in northern Africa, in Greece, in Spain, and Palestine. We are not beyond the operation of natural laws, and neglect of the fundamental basis of land and water will bring upon us and our descendants the same results that have desolated those countries.

GIFFORD PINCHOT,
Chief of Forest Service.

REGION BECOMES UNINHABITABLE.

In 1896, Prof. N. S. Shaler, of Harvard University, said: "South of Pennsylvania there is, according to my reckoning, based on observations in every State in that upland country, an aggregate area of not less than 3,000 square miles where the soil has been destroyed by the complete removal of the woods and the consequent passage of the earthy matter to the lowlands and to the sea. "The rapidity of this destruction has recently been greatly accelerated. Faster than was considered possible eleven years ago, these regions are moving toward a forestless, soilless condition." (From Report of Secretary of Agriculture, December 11, 1907.)

THE SOIL.

Through deforestation the very soil itself is being washed away. Says Mr. W. J. McGee, of the United States Inland Waterways Commission and Bureau of Soils:

"The waterways of the United States annually sweep from land to sea a billion tons of earth. Of this 90 per cent is chiefly soil matter. In weight it is comparable with the total annual tonnage of all our railroads and river and lake vessels. Its bulk is one-fifth of a cubic mile. It equals a block 1 mile square and over a thousand feet high. Applied as a fertilizer it would cover, to the depth of a quarter of an inch, an area of about 340,000 square miles, or the land surface of all the Atlantic States from Maine to South Carolina, inclusive, with Vermont, New York, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and one-third of Georgia thrown in. Its value may be estimated as at least a billion dollars. Its loss is the heaviest impost borne by the American farmer."

"This soil waste is sapping a resource richer than all others combined save one, namely, our inland waters. These, immeasurably our richest resource, are, in great measure, perverted from a blessing into a curse. And both soil wash and river ravage are largely to be traced to the absence of forests from slopes on which rivers rise."

In a century such an amount as this equals the bulk and weight of a range of mountains a mile high and 40 to 50 miles long, quite enough, doubtless, to considerably depress the earth's surface along the coast line. Faster and faster the relentless waves are eating into New Jersey's shores, and the whole coast from New England to the Gulf is said to be more and more rapidly sinking. Must we augment the process? And yet, if the coast line does not sink to make up for all this waste poured down from the hills, will not the result be yet more serious in the filling up of every bay and harbor of our whole ocean and Gulf front? Evidently we are using up a billion dollars' worth of good material each year for the purpose of destroying our harbors and our rivers, choking our fertile valleys, annihilating manufactures that depend on water power, producing a hard-wood famine, and sinking our coast cities beneath the sea.

Are there any people who call themselves intelligent who can find economy in this?

BITTER LESSON FROM CHINA.

In northern China the mountains have been swept as bare of forests as are our city pavements. Floods have devastated the valleys. Wood has become so rare as to be confined largely to the making of coffins, for which purpose it is borne on human backs down rugged slopes and defiles in journeys of some ten days or two weeks. Grass, dug up by the roots from remote mountains, and stubbled raked clean from harvested fields constitute the chief forms of fuel. Rivers go dry in summer. "Little wonder that the traveler passes through successive villages absolutely destitute of human inhabitants, and that, even in the more favored regions, the parent, upon the birth of a female child, frequently debates whether to drown it outright, or leave it to be carried away by the next famine."

DESTRUCTION OF EMPIRES.

Once upon a time, before the mountain forests of Lebanon were destroyed, Palestine supported in much affluence a population of 10,000,000. The mountains have long been denuded. Forbidding slopes, barren and ugly, rear their weird forms sharply above dismal and desolate valleys. Scarcely 400,000 people remain in all the region, and most of these are in hopeless and abject poverty. The valley of Babylon, where once stood the metropolis of the world, is abandoned and forlorn. Desert wastes cover the sites of Carthage and Tyre and Siden, yet bountiful nature once provided for these places its richest gifts of fertility and abundance. Antioch is gone, and all Syria is a scene of irreparable ruin. "The destruction of her forests, followed by the disappearance of her soil and the decay of her industries," foreshadowed the inevitable result. "Man destroyed the forests, and lands which once flowed with milk and honey were transformed into deserts." One-third of China, it is said, has been rendered uninhabitable, and the ruined hills of southern Italy will no longer support their population. Is such a mournful history of so-called civilization—that is really but a record of devastation and destruction—to be repeated in America?

Hundreds of years ago Spain allowed the great mass of her forestry, on her central table-lands, to be destroyed, and has since crystallized her sad experience into the famous proverb, "The tree is the father of the fountain." (Ex-Governor Pardee, of California.)

MUCH WORSE THAN WAR.

The devastation of war is but for a brief time, after all. There have been broad strips of smiling country laid waste by the invader even in our own land, and ruin for the time being seemed complete, yet another generation comes upon the scene and those of us who belong to it look in vain for the scars that were inflicted.

It is different when natural resources instead of artificial creations have been destroyed, and this destruction of the forest and the mountain side, the valleys and the rivers, means ruin of States instead of counties; ruin that will last a thousand years instead of a generation; ruin that will be complete and overwhelming; a calamity brought on by human ignorance and greed. It is a ruin clearly foreseen by those who have the knowledge to foresee, clearly preventable by human means if we have the will to prevent. It is probably within the truth to say that a city like San Francisco might be destroyed every three or four months without bringing greater loss of the national wealth than is now going on all the time in the destruction of our forests.

This same appeal of the West to the East, which claims the right to munch its own cooky in its own way—the public lands and what is contained thereon or therein, also says:

Much of the publication appearing now in the press and magazines with reference to forest reserves is but the outward and visible sign of the healthy reaction, penitence, and alarm that accompanies our awakening sense of what has been squandered. Still, much of the publication is due to the activity of the Forest Service's press bureau maintained from Washington. The slips sent out by the Forest Service make fine, readable "fillers," and it is free "copy" for editors.

But there is another side to this matter of forest reserves which the people should have an opportunity to view. It is a side the East knows nothing about. There is only a vague impression in the East that, for some reason, away out in the West where the forest reserves are, there is a strong opposition to this institution.

This impression is wholly incorrect; nowhere in the world are forest reserves so enthusiastically commended and appreciated as an institution as in this arid Western country. In the two years that the writer has lived in the Far West, he has never yet heard a word of opposition to forest reserves voiced by any representative citizen.

Such a statement from such a source creates wonder in our minds when we observe some of the criticisms of the Forest Service and the Chief Forester on the floor of Congress.

Our present policy as to the handling of our forests is purely and solely the result of greed.

EXTRACTS FROM REPORTS OF THE PRESIDENTS OF THE PUBLIC LANDS COMMISSION (S. DOC. NO. 189, FIFTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, THIRD SESSION).

The conclusion regarding the timber and stone act given on page 3 is—

"Our conclusion is that the law is defective, because even when properly administered it may be used for purposes for which it was never intended, and we recommend its repeal."

In the second report of the Commission, given in the same document on page 13, it is stated:

"In addition to the direct loss to the Government from the sale of the lands far below their real value, timber lands which should have been preserved for the use of the people are withdrawn from such use and the development of the country retarded until the corporations which own the timber see fit to cut it. The bona fide settler who comes into a country the timber resources of which have thus been absorbed, may thus be seriously hampered by inability to secure timber except from foreign corporations. All of the timber land has often passed beyond his reach and the development of his farm may be greatly retarded and his expenses greatly increased, because he can no longer obtain the necessary supply of fuel, rails, posts, and lumber."

THE PRESIDENT'S VIEW.

President Roosevelt has repeatedly expressed himself on this vital theme. At Raleigh, N. C., on October 19, 1905, he said:

"The preservation of the forests is vital to the welfare of every country. China and the Mediterranean countries offer examples of the terrible effect of deforestation. Neither State nor nation can afford to turn these mountains over to the unrestrained greed of those who would exploit them at the expense of the future. We can not afford to wait longer before assuming control, in the interest of the public, of these forests."

UTILIZING THE WATERS.

Our inland waters are our greatest natural resource. The water flowing down our Western mountains far exceeds in value the fabulous wealth represented by all the metals and minerals lying between the Rockies and the Pacific.

To-day most of this resource is wasted. Each year at least 1,000,000 horsepower runs over Federal Government dams. Capitalized at 3 per cent, it represents an investment of $1,066,000,000 now wholly wasted.

Further, uncontrolled water is a curse. Flood damage in the United States exceeds $100,000,000 per year. With our water controlled and utilized, this sum might be saved and a fivefold greater value produced.

A plan for Federal action is essential, and it must infallibly include the conservation of forests upon the slopes on which rise important streams. (M. O. Leighton, chief hydrographer United States Geological Survey.)

NERO'S CARELESSNESS.

Nero fiddled while Rome burned, and he has been much criticised for his carelessness; but how much better are we behaving? We are pretty patriotic when we get sufficiently aroused, and quite excited while the band wagon is going by. We would respond gaily to the call to arms if we knew that a foreign invader was crossing our frontier. With such unintelligent patriotism, many empires and rich domains of former years have faded from the map of the world and are now buried beneath the sands of the desert. It was thus that Babylon and Tyre and Sidon and Antioch have perished—that one-third of China has become uninhabitable.

But that sort of thing takes time. Perhaps most of us will be gone before the country begins to pay its severest penalty for forest devastation. So why should we care for the future of our Eastern States? Let us eat, drink, and be merry, for to-morrow we die; and when we die, hooray for the overwhelming deluge and the municipal policy of the great Nero.

Nothing more important than the preservation of our forests can claim the attention of Congress. No other portion of our citizenship can remedy this matter, while it is clearly our duty and a most important duty to do so.

Most important because if left undone for a very few years the damage can never be made good. If left undone, soon it can not be done at all.

Addressing the National Rivers and Harbors Congress at Washington, D. C., on December 4, 1907, Mr. J. J. Jusserand, French ambassador, said:

"It is an absolute principle: No forests, no waterways. Without forests regulating the distribution of waters, rainfalls are at once carried to the sea, hurried sometimes, alas, across the country. After having devastated the neighboring fields, the rivers find themselves again with little water and much sand; and with such rivers how will you fill your canals? * * * The question is as clear as can be: Do you want to have navigable rivers, or do you prefer to have torrents that will destroy your crops and never bear a boat? If you prefer the first, then mind your forests. We can tell you, for we know."

"If the Mississippi is the 'Father of Waters,' the forest is the father of the Mississippi."

The question of water power alone, and of electric power derived therefrom, involves millions of dollars.

Says Mr. M. O. Leighton, chief hydrographer, United States Geological Survey:

POWER.

"Our inland waters are our greatest natural resource. The water flowing down our Western mountains far exceeds in value the fabulous wealth represented by all the metals and minerals lying between the Rockies and the Pacific."

"President Roosevelt says that the one item of flood disaster would make this matter of preserving our forests a question of the very first importance."

The money already spent in diking and dredging our rivers is ample to stop our floods by means of forests and reservoirs, and we have just spent enough to commence to realize that to control a flood you should commence at the source, not after it becomes a raging torrent.

TO CONTROL A FLOOD COMMENCE AT SOURCE—HOW TO CONTROL THE RIVERS—FORESTS AT THEIR HEADWATERS THE ONLY PROTECTION FOR NAVIGATION AND WATER POWER—NO FORESTS, NO WATERWAYS.

It is an absolute principle—no forests, no waterways. Without forests regulating the distribution of waters, rainfalls are at once carried to the sea, hurried sometimes, alas, across the country. After having devastated the neighboring fields, the rivers find themselves again with little water and much sand; and with such rivers, how will you fill your canals? * * * The question is as clear as can be: Do you want to have navigable rivers or do you prefer to have torrents that will destroy your crops and never bear a boat? If you prefer the first, then mind your forests. We can tell you, for we know."

If the Mississippi is the "Father of Waters," the forest is the father of the Mississippi. (M. Jusserand, ambassador from France.)

WITHOUT FORESTS STORAGE RESERVOIRS ARE FUTILE.

The building of storage reservoirs to take the place of the natural storage of the forest will be quite futile. As Secretary Wilson's report sets forth, "Any reservoir system in the Southern Appalachians is foredoomed to failure unless the watersheds which feed it are kept under forest." Examples of reservoirs completely filled are on almost every stream. If the silt can be "sluiced" out of the highest reservoir, it gathers in the next below, and if perchance it passes the last reservoir it is free for deposit in the navigable reaches of the streams, whence its removal may only be by a steam dredge at the expense of the Government. Yet, if these storage reservoirs could be maintained, not only manufactures but inland navigation would be possible on thousands of miles of rivers.

The Merrimac, "Rhine of America," supports a population of 350,000, with property assessed at $240,000,000. It drives mills worth $100,000,000, employing annually 80,000 people earning $37,000,000 annually in wages.

This industry is menaced by the destruction of the White Mountain forests.

Speaking, on May 15, 1907, of the dependence of New England upon her factories run by water power, and the floods and droughts occasioned by deforestation in the White Mountains, Mr. Theophilus Parsons, a prominent New England manufacturer, said: "This is a question in which every manufacturer on the Eastern coast of the United States is interested."

The governor of Massachusetts, Hon. Curtis Guild, jr., added his testimony, on April 20, 1906, in the following language: "Stripping the hills of trees means floods and freshets in the spring and water famines during the remainder of the year. It means a threat to property, if not, indeed, to life. It means an enforced idleness for many of our people."

The following statement by Mr. Augustine T. Smythe, of Charleston, S. C., made on May 17, 1907, indicates graphically the situation in the South:

"In the Carolinas and Georgia there is invested in cotton mills run by water power alone over $40,000,000. The horsepower utilized is 105,895. The spindles turned number 2,711,375. They consume annually 892,357 bales of cotton, worth, when manufactured, over $70,000,000. The hands employed number 60,000. Counting families, 240,000 people are dependent upon these mills. This vast industry faces destruction. The cutting of the Appalachian forests means its end. A national forest reserve in the Appalachians is the only salvation."

Prof. N. S. Shaler, of Harvard, is one of the foremost students of forestry in this country. In 1896 he said:

"South of Pennsylvania there is, according to my reckoning, based on observations in every State of that upland country, an aggregate area of not less than 3,000 square miles where the soil has been destroyed by the complete removal of the woods and the consequent passage of the earthy matter to the lowlands and to the sea. At the rate at which this process is going on the loss in arable and forestable land may fairly be reckoned at not less than 100 square miles per annum. In other words, we are each year losing to the uses of man, through unnecessary destruction, a productive capacity which may be estimated as sufficient to sustain a population of 1,000 people."

The process which Professor Shaler observed has been greatly accelerated since that time, and it is not unlikely that at this time chances of subsistence are being withdrawn from at least 2,000 people in the Southern Appalachians alone. A peculiarity of that country is that it gullies easily, so that when the forest cover is removed entirely, which is usually done by the settlers, but often by lumbermen through careless logging, the heavy rains wash out gullies until a whole mountain slope may be made absolutely bare, with all the thin surface soil, which will furnish sustenance for trees or crops, carried off; to be deposited, not where it is needed, but on top of the rich bottom lands, which in turn are made valueless, or in the beds of streams.

Again, he says:

"If we wait until forest and soil are gone before beginning a sound policy of handling these mountains, we shall invite the bitter experience of France, which at infinite pains and an expenditure of $40,000,000 is endeavoring to restore both soil and forest to her mountains after a course of destruction such as are ours at present."

The damage from the floods of the Missouri and the Mississippi, below where the Missouri enters it, are yearly so vast as to go far toward forest retention where advisable and the reservoir building necessary to control a large per cent of the floods.

The diking is another great expense, and together they will often cost as much in one year as would be necessary to retain the waters near the sources in sufficient quantities to lower the crest of every flood in these rivers at least 12 to 20 inches.

Under the national irrigation law passed June 2, 1902, sufficient reservoirs are now building on the headwaters of the Missouri River to impound enough water to cover 2,500,000 acres of land 12 inches deep, and this will be increased every year for many years to come. This added to what could readily and comparatively cheaply be kept out of the floods by means of reservoirs built for that especial purpose, and this added to the waters which could be retained by forest preservation, would lower the crest of every flood on the Missouri enough so that if taken from the high stages of all floods on these rivers would decrease the damage caused by these floods at least 75 per cent, and the silt carried by them to even a greater extent. The expenses of dikes added to the damage by floods for any five-year period on the Mississippi and Missouri would furnish the funds necessary to practically stop flood damage and also stop the necessity for any large future expense on the dikes.

If the cities along these streams will expend in controlling the floods at their source one-half the money Chicago has spent for her ditch and is willing to add to the cost of it to enlarge the same, they will have a great highway of transportation to the Gulf that will carry one-half the cereals of the United States to market, together with a vast and constantly growing amount of other commodities. Yet, instead of pursuing this common-sense plan they, like the tenderfoot when you set him to irrigating crops, get to the flood end of the stream and spend their energy at the impossible task of controlling the volume of water when it has become a raging torrent, instead of going to the source and directing it with comparative ease. If we could but get the men who are using so much money and energy to make the Missouri River navigable to use their ingenuity and wealth where something can be accomplished that will be permanent, by seeing that all the hillsides of the watershed are covered with timber and every feasible place made into a permanent reservoir, the crest of the flood could thus be lowered so, as to prevent nearly all damage from high water. These reservoirs could be emptied as soon as the waters commence to recede, and thus have less water at flood and more during the ebb of the streams.

Then a channel once prepared could be kept intact at small expense.

Yet probably the worst feature of this forest destruction lies in the loss of our water powers.

We are evidently nearing the necessity of a greatly augmented source of supply of heat and light, as well as of motive power. If the ancients could not inhabit their lands after they had destroyed the timber on their mountains and hills, how can we hope to do so when one of the important results is the loss of water power, which they could not utilize and that we can scarcely get along without? Our rapid use of our fuels and our constantly increasing demand for them, coupled with our daily increase of knowledge as to how to derive power and light from our water powers and transmit it to great distances, points unmistakably to our ability when the necessity arises to propel all our means of transportation, to furnish power for our machinery, and furnish us our light and heat with the water powers, unless we destroy them. Will we by our votes continue a process of the destruction of the forests covering our hills and mountains, thus daily destroying these valuable assets, the water powers, at a rate that will leave us but a pitance of what we have had so lavishly bestowed upon us and that we will so much need in the near future, especially when all that we are doing with the proceeds is putting a few more dollars into the pockets of a few land speculators who have no real use for these dollars?

Let me present this phase of the situation to you for your consideration: Suppose you vote with the friends of this measure and later conclude we had better change back to the present policy, we will still have the timber and we can do so, whereas if we continue our present methods of handling our timber supply, the damage will soon be such as can not be remedied. This feature will result from the total destruction of the forest and the burning over of large areas which are of no value except for the growth of trees which they will support.

H. R. No. 21140, which we succeeded after five years of effort in getting reported to the House, and to which I wish to call your attention, does not provide for the disposition of an acre of our public domain, and does not in any way change the method of disposing of a particle of our timber, except in those cases where the present method disposes of it at clearly less than its value. Surely no friend of irrigation can oppose such a saving to this valuable fund, unless perchance it goes to himself or some very close friend. Especially when we at the same time save the navigability of our rivers, save the flood waters for irrigation, save our water powers, which must in the near future furnish our only source of power to draw our trains, drive our machinery, and furnish us our heat, as well as our light. Especially when we thus at the same time preserve a greater system of reservoirs than man could possibly build, for the forests retain a vast amount of water.

It seems to me clear that, as I have stated earlier, there can be no reason assigned for continuing this policy of the destruction of our forests which does not spring from avarice. I must again before closing call your attention to the fact that to sell the remainder of the timber on the public domain outside of forest reserves, under this bill instead of as we have been selling it under the present law, will save not less than $200,000,000, which may be used in forest perpetuation, drainage, and irrigation, thus making homes on what is now worthless land for millions of human beings. Besides we will thus always have something of a supply of timber, whereas under the present method that supply will totally and forever disappear as far as the lands thus disposed of are concerned, and the soil of the hillsides will be cast into our rivers, navigation be impeded and our water powers very much lessened in value, while if you vote for H. R. 21140, you have all of these left and can turn it over to speculators at any time we so desire. I really hope that when we get time to consider this bill no one will vote against it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill to preserve the forests is not what it ought to be, but it is better than no bill at all.

Representative STANLEY, of Kentucky, offered in the committee a resolution which, in my judgment, would have been the best step to take at this session under the circumstances. He wanted the Forester, accompanied by the Agricultural Committee, to go and inspect in person the forests sought to be protected, so that each member could see for himself the necessity for this legislation. If this course had been pursued, we would have had at the next session of Congress an enthusiastic committee on the side of forest protection. But for the opposition of Representative LEVER, of South Carolina, and Representative LAMB, of Virginia, the forests would have been investigated this summer, and the proper legislation would have followed. This legislation is a step in the right direction and will lead to better legislation later.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks, without reading, the report of the committee upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The report is as follows:

[House Report No. 1700, Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Agriculture, to which was referred House bill 21986, has had the same under consideration and reports as follows:

At the beginning of the present session a number of bills were introduced and referred to the Committee on Agriculture having for their general purpose the purchase of certain tracts of land in the White Mountains and in the Southern Appalachian Mountains with a view to preserving the forests on said lands and conserving the flow in the rivers having their sources therein. The committee considered its most pressing duty to be, first, to prepare the appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture. Before the consideration of this bill had been completed a resolution was introduced by Representative BARTLETT of Georgia, providing that the bills above mentioned, commonly known as the "White Mountain and Appalachian Park forest reserve bills," be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary with the request that that committee render an opinion as to the constitutionality of the proposed measures. This resolution was adopted by the House, and the bills were referred accordingly. Pending the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Agriculture was of the opinion that it could not properly give consideration to these measures.

On April 20, 1908, the Committee on the Judiciary rendered an opinion to the effect that the United States would have no right to purchase lands for the purpose of creating a forest reserve, but that Congress might appropriate for the purchase of lands having a direct and substantial connection with the navigability of navigable rivers. As a result of this decision, Representatives who had introduced the bills which had been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary modified and reintroduced them, and they were again referred to the Committee on Agriculture, which took up the consideration of them at the earliest possible date. After hearing testimony and considering the bills for several days, it became evident that the committee, with the information then before it, was unwilling to favorably recommend any measure committing the United States to the policy of purchasing forest lands. The whole matter was therefore referred to a subcommittee, with instructions to recommend to the full committee such action as it was deemed proper to take. As a result of the deliberations of this subcommittee, the bill H. R. 21986 was reported to the full committee and by its action is herewith reported to the House.

It is a matter of common knowledge that the forests in the White Mountains and in the Southern Appalachian Mountains are being rapidly destroyed, and the desirability of preserving what remains of them, or at least of introducing methods of lumbering which will prevent the destruction of immature timber and will protect the forests from fire, is universally conceded, not only for the perpetuation of the timber supply, but also for the conservation of the flow of water in the streams having their source within these forests. The problem as to how this desired end should be reached has been widely discussed and has awakened profound interest throughout the entire country. As a result of this discussion four distinct methods have been suggested.

First. It has been held by many that the problem was one belonging exclusively to the States concerned. Those holding this view have argued that the Federal Government has no constitutional authority to purchase lands for the purpose of conserving the forests upon them, even though such preservation may conserve the supply of water in navigable streams. They hold that the matter is one over which the States have exclusive jurisdiction, and that if the right exists it is the duty of the State to assume the responsibility of meeting it.

Second. Another view is that while it is neither the right nor the duty of the Federal Government to purchase the forests it may properly cooperate with the States or with private owners in their preservation by furnishing expert advice and assistance in their proper utilization and administration.

Third. Still another view is that when it is shown that the forests of a given watershed have a direct and substantial connection with the navigability of the navigable rivers flowing from that watershed the Federal Government has the right to exercise jurisdiction over the forests therein, although they remain in private ownership, and prescribe the method which shall be followed in utilizing the forests within such watershed.

Fourth. The last, and doubtless the most generally advocated plan, proposes that the Federal Government shall buy all the land that may be necessary to protect the watersheds of navigable rivers and exercise over the forests growing upon them all the rights and privileges of absolute ownership.

The bill now before the House was drawn with a view to meeting, in a measure at least, each of these four proposed plans. The first section proposes to give the consent of Congress to each of the several States of the Union which may wish to do so to enter into such agreement or compact, not in conflict with any law of the United States, as it may deem desirable or necessary, with any other State or States for the purpose of conserving the forests and the water supply of the States entering into such agreement or compact. It has been often urged, by those who insist that the Federal Government should purchase the forests under consideration, that the problem is interstate, and in view of the constitutional inhibition against a State entering into any agreement or compact with another the proper treatment of the problem is made impossible to the States alone. If section 1 of this bill becomes a law, this obstacle to cooperation between and among the States will be removed.

Section 2 of the bill appropriates the sum of $100,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with any State or group of States, when requested to do so, by supplying expert advice on forest preservation, utilization, and administration, and upon reforestation of denuded areas. It also authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into agreement with the owners of any private forest lands situated upon the watershed of a navigable river, to administer and protect such forest land upon such terms as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe. It is believed that under the authority given in this section many thousands of acres of forest lands will be brought as effectually within the jurisdiction of the United States for all the purposes of scientific forestry as if these lands were actually owned by the Government.

Section 3 of the bill provides for the appointment of a commission to be composed of five members of the Senate, to be appointed by the presiding officer thereof, and five Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker.

Section 4 makes it the duty of this commission to investigate all questions tending to show the direct and substantial connection, if any, between the preservation of the forests within the watersheds of the navigable rivers having their sources in the White Mountains and Southern Appalachian Mountains, and the navigability of said rivers. And in case the commission shall determine that such direct and substantial connection exists, it shall then be its duty to ascertain to what extent, if at all, it may be necessary for the Government of the United States to acquire land within the watersheds referred to, the number of acres of such land, and the probable cost, or whether it may be desirable, if within the power of the United States to exercise, without purchase, such supervision over such watersheds as may be necessary to conserve the navigability of the rivers proceeding therefrom. Under the provisions of this section all the questions arising out of the proposal that the Federal Government purchase the forests or that it exercise jurisdiction over them without purchase, may be carefully studied and fully considered. It is true that by an act of the last Congress the Secretary of Agriculture was authorized to report and did report upon the watersheds of the Southern Appalachian and White mountains, the purpose of the report being to present to Congress "the area and natural conditions of said watersheds, the price at which the same can be purchased by the Federal Government, and the advisability of the Government purchasing and setting aside the same as national forest reserves for the purpose of conserving and regulating the water supply and the flow of said streams in the interest of agriculture, water power, and navigation."

Without intending any reflection upon those who prepared this report, it may be fairly said that it does not present such detailed and accurate information as any careful business man would insist upon having before entering upon a policy which was to involve the expenditure of many millions of dollars. It does not indicate the extent of the navigable portions of the rivers whose navigability it is desired to protect, nor the value of the forests upon them. It presents no data showing to what extent, if at all, the volume or the steadiness of stream flow has been influenced by the destruction of the forests. It shows in only the most general way the location, area, and probable cost of the lands it is proposed to purchase. While it recommends (p. 37) that the Government acquire an area of 600,000 acres in the White Mountains and 5,000,000 acres in the Southern Appalachian Mountains, it states also (p. 32) that an area of 75,000,000 acres will have to be given protection "before the watersheds and important streams are adequately safeguarded," suggesting the thought that while less than 7,000,000 acres are to be purchased at once, 75,000,000 acres must ultimately be acquired if the watershed of the important streams are to be "adequately safeguarded." Your committee is of the opinion that if a commission of ten members of the legislative body, responsible to their constituents and to the country for whatever report they may make, is directed to investigate the subject, the information presented in its report will be sufficiently comprehensive and exact to enable Congress to intelligently legislate upon the subject. The commission is given authority to employ experts and such clerical assistants as may be needed, and is required to report to the President not later than January 1, 1909.

Believing that this bill, by opening the way for the States to cooperate with one another, puts it within their power to contribute much to the solution of this important problem; that the provision it makes for cooperation between the United States, the States, and private owners of forest lands must contribute greatly to the rapid extension of scientific forestry; and that by means of the commission for which it provides the most careful study of the whole problem with a view to future legislation is made possible, and that for these reasons the proposed legislation will be of great public advantage, your committee respectfully reports the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have made this request because I desire the record to show the history of the bills that have been introduced in this session of Congress for the acquisition of the White Mountain and Appalachian forest reserves. This report will show that the Committee on Agriculture has not been derelict in its duty touching the consideration of these bills, but has followed the matter up as rapidly as was within its power. In this connection I wish also to state that no official of this House has attempted in any way to delay the consideration of these bills or to induce the committee to bring in an adverse report upon any of them.

Now, I yield to the gentleman from New York for a short question.

Mr. HARRISON. For what purpose is the $100,000 appropriated in the second section of the bill?

Mr. SCOTT. I will come to that in the discussion of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of common knowledge that the timber supply of our country is rapidly disappearing, and that our mountain ranges, particularly upon the Atlantic coast, are being rapidly denuded of their forests. It is a most deplorable fact. There is no question but that the destruction of forests destroys also the natural beauty of the landscape, that it has a great deal to do with the destruction of agricultural lands, and that it has much to do with impairing stream flow, thereby imposing loss and damage upon manufacturing enterprises which are seeking to use water power, and interfering seriously with navigation. It is therefore, without doubt, extremely desirable that the mountain ranges, particularly those which include the watersheds of important rivers, should not be ruthlessly denuded of their forests, and where such denudation has taken place the forests should, if possible, be restored.

But there is a great difference between admitting the desirability of a project and demanding that the United States Government should take that project in hand. A great many people lose sight of the fact that a proposition may have great merit and yet that it may not be the duty of the United States to take up that proposition, and that it may not be within the constitutional power of the United States to do it. There are many people, therefore, who believe that in this matter of forest preservation the States have been derelict in their duty; that they have not exercised the power they have, but are seeking to shoulder off upon the Federal Treasury a burden which they should bear themselves. It is to meet the views of those who hold such an opinion, in some degree at least, that the committee in this bill has made a provision giving the consent of the United States to each of the several States of the Union which may wish to do so the right "to enter into such agreement or compact not in conflict with any law of the United States as it may deem desirable or necessary with any other State or States for the purpose of conserving the forests and the water supply of the States entering into such an agreement or compact."

This will put it up to the different States to do their duty, so far as their own powers will permit them, and will also take the shackles from their hands, so that they may cooperate with one another, if it is seen to be desirable.

Then there is another class of our citizens, who believe that while the Government should not go to the extent of purchasing forests for the sake of preserving them, yet it may very fairly and properly make a liberal appropriation to cooperate with the States in the preservation of those forests and help private owners of woodlands to administer and utilize them in such a way as to preserve and protect them. To meet that view, we have provided in the second section for an appropriation of the sum of $100,000 "to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with any State or group of States, when requested to do so, by supplying expert advice on forest reservation, utilization, and administration, and on the reforestation of denuded areas," and also to agree with the owner or owners of private woodlands to administer and protect them for a definite term of years. That brings me to the question asked me by the gentleman from New York. Replying to it, I wish to say it is the hope of the committee, in the event this bill becomes law, that under section 2 a very large area in the aggregate of the forest lands along our eastern coast range may be brought substantially under Government control, so that all the benefits of Federal ownership in the way of forest preservation may be realized without incurring too many of its burdens.

Mr. HARRISON. As the bill is drawn, the appropriation is merely to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to give his advice.

Mr. SCOTT. It goes further than that.

Mr. HARRISON. Not as the bill reads.

Mr. SCOTT. It enables the Secretary of Agriculture not only to supply expert advice, but to stipulate and agree with the owners of the forests in the Appalachians or the White Mountains for a definite term of years to provide for the administration and protection of them.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the gentleman will admit that lawyers may disagree with him in that interpretation.

Mr. SCOTT. I am not stating how the lawyers interpret it or how it may be interpreted by the courts. I am only giving the gentleman my own opinion of the meaning of the bill and the interpretation placed upon it by the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. I think that is a serious objection to the bill as it is drawn.

Mr. WEBB. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WEBB. There are those who think that the passage of this bill means the killing of the whole project for the White Mountain and Appalachian reserves. Will the gentleman give his opinion upon that?

Mr. SCOTT. In reply to that I wish to say, speaking for myself and I think for a majority of the committee, that we are in hearty sympathy with the main purpose of all these bills. That is to say, we realize the great damage that may be inflicted upon the agricultural, manufacturing, and navigation interests of the country by the complete deforestation of our Eastern mountains, and we are anxious to have such a calamity averted. But in studying the proposal that the Federal Government should purchase and protect the watershed of all the navigable rivers flowing out of these mountains we have come to realize what a tremendous project it is, and the thought of it fairly staggers us. It is true that the bills we have been considering contemplate an initial appropriation of but a small amount of money, and that the report of the Secretary of Agriculture suggests the purchase at this time of less than 7,000,000 acres of land.

But this same report, as the gentleman from Nebraska has just stated, declares also that there are 75,000,000 acres of land in these mountains that must be given protection before the watersheds on the more important streams are adequately safeguarded. At the lowest average price at which anybody has estimated these lands may be bought, this would mean an expenditure of $250,000,000 merely for the purchase of the lands. Estimating the cost of maintenance of these reservations by the cost of administering the national forests we already possess, there would be added to this initial outlay a yearly expense of at least $1,000,000. The project, therefore, contemplates an undertaking which in its cost to the country and in many other features can only be compared in importance and magnitude to the Panama Canal. Such a project ought not to be undertaken without first obtaining every scrap of information that would help us to reach an intelligent conclusion and without the most deliberate and painstaking consideration.

I know that a great many people, ardent and earnest advocates of the proposed policy, insist that we already have sufficient information to warrant immediate and favorable action.

But can those who hold to this opinion tell us how much land we will ultimately have to buy, whether 7,000,000 or 70,000,000 acres? Can they tell us where that land lies except in a most general way? Can they tell us how much it would cost? Can they tell us the length of the navigable rivers whose water flow the forests would conserve? Can they tell us the value of the commerce upon those rivers? All these are questions the committee has asked and to which no answers have been given. Certainly a committee of this House would be derelict in its duty if it recommended the passage of a bill which was to commit the Government to a policy involving the expenditure of vast sums of money without knowing what was going to be bought with the money or what price was going to be paid or what was the value of the interests to be protected.

Your committee is not ready to say that it may not be proper and wise for the Government to enter upon this policy. On the other hand, it certainly is not ready to recommend that such a policy be entered upon with the information it now possesses. It has therefore recommended in this bill the appointment of a commission, consisting of members of this House and the Senate, whose duty it shall be to investigate every phase of the problem and report the information it gathers and the conclusions it reaches to the President, by him to be transmitted to the next session of Congress. We believe that a report made by members of the legislative body, who will be responsible to their constituents, to their colleagues, and to the country for the work they do and the recommendations they make will be of far more practical value than a report made by a bureau official, who, however able and honest, was already an enthusiastic advocate of the project he was deputed to investigate, and whose report is more in the nature of an argument in support of that project than of information relating to it.

This bill is not a makeshift, therefore, as my distinguished colleague from Virginia has a little more than intimated, nor is it brought in here for the mere purpose of delay. On the contrary, it was prepared in good faith; it was brought here in good faith, and those of us who favor it believe that its passage will be a long step in the direction of the preservation of our Atlantic coast watershed and the conservation of the water supply in the streams that flow from them. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. All the time has expired. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. LAMB. And upon that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 205, nays 41, answered "present" 17, not voting 124, as follows:

BUREAU OF MINES.

Mr. HUFF. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 20883) to establish in the Department of the Interior a Bureau of Mines, and pass the same, which bill I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established in the Department of the Interior a bureau, to be called the Bureau of Mines, and a commissioner of said Bureau, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall receive a salary of $6,000 per annum; and there shall also be in the said Bureau such clerks, agents, experts, and other employees as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the province and duty of said Bureau and its commissioner, under the direction of the Secretary of said Department, to foster, promote, and develop the mining industries of the United States; to make diligent investigation of the methods of mining, the safety of miners, the possible improvement of conditions under which mining operations are carried on, the treatment of ores, the use of explosives and electricity, the prevention of accidents, the values of mineral products and markets for the same, and of other matters pertinent to said industries, and from time to time to make such public reports of the work, investigations, and information obtained as the Secretary of said Department may direct, with the recommendations of such Bureau.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall provide the said Bureau with furnished offices within the city of Washington, with such books, records, stationery, and appliances, and such assistants, clerks, stenographers, typewriters, and other employees as may be necessary for the proper discharge of the duties imposed by this act upon such Bureau, fixing the compensation of such clerks and employees within appropriations made for that purpose.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule a second is ordered. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Illinois to twenty minutes.

Mr. HUFF. Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to say upon this bill except that it is generally demanded by all of the mining interests of the country, and I will ask the gentleman from Illinois to consume some of his time.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the establishment of a Bureau of Mines and Mining seems to me a very important matter for this Government. During the last year more than a thousand men lost their lives in the mines in one month, not taking into account at all the great loss of property. It seems to me that the establishment of such a bureau, where the best methods of mining might be ascertained and where we might investigate and discover means of conserving life in the mines, is of great importance, and that the Government should take some steps to bring about better conditions of the affairs of mining generally. The business of mining is next in importance to that of agriculture in this country. We find that last year the value of the mining properties of our country was over $2,000,000,000. In 1862 this Government gave to every Representative and Senator then in Congress 30,000 acres of land each, and has added to it very largely since that time, in order that agricultural colleges might be established for the teaching of scientific agriculture. There is no one in the country to-day who believes that any mistake was made when our Government made this concession to agriculture, and yet here is a great industry like mining, which stands next to agriculture, and to which our country has given very little.

Many times experiments that are made in one place, looking to an investigation of better methods of mining, are lost because the knowledge is not known in other parts of the country where it might be taken advantage of and other people might avoid the same mistakes that all were making. Laying aside all property considerations, I believe that for the safety of the life and limb of the men who go down into the earth and bring forth the coal and the precious metals it is our duty to do what we can for them. [Applause.] If the establishment of this bureau will save human lives I am sure none will regret the cost.

It is for the men who work in the mines, whose calling is so dangerous that I plead for the establishment of this bureau. Let us begin a scientific investigation of the safest means of mining. Let us see if we can not do something that will save the awful suffering and loss of life that has occurred in mines.

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, it may be said by some of the Members who may be opposed to this bill—although I hope there are none such—that the amendment in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill provided for an investigation. I agree that it did, and I am glad to say that we are very thankful for that appropriation for the benefit of the miners. But that amendment provides only for temporary investigation and is limited to an investigation of the causes of mine explosions. This bill provides for a permanent institution and its jurisdiction of all of the accidents and the investigation as to the causes of all of the accidents which may occur in coal mines and in all the other mines of the country, and it will therefore be of greater benefit because of its continuing and permanent character. The industry, as a whole, taking in mining of coal and other minerals, is certainly of such great importance as to warrant Congress in establishing a bureau the duty of whose officers will be to look after the interest and to build up in efficiency the mining industries of the country, and to look after, last but not least, and really most important of all, the health and the lives of those who are compelled to work in mines in order to earn their living.

I want to read from a report of the Daily Consular and Trade Reports of April 22, 1908:

INCREASE IN COAL-MINING DEATHS.

According to J. A. Holmes, chief of the technological branch of the United States Geological Survey, reports regarding coal-mine accidents of 1907 show an increase of about 50 per cent in the number of men killed as compared with 1906. From the information already received, Mr. Holmes says:

"It seems probable that an increase of 25 per cent in the number of fatal accidents will be shown for the year 1907 over the figures for 1906, without taking into consideration the disasters of last December, in which 694 men were killed. Counting the big disasters, the deaths will be more than 3,000, which will be a 50 per cent increase over the year 1906."

The disasters referred to in that report are those at Naomi, Pa., on December 1, 37; on December 6 at Monongah, W. Va., 346; on December 16 at Yolande, Ala., 63; on December 18 at Jacobs Creek, Pa., 250. Out of each thousand men employed by the railroad there are 2½ killed per annum. Out of each thousand men working in coal mines in this country there are 3½ killed per annum.

I want to read for your information an editorial in the Wilkes-Barre Record, situate in the heart of the anthracite region, of May 15, 1908. It is as follows:

[From the Wilkes-Barre Record, May 15, 1908.]

AN APPALLING RECORD.

Within the past week twenty-three men have been killed in the mines of Wilkes-Barre and vicinity and thirty have been injured more or less seriously. The deaths have come in horrible and excruciating form. Half a dozen miners lay in a dark tunnel suffering torture from burns, fatally hurt. Others were crippled by a fall of rock and lay in terrible suspense until another fall came and crushed out their lives. One had his back broken and will be compelled to remain motionless, perhaps for several years, until death ends his misery. Another suffered a fracture of the skull and may be an invalid for life. Other poor human beings are in the hospitals and in their homes hovering between life and death.

It is all horrible, heartrending. If that many people had been killed or injured on the public streets or in the various occupations on the surface in Wilkes-Barre and vicinity in a single week, the community would be startled and the reckless sacrifice of life would be made the subject of drastic inquiry. But this story of the mines goes on day after day, not always with such a fearful record as that enacted during the present week, but yet with its daily toll of one, two, three, or four lives, with a secondary record of broken bones and lacerations.

The nineteenth annual convention of the United Mine Workers of America, which met in Indianapolis last January, adopted the following resolution:

Whereas the mining interests of the United States yielded during the year 1907 an increase to the nation's wealth of nearly $2,000,000,000, and employed 600,000 or more men in the various States of the Union; and

Whereas in 1906 nearly 7,000 men were killed and injured in coal mining alone; and

Whereas this number is rapidly increasing and is now greater than in any other mining country of the world; and

Whereas every important mining country, except the United States, maintains a bureau of mines for the study of mining and the protection of life in the mines; and

Whereas it is desirable that more adequate recognition should be given the industry by the investigation of mining and metallurgical methods with a view to better protection of life and the better utilization and conservation of these mineral resources: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the United Mine Workers of America in their nineteenth annual convention assembled recommend the establishment at this time of a national bureau of mines, with adequate authority and funds to make the necessary investigations to carry into effect the purposes herein stated and to make recommendations to Congress as to any needed legislation: Be it further

Resolved, That the international officers are hereby instructed to appear before the proper Congressional committees in Washington urging the enactment of such legislation.

Signed on behalf—

J. H. WALKER,
JOHN P. WHITE,
District Presidents.

The following extracts from the preliminary report of the joint select mine investigating committee, appointed by the legislature of West Virginia to investigate mine disasters and report, show that there are matters connected with accidents in mines the facts of which are not agreed upon:

Your committee is of the opinion that the explosion of the Monongah Mines Nos. 6 and 8 was a dust explosion, and it seems to be the consensus of opinion of the experts who made an examination of the mine that the initial point of explosion was in Mine No. 8, and many of the inspectors and experts believe that the cause was a blown-out shot. Yet Chief Paul, together with others, is of the opinion that the runaway cars, numbering twenty-one, and wrecking at the bottom of the slope, was a great factor in causing the explosion. Inasmuch as the experts who spent weeks examining this mine are divided in opinion as to the initial cause of the explosion, your committee feels that it must refrain from attempting to give you the initial cause of the explosion.

Your committee is of opinion that the Stuart mine explosion was a gas explosion. There seems, however, to be a difference of opinion as to the cause of this explosion. On the one hand, it is claimed that the initial cause was a blown-out shot which ignited gas that seemed to have been present in the mine or that was developed by the shot causing the explosion. On the other hand, it is the opinion of the chief mine inspector that the ignition of gas occurred in room No. 4, off of third left entry, commonly known as "Dick Lee" entry, and that it was caused by a blown-out shot, but that the gas was ignited by an open lamp.

MONONGAH MINE, December 6, 1907.

This is given as an illustration of the fact that in our most modern equipped mines lurks a danger which science has yet to discover. This explosion immediately attracted the attention of operators, chemists, and scientists not only in the different States of the Union, but of the Federal Government, and even foreign countries sent experts to ascertain, if possible, the cause of the explosion and to discover a method of preventing similar explosions.

It was conceded that this explosion was a dust explosion; yet it seems that no one has been able to give all the elements that may be present to create a dust explosion. This reference to the Monongah mines and to the conditions that were thought to exist there at that time are especially made for the purpose of impressing upon the legislature the fact that the legislature can not reach the cause or provide a remedy which will prevent explosions until that cause is known. This must be the result of future study and experiment.

Your committee respectfully again calls attention to the fact that the legislature has asked the committee to solve the greatest problem of the century. This is said because not only the legislature of this State, but the world in general, is trying to solve the problem. Efforts are now being made by the National Government to create a bureau for the purpose of experimenting to determine the hidden causes of mine explosion such as the Monongah explosion.

I do not believe the American people are any less sympathetic than the people of the countries which have, by careful investigation and necessary legislation, reduced the number of fatalities in mines to one-third of what they are in the mines of this country. We are really thoughtless, and do not even ask, Am I my brother's keeper? Let us take thought here at this time and provide ways and means for reducing the awful death roll of the mining industry in this country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important measure and, as I understand it, the friends of the bill control all the time. I want to ask if it is not possible for somebody who is not in favor of the bill to speak in opposition to it.

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair will answer that question by saying that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HUFF] moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill; that the only gentleman who addressed the Chair was the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] demanding a second, and the Chair recognized him for that purpose. Now, the Chair will state this thing has happened before. If it be true that both gentlemen are in favor of the passage of the bill—that has arisen heretofore, and has generally been settled by one or both of the gentlemen extending the time equitably to those who are opposed to the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I would ask unanimous consent that those opposed to the bill may have twenty minutes. That would give those in favor of the bill forty minutes, and twenty minutes to those opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that those opposed to the bill may have twenty minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NICHOLLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on this subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on this subject. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the same courtesy be extended to other speakers on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the same courtesy be extended to all gentlemen who shall speak upon this bill, the remarks to be confined to the bill under consideration. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUFF. Mr. Speaker, I now yield eight minutes of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DOUGLAS].

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of our committee has asked me to say a few words, presenting this bill to the House. He was kind enough to suggest this because the bill prepared by our committee was based upon the bill introduced by myself on February 3, and because I prepared the short report which accompanies this bill.

I am quite well aware that many of the Members of the House, Members, too, who take a most thoughtful and intelligent interest in legislation, view with settled disfavor the multiplication of Government departments and bureaus. They have learned by experience that Government expenses increase in direct ratio to the increase of these agencies of government. Personally, I sympathize with this feeling and approve it; but it certainly does not therefore follow that we are to have no more bureaus, and I confidently submit that the demands and the reasons for the passage of this bill are cogent and unanswerable.

The mine operators and the mine workers of the country have for many years united in appealing for either a department or a bureau of mines. Second only to agriculture, the mines of America are her most fruitful source of wealth. Eight hundred thousand men in America daily go down into the dark and dangerous recesses of the ground to toil for their families and to produce this wealth for the nation. Twenty men is about the present average number of those who daily meet death at their task. Ten thousand of them have thus lost their lives in the past five years. The fuel resources of the country are being rapidly depleted and are being fearfully wasted by unscientific methods of mining. And yet, in spite of all this, the Government of the United States has done next to nothing to investigate, to promote, or to help this great industry. As a government, we have paid substantially no attention to it.

I shall not undertake to reiterate the arguments or the startling statistics which you have all heard on this floor at this session of Congress. The well-informed gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] and the gentleman from California, my colleague on the committee [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT], have made most earnest and convincing appeals upon this subject. By them and by other gentlemen no less earnest and well informed the facts and figures bearing upon this subject have been detailed in a manner and with an effect to appeal most strongly to the sympathy, the humanity, the patriotism, and the sound sense of every one who heard them.

But there are one or two considerations to which I do desire to call the especial attention of the House. Much has been said of the enormous and shocking loss of life due to mine explosions; but I desire to remind you that far more men have lost their lives by rock, slate, and coal falling from the roofs of mines than even by actual explosions; more, indeed, than from all other causes combined. The very first clause of that portion of this bill which defines the duties of this bureau provides for "diligent investigation of the methods of mining; and, indeed, if the bill stopped here it might be enough. But it goes on to provide for "the possible improvement of conditions under which mining operations are carried on, the treatment of ores, the use of explosives and electricity, the prevention of accidents, the value of mineral products and markets for the same, and of other matters pertinent to said industry." Surely a wise, useful, and comprehensive programme.

Some one may suggest that all of this is a proper field for State or for individual or corporate activity and not a proper region of Federal activity. To this I can not, perhaps, do better than to quote the language used on this floor some days since, during the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who so rarely fails to interest and inform the House:

Of course there is a boundary line where men may be in doubt; but, generally speaking, the function of a government in regard to research is to do those things that relate to the fundamentals and which, by reason of their cost, are beyond the power of the individual to do, and not to do those things that simply relate to the ordinary work of commercial corporations and companies and which they would naturally do without governmental aid.

And I may also quote this language from the report which accompanies this bill:

Much valuable work has been, is being, and will be done by the State governments to investigate and foster the local mining interests within their own borders; but many of the States have not the means to do this adequately. None of them covers the entire field, nor is any one State interested in all branches and departments of this great industry.

But perhaps the most impelling argument for the prompt undertaking of this work by our own Government is the emphatic and convincing success that other governments have achieved in the same field. It is, indeed, inconceivable that such appalling loss of life as the facts disclose can not be prevented. The experience of other countries demonstrates that it can be prevented. While the mortality in our mines has increased at a fearful rate, the ratio of mortality in other countries has, under government investigation and regulation, wonderfully diminished.

If France and Belgium have reduced their ratio of mortality by two-thirds, why can not we? We have only by careful and persistent investigation to show our miners and operators how to do it, and it will be done.

Let me further assure the House that there is no duplication of work contemplated by this measure. There is no place under the Government where the technological work contemplated by this bill is now being carried on. There need be and is no rivalry between the agency created by this bill and the Geological Survey. The scientific work done and being done by the Survey is of the greatest value and importance. But the statute under which alone the Geological Survey is maintained and operates limits its field. The organic law creating what we know as the "Geological Survey" provides that the Director of the Geological Survey—

Shall have the direction of the Geological Survey and the classification of public lands, and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain.

It has nothing to do with the technical industry of mining. The present efficient Director, Mr. Smith, has freely and frankly admitted this, and has encouraged the bill now before you. Indeed, in a recent conversation he said to me, "That any appropriations already made for objects coming directly within the scope and purview of this Bureau, he would gladly see turned over to it, should this bill become a law."

The committee thought it best, so earnest were we all to secure the establishment of this Bureau, that no direct appropriation should be made by this bill. We hope that this has already been made in the $150,000 appropriated by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill the other day, or, in any event, it can be estimated for by the Secretary of the Interior and provided in the future.

In conclusion let me earnestly urge you to come to the rescue of this great industry; to come to the rescue of the mining methods of America; to come to the rescue of the wasting resources of America, and above all and most appealing of all, to come to the rescue of the men who, in darkness and danger, pursue this toilsome vocation. [Applause.]

Mr. HUFF. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] or any gentleman speaking on that side desires to use some of the time, I will be glad if they will do so.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel myself prepared to vote for a measure like this, because I think the House has been inadequately supplied with information about it. I am under the impression that in some respects the bill transgresses the rights of the States and intrudes itself into the operation of private business in an unnecessary way.

Mr. NICHOLS. Do you know that this bill provides in any way for supervision of mines?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand enough about the bill to answer the gentleman's question definitely, yes or no, but I am advised in a general way that it undertakes to exercise a sort of supervision that hitherto has fallen within the province of the police regulations of the States or the commercial regulations of the enterprises themselves.

I am in perfect sympathy with the most extreme development of the very useful work done by the Geological Survey, and if I could be convinced that this bill is necessary, and that it will do enough good to balance the evil exercise of a doubtful power, I should support it; but it has been brought into the House without any previous suggestion, to me at least, that it was to be considered in so brief a time at a late hour of the session.

I object to the creation of any more bureaus of the Government. If this work is important enough to have it done, then, sir, it might well be delegated to the Geological Survey, an important bureau in the Department of the Interior, already established, and having connected with that Survey a division directly devoted to the study of coal mining and allied industries. I believe there is back of this—as there is back of all such schemes, however good may be the intentions of those who support them—an influence that is working from a selfish point of view. It means a multiplying of officials; it means tremendous increase of expense, the extent of which no man has yet suggested in this debate so far as I have been able to hear. I do not believe there is a man on the floor of the House supporting the proposition to create an additional bureau, the work of which may well be done by the Geological Survey, who can give us any idea of the number of officials to be employed or what they will cost the taxpayers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, gentlemen may be charged, and usually are charged, with demagoguery when they stand up here and try to protect the Public Treasury against this multiplication of officials, but somebody must now and then protest in behalf of the forgotten man, the man who pays for it all, and if it be true, as I believe that it is, that we already have established in the Geological Survey a corps of officials who can do the work, then I think, in the interest of all the people, we should leave it to them and not add an indefinite number of officials at an unknown compensation.

This proposed bureau will duplicate work being done by the Geological Survey. There ought not to be any such duplication of work, and particularly there should not be a multiplication of high-priced officials whose services are not required by the public service or in the interest of humanity.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HUFF] has twenty-three minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] seventeen minutes remaining.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, as I understood the time, it was that twenty minutes of it was under the control of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] and twenty minutes on this side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] yielded his time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HUFF]. Is that correct?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. No, sir; I did not mean to do so.

The SPEAKER. Then, between the two there are twenty-three minutes remaining. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has twelve minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HUFF] has eleven minutes.

Mr. HUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes of my time to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. PRAY].

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Speaker, in the time allotted to me I desire to say a few words in favor of the passage of this bill, because I believe it to be a most important and necessary measure and one which, if enacted into law, will result in inestimable benefit to the people generally throughout the country and especially to all those persons engaged in mining in whatsoever capacity in the various States. It is a matter of common knowledge that in most of the States mining is an important industry—in about thirty-seven States, as I recollect. Therefore I say that the passage of this measure is bound to affect a large proportion of the people of this country. The purpose of the bill is to foster, promote, and develop the mining industries throughout the Union.

Now, it may be said by some in opposition to the measure that such matters should be left to the control of the various States, but at the hearings held before the Committee on Mines and Mining, at which a large number of men interested in and having knowledge of the mining industry and all its varied phases in all parts of the Union appeared and submitted testimony in reference to this subject, it appeared from that testimony, for instance, that the States had in various ways and for years attempted to solve the difficult problems growing out of mining disasters and had been unable to do so, and it was the unanimous opinion that it was about time to clothe the Federal Government with power to act. [Applause.]

And perhaps I should also state in this connection that it is likewise the unanimous opinion of the members of the Committee on Mines and Mining of the House that appropriate action should be taken at this session, based upon the recommendations of the President of the United States and the evidence submitted at the hearings before the committee that continued during the greater part of the month of March.

The hearings were published in pamphlet form and contain the testimony of mine owners, operators, foremen, inspectors, miners, members and officers of various labor organizations, newspaper articles, and letters and telegrams from various sources throughout the United States, all favoring the establishment of a mining bureau as proposed by this bill. After the information thus obtained had been duly considered the present bill was drafted and unanimously adopted by the committee.

The bill provides that diligent inquiry and investigation shall be made into the methods of mining, as to the safety of miners, the use of explosives, the prevention of accidents, the improvement of conditions under which operations are carried on, the treatment of ores, the value of mineral products, the markets for the same, and all other matters that have a bearing upon such industries. It shall be the duty of the commissioner in charge of the Bureau to issue from time to time public reports of the investigations and work carried on by him, with his recommendations, in such manner and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. It will be seen from what I have just said in reference to the provisions of the bill that the interests of the men who actually do the work in the mines are to be safeguarded in every possible manner; at least such was the intention of the members of the committee in reporting the bill.

The recent disasters in the coal mines of the East had thoroughly awakened the public conscience to a realization of the necessity for the creation of a permanent bureau or commission, under a Department of the Federal Government, clothed with ample authority and means to make intelligent and searching investigation into the causes of such catastrophes and all attending circumstances.

The States have enacted legislation from time to time for the purpose of protecting the miners from unnecessary hazard. Under these laws the mines were required to be inspected at regular intervals by men commissioned by the State for that purpose, and the installation of fans and other appliances was also required, but notwithstanding these so-called "precautionary measures" the death roll increased year by year until the maximum was reached in 1906, when 1,500 lives were sacrificed and about 4,000 women and children left in mourning and poverty.

Perhaps the chief cause of failure on the part of the States to furnish an adequate remedy for such conditions was the lack of sufficient scientific information. Although it is contended that the Federal Government could have no direct control over the mines, nevertheless a scientific investigation into causes of such disasters, the study of fire damp and other menaces of human life in the mines, would at least, it is thought, have a tendency to minimize the danger, and the Government in cooperation with the States could make recommendations from time to time that would no doubt render State regulation and inspection much more efficient.

Following the recommendations of the President last December many bills and resolutions were presented to Congress, all having in view the improvement of mining conditions. From a perusal of these various measures it is apparent that the authors were all deeply impressed with the imperative duty resting upon Congress to provide some expedient at once for the protection of the mine workers of the country. There was some diversity of opinion as to what Department of the Government should have supervision and control of this bureau. Some were in favor of placing it under the control of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, while others thought it should be operated under the Secretary of the Interior and in conjunction with the Geological Survey. Everyone who appeared at the hearings of the committee was in favor of placing the bureau under the Secretary of the Interior because of the superior advantages offered for scientific research.

Were the bureau placed in the Department of Commerce and Labor there would perhaps be danger of duplication of work along certain lines, and it was thought the tendency there might be to conduct investigations of an industrial rather than of a scientific and technical character.

It will be observed from the bill and report that all branches of the mining industry will be benefited, the gold, silver, and copper mines of the Far West, as well as the coal mines of the East, and it is confidently predicted by the friends of the measure that what the Department of Agriculture has accomplished for the farmer the Bureau of Mines, if you pass this bill, will surely accomplish for the miner.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUFF. Mr. Speaker, I desire that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] use part of his time now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has nine minutes; the gentleman from Illinois has twelve minutes, and the gentleman from Minnesota has seventeen minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Speaker, I agree that the mining resources of the country ought to be largely developed, but I am strongly opposed to increasing the number of bureaus in this Government. Every new bureau created here increases enormously the number of officials and the consequent expenses of the Government. There is no necessity for any such bureau. The Geological Survey practically covers the work that any such bureau as proposed by the bill could do. Now, at this time, when there is a deficit of over $63,000,000, when we have already provided for the expenditure of more than $100,000,000 in excess of what we spent last year, it seems to me a very poor time to add a new bureau and new expenses to the already too large expenses of this Government. I do not think this bill ought to pass. If it is desired to give any larger power to the Geological Survey, I should be willing to vote for it. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT of Nevada. Mr. Speaker, it is a surprise to me to find that opposition to the passage of this bill has developed, as I had been led to believe that but little, if any, would be manifested and that, possibly, only from the ever-watchful chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in his zealous desire to protect the Treasury from what he might believe to be an unwarranted expenditure.

A more careful examination and consideration of the bill by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], whom I know to be always fair, will, I feel sure, convince him that there is not a single provision upon which to hang a fear of Federal usurpation of the rights of the States.

Briefly stated, the bill simply proposes the creation of a Bureau of Mines in the Department of the Interior, the head of which shall be a commissioner, to be appointed by the President, such commissioner to be assisted by such clerks, agents, experts, and other employees as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the act, and section 2 of the act, which contains the principal purposes of the Bureau, merely provides:

Sec. 2. That it shall be the province and duty of said Bureau and its commissioner, under the direction of the Secretary of said Department, to foster, promote, and develop the mining industries of the United States; to make diligent investigation of the methods of mining, the safety of miners, the possible improvement of conditions under which mining operations are carried on, the treatment of ores, the use of explosives and electricity, the prevention of accidents, the value of mineral products and markets for the same, and of other matters pertinent to said industries, and from time to time make such public reports of the work, investigations, and information obtained as the Secretary of said Department may direct, with the recommendations of such Bureau.

It will be noted that none of these provisions in anywise invade the rights of the States, they being as free to legislate upon the very matters set forth in the foregoing section as though this Bureau were never created. The purpose of this act is to aid and assist in bringing about, by investigation and suggestion, a uniformity of State legislation that will lessen the terrible loss of life incident to mining, and to further aid in the development of the vast mineral resources of the country. The States are doing their utmost in this behalf, but it can not be doubted that a Government bureau provided with the means and sources of research suggested by this bill would be able to furnish invaluable assistance.

It would seem that but little argument were necessary to convince this House of the wisdom of enacting a law for which there is a practically universal demand.

For a number of years the American Mining Congress and other organizations representing the mining industries have been adopting resolutions calling upon the Congress to create a Department of Mines and Mining, and the President in his message to this Congress upon its convening last December recommended legislation looking to the creation of a bureau in the following language:

A Bureau of Mines should be created under the control and direction of the Secretary of the Interior; the Bureau to have power to collect statistics and make investigations in all matters pertaining to mining, and particularly to the accidents and dangers of the industry. If this can not now be done, at least additional appropriations should be given the Interior Department to be used for the study of mining conditions, for the prevention of fraudulent mining schemes, for carrying on the work of mapping the mining districts, for studying methods for minimizing the accidents and dangers in the industry; in short, to aid in all proper ways the development of the mining industry.

I take it that the message of the Chief Executive of the nation may be reasonably presumed to reflect in most instances an observation of the popular attitude on suggested remedial and constructive legislation.

The Committee on Mines and Mining, having under consideration a number of bills looking to the creation of a Bureau of Mines and the investigation of coal-mine accidents, appointed a subcommittee to conduct hearings, at which the representatives of the large coal and metal mining operators and the representatives of the large mine workers' organizations stood shoulder to shoulder, unanimously demanding the establishment of a bureau, and with great earnestness showed the terrific loss of life and almost shameful waste of many mineral substances, particularly in coal mining, due to an imperfect understanding and in some cases actual ignorance of the causes of accidents, means of prevention, methods of mining and conservation of the minerals, their reduction and treatment.

I am prompted to insert at this point an extract taken from the introduction to a preliminary statistical report of the Geological Survey, by Clarence Hall and Walter O. Snelling, the portion of the introduction appearing below being by Mr. Joseph A. Holmes, in charge of the technologic branch of said Geological Survey:

The figures given in this report indicate that during the year 1906 nearly 7,000 men were killed or injured in the coal mines of this country, and that the number of these accidents caused directly or indirectly by mine explosions has been steadily increasing. It is also indicated that this increase has been due, in part, to the lack of proper and enforceable mine regulations; in part to the lack of reliable information concerning the explosives used in mining and the conditions under which they can be used safely in the presence of the gas and dust encountered in the mines; and in part to the fact that in the development of coal mining not only is the number of mines increasing, but many areas from which coal is being taken are either deeper or farther from the entrance, where good ventilation is more difficult and the dangerous accumulations of explosive gas more frequent.

The increase both in the number and in the seriousness of mine explosions in the United States during past years may be expected to continue unless, through investigations made in the United States such as have proved effective in other coal-producing countries, information can be obtained and published concerning the explosives used, the conditions under which they may be used safely in the presence of coal dust or gas, and the general conditions which make for health and safety in coal-mining operations. Such information, obtained through comprehensive and impartial investigations, may serve in this, as in other countries, as an intelligent basis both for legislative enactments and for agreements among persons associated with mining operations.

One after another of these terrible underground disasters awakens the sympathies of the nation and arouses an earnest desire that they may be entirely prevented. Experience in the deeper and more dangerous coal mines of Belgium and other countries not only indicates that these mine accidents may be reduced to less than one-third their present number in the United States, but also gives promise of results which in the future may at least approach complete prevention.

I take the following information from the excellent report above referred to.

Statistics relating to accidents in coal mines.

FATAL ACCIDENTS IN THE UNITED STATES.

In the coal mines of the United States in 1906, 6,861 men were killed or injured, the number killed being 2,061, and the number injured being 4,800.

The number of men killed in the coal mines of the United States for each year from 1890 is shown in the following table:

Number of men killed in the coal mines of the United States, 1890-1906.

1891	1,070
1892	859
1893	965
1894	957
1895	1,057
1896	1,120
1897	947
1898	1,049
1899	1,243
1900	1,493
1901	1,594
1902	1,828
1903	1,794
1904	1,999
1905	2,097
1906	2,061

Total..... 22,840

The total number of men killed since 1880, as shown above, is 22,840. It will be noted that as many violent deaths have occurred in the coal mines of the United States during the last six years as during the preceding eleven years, the number of fatal accidents having practically doubled within that time.

Number of men killed for each thousand employed.

INCREASE IN THE UNITED STATES.

The great increase in the production of coal during the last decade and the related increase in the number of men employed in the industry may seem to account for the increase in the number of fatal accidents. But the following table, giving the number of men killed for each 1,000 employed, shows that the increase can not be accounted for in this way:

Number of men killed in the coal mines of the United States for each 1,000 men employed.

1896	2.79
1897	2.34
1898	2.59
1899	2.98
1900	3.24
1901	3.24
1902	3.49
1903	3.14
1904	3.38
1905	3.53
1906	3.40

Decrease in European countries.

PROTECTIVE LEGISLATION.

In all the European coal-producing countries the output of coal has increased greatly during the last ten years, but the number of deaths per 1,000 miners, instead of increasing as in this country, has undergone a marked and decided decrease. This decrease has been due to the effect of mining legislation in those countries for the safeguarding and protection of the lives of the workmen, and has been made possible by government action in establishing testing stations for the study of problems relative to safety in mining, including the use of explosives.

BELGIUM.

The decrease in Belgium is shown in the following table:
Number of men killed for each 1,000 men employed in the coal mines of Belgium for each decade since 1839.

1831-1849	3.19
1841-1850	3.18
1851-1860	3.28
1861-1870	2.60
1871-1880	2.36
1881-1890	1.99
1901-1906	1.02

It will be seen from the above table that the study of mining conditions in Belgium has resulted in a reduction of the death rate per 1,000 men employed to one-third of the ratio now existing in the United States. It seems certain that if a similar study of mining conditions were to be made in the United States and proper legislation could be secured to enforce the conditions found to be necessary for a better safeguarding of the lives of the miners, the death rate for mine accidents would be greatly reduced. The following table gives the death rate from accidents in the coal mines of Belgium in the years 1895-1906:

Number of lives lost in the coal mines of Belgium for each 1,000 men employed.

1895	1.40
1896	1.15
1897	1.03
1898	1.04
1899	.97
1900	1.05
1901	1.16
1902	1.07
1903	1.14
1904	.93
1905	.91

GREAT BRITAIN.

The number of men killed in the coal mines of Great Britain for each 1,000 men employed is shown for each year since 1890 in the following table:

Number of men killed in the coal mines of Great Britain for each 1,000 men employed.

1891	1.50
1892	1.49
1893	1.55
1894	1.60
1895	1.49
1896	1.48

FRANCE.

In France the number of lives lost per 1,000 men employed has been very low for a number of years, but since the publication of the last available report an explosion has occurred at the Courrières mine in that country, causing the death of more than 1,000 miners, and this would materially affect the result of any tabulation. The number of lives lost per 1,000 men employed for each year for which statistics are available is as follows:

Number of lives lost in the coal mines of France for each 1,000 men employed.

COMPARATIVE SUMMARY.

On comparing the average death rates from accidents in coal mines for each 1,000 men employed in different countries the full significance of the figures already given may be seen.

In the following table, giving the average ratio for the last period of five years for which statistics are at hand, the position of the United States may be compared with that of the principal European coal-producing countries:

Number of men killed for each 1,000 men employed—averages for five years.
France (1901-1905)	0.91
Belgium (1902-1906)	1.01
Great Britain (1902-1906)	1.24
Prussia (1900-1904)	2.05
United States (1902-1906)	3.39

Belgium maintains the most thoroughly equipped testing station in the world, and for a number of years has carried out extensive experiments to devise means to prevent accidents and to increase the safety of workers in the mines. The success of these experiments will be better realized when it is stated that at the beginning of the investigations the number of men killed each year for each 1,000 men employed was 3.2, or very nearly that now shown for the United States, while at present it is less than one-third of that number.

Great Britain and Germany also maintain testing stations, where every question relating to the testing of explosives, safety lamps, rescue devices, and all similar matters may be submitted to experimental studies. As the result of this foresight great reductions have been made in the number of accidents in the coal mines of those countries.

When we reflect upon the fact that two billions of dollars annually are produced from the mineral resources of this country—virgin wealth turned into the channels of trade and commerce, enabling expansion of vast industrial enterprises—it seems almost incredible that the United States is the last of the great nations to establish a Bureau of Mines providing for scientific investigation and research, so as to prompt a proper care for the lives of men engaged in producing this vast wealth and enabling a better development and possibly greater increased production.

That a recognition of the necessity of the conservation of our natural resources and their more intelligent production and use is coming home to our people has recently been made manifest in most striking manner by the conference of governors called by the President, probably the most important gathering that has ever assembled in the far-reaching effect its first labors promise. The mineral resources played a prominent part in the deliberations of the conference, and it is matter for hearty congratulation that the present strong tendency toward a proper recognition of the value of our great soil and mineral resources is developing a great educational cooperation that will make for a healthier condition in our material growth.

It does not seem too much to hope that, with the greater stimulus which government might give to metal mining by reason of its possible discoveries in the treatment of ores under the scientific investigations of a Bureau of Mines, our production of the money metals—gold and silver—may so increase as to banish all further fear of necessity to resort to "faith currency," and our real faith be founded in actual, not merely assumed, worth.

Mr. Thomas F. Walsh, whose prominence in the mining world has been established for years, and whose wide experience and observation entitles his suggestions to utmost respect, has drawn particular attention, both in his statements at the hearings of the subcommittee and in his supplemental letter, to the importance of the development and production of the rarer minerals, and his whole letter is so interesting and valuable a contribution to the present subject that I am taking the liberty of adding it to my remarks:

Letter from Thomas F. Walsh, of Washington, D. C., favoring the establishment of a Bureau of Mines and Mining and referring to the importance of the development and production of the rarer minerals—radium, platinum, vanadium, columbite, etc.

SOME ADDITIONAL REASONS FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A BUREAU OF MINES.

To the honorable Chairman and Members of the House Committee on Mines and Mining.

GENTLEMEN: In the hearings before your honorable committee on the question of the establishment of a Bureau of Mines, the fields of coal mining, iron mining, and precious-metal mining were well and ably covered by representatives of these respective industries, and the great benefits that a Bureau of Mines would confer upon them were pointed out in an able and intelligent manner. However, a great field of undeveloped mineral wealth, to which I beg to call your attention, was scarcely touched upon. I refer to the development and production of what is classed as the rarer minerals, such as radium, platinum, vanadium, uranium, tungsten, columbite, and others, all of which are much needed in our manufacturing and chemical industries.

Owing to a lack of knowledge of their properties and treatment, we are to-day producing practically none in America, but import them in large quantities from Europe at an expense of millions of dollars. Incredible as it seems, no effort has been or is being made to produce these valuable commodities of commerce. I believe we have them in paying quantities in the vast area of the mineralized portions of our country. More knowledge on this subject will prove that these little-known minerals are not as rare as they are supposed to be. Aluminum when first used was thought to be a scarce metal, yet when energetic efforts were directed toward its production it was found in quantities and in the common clays. I believe the same relative results will follow a thorough search for the rarer minerals. The proposed bureau, in its educational work in this particular line—by disseminating directly through the schools of mining, as well as through the public press, a knowledge as to how to recognize and find those minerals and how to treat and market them when found—would give such an impetus to its development and production as would probably result in an output of a new wealth greater than that of the precious minerals of to-day.

To give some idea of the great value of those minerals, I will, for illustration, take vanadium, one of the rarer of the economic class. As an alloy in the making of the highest grade of steel, vanadium is the best ever discovered. It is the most prized ingredient the steel manufacturers can have. If it could be mined and sold at a reasonable price, our steel makers would gladly buy all that could be produced. As it is now, when they need it they have to import it from Europe and pay $3 per pound, or $10,000 per ton. The same is, in a measure, true of the other rarer minerals. There is a pressing and constant demand for them, but none is produced because it is a sphere of our mining activities that, principally for the want of knowledge on the subject, we have heretofore ignored, content to pay a great tribute to other nations for those things which we have at home.

Take another illustration—radium, the rarest of all minerals. Because of the small amount produced it has not yet passed from the scientific and physical to the economic. If we want an atom of it we must beg for it from the Austrian Government. Notwithstanding the small mineral area of that country, it has, because of its research work, a monopoly on it and its associated mineral, uranium. The production of the other rarer minerals will undoubtedly result in the production of radium, for we have reason to believe they go together. The dream of the ages has been the finding of perpetual motion. We seem to have it in radium. The proposed mining bureau, without interfering with its more utilitarian duties, can direct and foster the production of this most valuable mineral; it can investigate its properties and potentialities and, perhaps, apply it to the service of humanity in ways that will be as great in their benefits as radium is enduring.

It may be asked, Can those rarer minerals be found in our country? I have the best of reasons for believing they can. Some prospecting recently made in this direction, in Colorado, promises good results. I have been over the mining districts of Bohemia, Austria, where many of them, especially uranium and radium, have been found. I have been over every mineralized State of our Union. So far as I could see we have the same conditions, the same character and class of baser minerals in which the rare ones are found. We have a mineralized area far greater than that of Europe, and in which we have found every mineral that we have heretofore searched for. The fact that we have not found certain ores is no evidence that they do not exist, but rather a proof that we have not looked for them. If it should be ascertained that, in accordance with our previous knowledge of the minerals and with their well-known affinity for each other, the rarer ones will be found associated with the baser ones in iron, zinc, copper, and lead sulphides, then we are apt to find them in broad areas and in many unsuspected places—in the sulphide deposits of Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia, Arkansas, and Missouri, as well as in the great mining States of the West.

An opinion prevailed that they would not be found in sulphides. But last year I had a piece of sulphide ore tested for radio activity and received a report that it possessed it in as strong a degree as the pitchblend ore of Bohemia, which was conclusive proof of the presence of both uranium and radium.

Throughout our mining districts there are billions of tons of low-grade sulphide mineral on the dumps of mines awaiting the application of science to bring them into use. Whilst it can not be expected that all of these ores carry the rarer minerals, if they are found in a fraction of them the wealth they can be made to yield will be incalculable.

It may seem strange that this field of wealth should remain so long untouched, yet the explanation is simple. In mining, as in other things, we followed the line of least resistance, the course that with the simplest efforts led to the quickest and most direct results in the extraction and treatment of the ores—first, the rocker, then the sluice box, then the mill and smelter. We mined only the ores we could treat with these methods. If we noticed some strange mineral, which we often did, we either did not give it a thought or wished it well away because of its refractory influences in the treatment of the minerals we were after. This, as stated, was due to a want of knowledge of those rarer minerals and a consequent want of market for them, and this is why we are not producing any of them to-day, but instead paying out millions annually to Europe because we must have them. The importations will give but a faint idea of their enormous value to us, for if we were producing them ourselves our own industries would use a hundred times more than they do now. Their development and extraction will create a new industry that in turn will create new homes, new occupations, and new wealth for our own people. A great interest is awakening on this subject. Since I had the honor of addressing your committee I have had over a dozen letters asking for information and advice on every feature of the question. They are all of the same tenor. I will quote an extract from one, written from the southwest portion of New Mexico by a mining engineer:

"I inclose a newspaper clipping and trust the bill referred to—the bill creating the Bureau of Mines—will soon become a law. It is one of the most needed enactments of the present day. I believe that radium and several other of the rarer minerals exist in this locality, but so little is known about them that the ordinary individual does not even know how they occur, much less how to extract, nor where to get them treated. Please give me such information on the subject as will help me to look for and develop these ores."

The great national industry of mining is worthy of the same governmental encouragement and protection that is given the other industries, especially in the saving of life. The coal miner takes his life in his hands and toils all day in the darkened dusty caverns of the coal mines, looking forward with pleasure to the hour that will reunite him to his little family. It is only too often he is brought back in the cold stillness of death, the victim of an explosion, in most cases brought about by some hidden force of nature which is not yet understood. Surely the lives of the vast army of these brave toilers should be the serious concern of the National Government.

The prospector, who braves the terrors of the snowy avalanche, climbs over precipitous rocks in high altitudes, in search of nature's treasures, is as much deserving of the nation's help as is his brother on the safe and tranquil farm.

Mining in all of its branches is worthy of recognition and help from our General Government, for the highest humanitarian and most important economic reasons. This it has not yet received. The time has come when the same beneficent helping hand that is given to agriculture should be extended to the more complicated and difficult industry of mining, for one is at least as necessary to the nation's prosperity as the other.

It has been asked under what head should the new Bureau be placed. I believe that it should be placed in the Department of the Interior and be at least the coequal of all other bureaus. It should be under the direct control of the Secretary of the Interior. It should be composed of the ablest experts that could be secured, men fully informed upon every feature of operative mining and who could advise with the Secretary upon the many perplexing questions relating to mineral interests and mineral lands.

The work of this Mining Bureau will be of the highest technical and scientific character. In no department of our Government will work of more importance be undertaken nor more beneficial and enduring results be accomplished. Through its well-equipped laboratories and trained experts it will help to solve the perplexing problems now confronting and baffling the mine operators of our land; to stop the deplorable loss of human life now going sadly on, and to show us how to conserve and economize our mineral resources and guide and lead us to the development of greater wealth for the nation's enrichment. Year by year it will grow in importance and achievement, and will be regarded with just confidence and pride by every American citizen.

I beg to remain, respectfully, yours,

THOMAS F. WALSH.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the industry that first drew the civilization of this nation from the seashore to the Alleghenies, the industry that drew civilization up the Mis-

Mississippi to the lead mines of Missouri, Wisconsin, Illinois, and Iowa, in behalf of the industry that drew civilization across the plains to the mountains, across the mountains to the Pacific slope, an industry that for a generation has been contributing more to the wealth of the country than any other, I ask you to support this measure.

The basic industries of this country, which bring the wealth of the country into existence and pay the expenses of government, are agriculture, the fisheries, lumbering, and the mining industry.

You have abundantly supported all the others. Now I ask you to do something for that one which has been asking for recognition for a generation, but has never received any support at your hands whatever.

If you had ever stood at the door of a mine and watched with trembling nerves as the cage came up laden with the mangled forms of your men who worked in the mines, if you had stood there and had seen women wringing their hands and children crying and shrieking for the ones they would not see any more in their homes, you would understand why so many connected with that industry can come before you and ask you to do something to prevent the deplorable loss of life we have every year in the mines of this country, which can be done by the scientific investigation that we ask for here. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HUFF. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. HOWELL].

[Mr. HOWELL of Utah addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I can scarcely believe that the Members of this House realize what they are called on to vote for, especially those who are expected because of their political necessities to vote in favor of this proposition. It is proposed to create a new bureau in one of the great Departments of the Government, a bureau that will soon grow and expand into a Department of Government, the extent of which is not defined and the number of people that may be employed is limited only by the scope of the service and the authority which this bill proposes to vest in that bureau. And what is that authority? The purpose of the act as stated in the bill is to create a Bureau of Mines and Mining. What for? To investigate the cause of mine explosions in the interest of the employees in mines? No. That has already been provided for in legislation enacted at this session of Congress. We have already authorized the Geological Survey to make an investigation of the causes of mine accidents and mine explosions and have given that Bureau $150,000 to conduct that investigation during the next fiscal year.

Therefore, we have taken care of the operatives in the mines; we have taken care of the men who work below the surface or in the mines. This bill proposes to take care of the corporations that own the mines. How? By creating this Bureau of Mines and Mining for the purpose of "fostering, promoting and developing the mining industries of the United States." Fostering, promoting, and developing the mining industries of the States. If this industry must be fostered, promoted, or developed by the aid of Government, are the States too poor to do this? Are the corporations that own the mines too poor to improve their methods of mining, and the conditions under which their business is carried on? If they are, under the provision of the Constitution does Congress get the power to vote from the people's Treasury the money to aid the coal trust in this respect? There has never been a piece of legislation proposed in this House which, upon its face, was for the sole purpose of developing a single industry in this country that was owned and controlled by a few individuals.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. I decline to yield now. They go further and say that they want to make diligent investigations into the methods of mining, the safety of the miners and for the improving of the conditions under which mining operations are carried on.

Now mark you, in the legislation we have enacted at this session we have taken care of this proposition in so far as it proposes to provide for the safety of the miners. Now, you propose to establish a bureau here at Washington for the purpose of fostering and developing the mining industry and improving the methods of mining.

For whose benefit? For the benefit of those who own the mines? Great God, are not the owners of the coal mines of the United States, out of the profits on their product wrung from the people, capable of developing their industry and improving their methods for their own benefit? You propose to give to this Bureau authority to go into the States to improve conditions under which mining operations are carried on. If we once embark upon this sea of legislation, where are we to draw the line at which we must stop? Gentlemen may say, as frequently has been said heretofore, that we have enacted legislation for the development of the agricultural industry. That is true, and in that respect we have gone far beyond our constitutional authority. But the people interested in agriculture are the individual citizens all over our land; they are not the corporations confined to one industry in a few States. I venture to say that if the business of agriculture was carried on by corporations, as the mining industry is, or by a collection of individuals rather than by the individual citizen himself, there would have been no proposition of that kind presented to Congress in the interest of that industry, and Congress would never have been asked to promote the development of agriculture for the benefit of the corporations engaged in that industry.

Mr. Speaker, having taken care to enact legislation at this session of Congress looking to the safety and protecting the lives of the operatives in the mines, it is no part of the business of Congress, it is no part of the business of our Government, to appropriate money or create a Federal service for the purpose of improving the methods or the conditions under which the owners of these mines carry on their business. But beyond this, we should recognize the fact that the beneficiaries of this proposed new service are only a few, and those few the corporations that own practically all the coal-bearing lands of the States. The industry is wholly within the States. The Federal Government has no control over them whatever and can not exercise control or enforce obedience to any rule or regulation it may prescribe.

I want to call attention to another fact, and that is that there is no limit in this bill to the number of clerks that may be employed under the authority the bill vests in this Bureau. We have a statute which expressly prohibits the employment of clerks at the seat of government without specific authority and specific appropriations made for that purpose. But there is no limit here either on the number of clerks or the amount of compensation that the Secretary of the Interior may see fit to pay.

Mr. HACKNEY. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HACKNEY. Is it not true that the bill carries no appropriation whatever?

Mr. TAWNEY. None whatever; but it carries the authority to make the appointments, within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and imposes upon the head of that Department the duty of performing this service. To execute this authority, he must have clerks and other employees. The appropriations must follow as a matter of course.

Mr. HACKNEY. Could he do it before Congress made the appropriation?

Mr. TAWNEY. You authorize him to do it; he could not do it under any other law, but he can under this. The language of the bill is "the President is authorized to appoint a commissioner as a bureau chief at $6,000 a year." There never has been a bureau created that had authority at its inception for the appointment of a chief at a compensation of $6,000 a year.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman says that the Federal Government has no power to develop the mining industries in the United States. The gentleman means that Congress has no right to go into the limits of a State and develop the industry, and so forth, but he does not mean that Congress could not go into the public lands or the Territories and other places belonging to the Government of the United States within its jurisdiction and develop those industries?

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, certainly; but I concede that the Government of the United States can develop the mineral resources within the public domain. This, however, is not a proposition of that kind.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why do you not limit it to that?

Mr. TAWNEY. Why, I am not in charge of the bill. We are considering the bill under suspension of the rules, and there is no opportunity to limit it to that. Under existing law the Department of the Interior, through the Geological Survey, has ample authority, and appropriations have been made for the purpose of classifying the mineral resources of the United States.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Where are those?

Mr. TAWNEY. In the Geological Survey appropriation. This proposition goes beyond the public domain. It takes in the mining industries of the United States. We have appropriated $250,000 for the purpose of testing the coal belonging to private individuals or private corporations, and now you propose to carry on and conduct investigations for the purpose of improving the methods and improving the conditions under which these private owners produce their coal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed ten minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman yield for a single question?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HUFF] gives me the time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. TAWNEY. I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, in the limited time at my disposal I can not offer the argument that I would like in behalf of the establishment of a Bureau of Mines, but as a member of the Committee on Mines and Mining and as a Member of this House, representing a State that is tremendously interested in the mining industry, I rise to add a word of confirmation as to the wisdom of establishing this bureau. Less than twenty-five years ago there was no Department of Agriculture, and while there were those who vigorously urged the establishment of such a Department, there were others who as earnestly contended that it would be unwise to lend the power of our Government in so abundant a way to the encouragement of any industry. It was urged by the enemies of the policy that the whole agricultural business of the country should be developed by those who are directly interested in that industry. This argument did not prevail; the Department of Agriculture was established. Scarcely twenty years have passed by since the first Secretary of that great Department was appointed, and yet to-day, looking out over our vast country, realizing the benefits that the agencies of this Department have given to the cotton producers of the South, the grain producers of the Middle West, the fruit producers of all sections of our country, the producers of cattle and horses and sheep, and the tremendous wealth that has been added to our country through these industries, who is there to-day that will gainsay the wisdom of establishing that Department?

And let me say that, with the exception possibly of the Post-Office Department, no Department of our Government is so closely identified with the best interests of the great masses of the people of our country as is the Agricultural Department.

This bill does not ask for the establishment of a Department of equal standing with the Department of Agriculture, although for my part I wish it did. This bill seeks merely to provide within the Department of the Interior a bureau which shall give more attention than ever before to the mineral resources of our country, to the conservation of the mineral wealth, to the best methods of mining the various products from the earth, and, most important of all, to the safety of the thousands of miners who risk their lives in carrying on their daily occupation.

I am for this bill, because under it the Government will examine carefully into the various agencies of mining in order to ascertain by what means the life of the miners may be safeguarded most wisely. No one can glance back for a period of even one year to the stories of the horrible mine disasters that have occurred in all parts of our country without being appalled at the terrible calamities and impressed with the enormous sorrow that has come to thousands of our homes whose loved ones were dependent upon the mining business for their daily bread. If by the passage of this bill we can establish an agency that will aid in mitigating this terrible loss of life, we shall have done well. If that were the only object of this bill, I would stand for its passage.

Under this bill we propose to seek into the cause of accidents; we propose to look into the method of supplying air to the mine workers; we propose to look into the kinds of machinery that may be employed; we propose to inquire into the cause of the terrific explosions that have occurred and may occur from time to time and see whether or not something may not be done to avoid them and whether or not better methods of handling the mining business will not save to the families of our miners their loved ones and proclaim that a human life is of more importance than the most precious metals that may be produced.

I am for this bill because I believe it will mean the conservation of the mineral resources of our country. Only a few years ago the great mineral wealth of the United States was unknown. When gold was first discovered in California the eyes of the world were riveted upon the new El Dorado in the West. All the Pacific coast States and States of the Rocky Mountains yielded generously of their riches; and while the world was amazed in the amount of wealth produced by each ton of mineral dirt or quartz, the very "dumpings" and tailings of those days have since been found to contain such wealth as was not dreamed of by the users of crude methods.

Under the wise guidance of a bureau of mines I have no doubt that, with improved methods and improved machinery and improved facilities for handling ore and mineral-bearing dirt, wealth that is yet unfathomed will be found in the refuse of our mines to-day which is considered dross. Likewise with our coal industry. We are told by those who have given careful study and attention to this question that the coal supply of the world is limited to such an extent that we may estimate the years within which it will be consumed. At the same time we are also told that in spite of all the coal that we consume we obtain but a small percentage of the heat or force-producing product of that commodity. We are told that under the very best conditions that are known to-day a vastly larger per cent of the heat and power force of coal is wasted than is used for the purpose for which the coal is burned. In view of this enormous extravagance, I believe that the establishment of this bureau may prove in the end a matter of great economy, not only for ourselves, but for the generations that will come when we are gone.

I am for this bill because I believe that the Department of Mines and Mining will furnish a means by which the rarer metals which are still comparatively unknown, so far as our country is concerned, will be discovered. The mineral-bearing region of the United States is already known to be more extensive than the mineral-bearing region of all the countries of Europe combined. Yet, in spite of this, we are dependent upon Europe for metals which are necessary in our arts and manufactures and for which we pay to Europe enormous sums. The miner—the prospector depending upon his own resources, depending upon his own brawn and muscle—is not able to carry on the investigations that must necessarily be carried on before these rarer metals will be discovered or, indeed, before gold and silver will be found when buried in their more elusive hiding place. Under this Department I doubt not that means will be provided whereby ores may be tested, sand and dirt that are thought to possess mineral wealth may be analyzed, and what up to the present has been a heavy burden upon the pioneer of the mining business in every section of our country will become something, at least, of a responsibility to be shared by our whole people.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, why should we not give this encouragement to the mining industry? The manufacturers of this country produce $14,000,000,000 worth of products every year. We have a Department of Commerce and Labor in which there is a Bureau of Manufactures. The agricultural interests of this country produce about $7,000,000,000 worth of products every year. We have a Department of Agriculture, and the wisdom of the establishment of that Department has been fully vindicated. Here is an industry, the output of which is $2,000,000,000—an industry nearly as great as the agricultural industry when the Department of Agriculture was created. We ask under this bill not that a separate department be established, but rather that a bureau within the Department of the Interior be established for the further encouragement of our mining business and for the saving of the lives of men employed therein. [Applause.]

Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, the pending bill to establish a Bureau of Mines in the Department of the Interior has the united support of the mining men of the United States. The Bureau is not asked for in the interests of any particular mining industry, but is intended for all. In November of last year the American Mining Congress, composed of representative mining men from every part of the United States, met in Joplin, Mo., in my district. That congress passed resolutions by substantially unanimous vote favoring the establishment of a Department of Mines, to be presided over by a Cabinet officer. Similar resolutions have been passed at each annual meeting of this congress held for a series of years, and it must be admitted, when we come to consider the extent of the mining industry as compared to the other great industries of the United States now represented by heads of Departments in the President's Cabinet, that the appeal of the miners in asking for a Department of Mines is a just one. But Members of this House, representing mining constituencies, have taken a practical view of the situation and have recognized the impracticability of being able at this time to pass a law for the establishment of a Department of Mines, and they are now agreed that the passage of a bill to establish a Bureau of Mines is all that can be hoped for at the present time.

At the beginning of this session different views were entertained by various Members as to the Department in which this Bureau should be placed. Likewise different views were entertained as to the jurisdiction to be conferred upon the Bureau. Accordingly a number of bills were introduced, one of which was by myself. These matters of difference of opinion, however, have already been fully discussed and thrashed out in the committee, and the Committee on Mines and Mining unanimously present this bill as a plain proposition, combining some of the features of the various bills. In my judgment the measure as drawn is perfectly constitutional and is within the limits of the exercise of Federal power. It is not intended to invest this Bureau with the power to control, regulate, or interfere with the operation of mines in the several States. That is recognized to be purely a matter resting with the several States. The provision conferring power upon the commissioner to investigate methods of mining, the safety of miners, the possible improvement of conditions under which mining operations are carried on, the treatment of ores, the use of explosives and electricity, the prevention of accidents, the values of mineral products, and the markets for the same are not intended to clothe the commissioner with power to do other than obtain information and diffuse that information among the American people on these very important subjects.

The fear has been expressed frequently by men opposing this measure that this bill is but the entering wedge for Government control. Let me say to these gentlemen again, as I have frequently stated, that their fears are wholly without foundation. I am satisfied that should Congress undertake to invest the Federal Government with power to control mines within the States that the acts looking to that end would be wholly unconstitutional and void, and likewise, should the commissioner or any other official employed under this Bureau undertake to exercise such power under this bill, his act would be wholly unjustifiable. Gentlemen opposing this bill say that the States should do the work contemplated by this bill, and they say that the States are doing this work. There is a measure of truth in the statement, but it is a very small measure. Practically every State has in one form or another laws providing for the matters covered by this bill, but the States, acting separately, are not in position to deal with the mining industry as a whole. Very few of the States have more than one or two of the important branches of mining within their borders. In the matter of determining the cause of mine explosions most of the States have been for years trying to solve this most vexed problem, but without success so far. In gathering and diffusing knowledge of the methods of mining the States are illy equipped to do the subject more than partial justice.

In gathering information as to the products and values of mines the States, acting separately, can not carry the work to success. The arguments made against this bill, if carried to their logical conclusion, would necessitate the repeal of the law establishing the Department of Agriculture, and would stop the investigations made by that Department, so valuable to the agricultural interests of the land. It would also necessitate the repeal of the law establishing the Department of Commerce and Labor and stop the great work being done by that Department. It would likewise prevent the Government ever taking a census of its population and resources, because, forsooth, the States acting separately could do the very same work. When the Department of Agriculture was established, and when each of the several bureaus contained in that Department were established, the argument was made that the people knew all about agricultural matters, that men knew how to farm, and that there was no necessity for a Bureau of Plant Industry or of Animal Industry or of the many other bureaus in the Department of Agriculture. The Bureau of Mines will no more interfere with mining in the States than the Bureau of Plant Industry has interfered with farming in the States.

But, it is said that the Geological Survey, already in existence, can do everything that the Government should do in behalf of the mining industry. I deny this. The Geological Survey has done a great work and is doing a great work, but the very argument that induced the passage of a law establishing the Geological Survey can be invoked for the passage of this bill establishing the Bureau of Mines. The Geological Survey has its proper field of operation. Its work is purely technical and theoretical. It determines from surface indications the probability of the existence of certain mineral elements beneath the surface, but the officials doing the work of the Geological Survey are not adapted to the investigation of the practical business end of mining. The mining interests want a Bureau of Mines, to be presided over not by a theorist, but by a practical mining engineer; a man who has had experience in the actual operation of mines; a man who can avail himself of the scientific investigation by the Geological Survey and vindicate or explode the theories contained in the geological reports. Already we have recognized the fact that the Geological Survey, under its original authority, could not possibly perform the duty of the National Government toward the mining industry. At this very session an appropriation of $150,000 has been made for the purpose of investigating the cause of mine explosions, and unless the Bureau of Mines is established this work must necessarily be done by the Geological Survey.

We want a practical man at the head of this Bureau to take up this important investigation and give direction to the work during its progress. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] complains that the salary of the Commissioner of Mines is fixed at $6,000. Let me say in answer to this suggestion that a practical mining engineer on a salary of $6,000 will make the Bureau worth something to the country, but that the work of this Bureau would be worthless if you put a cheap man at its head. It has been suggested also by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] that this bill is framed for the benefit of the big corporations who want to unload onto the Government investigations which should be carried on by men on their pay rolls. Let me say in answer to the gentleman that I have the honor to represent a Congressional district in which is produced over 65 per cent of the zinc mined in the United States; that this mining is carried on not by gigantic trusts and corporations, but by the small mining company and the small miner, and every miner in my section, whether engaged in the work on a large or small scale, is heartily in favor of this Bureau.

The small miners are the very men who would benefit the most by the work of this Bureau. They are the ones who are not equipped with expensive laboratories to determine the value of the products of their mines; they are the ones who are unable to carry on their pay rolls a corps of experts to pass over the country and purchase for a song valuable mining properties from individuals unacquainted with their value. What the people of this nation need is more information and better information and more practical information about mines and mining methods and the product of mines. It is now practically an impossibility to determine with any degree of certainty the products of the mines of the country until many years after the product has been put upon the market and until the information obtained is valueless for all practical purposes. One great lesson that the people should be taught is that mining is a business and not a gamble; that it is a legitimate business yielding profit and wealth when carried on along business lines. Give to the miner every particle of information which it is possible to obtain through governmental channels as to the location of the various mineral products; as to the best methods and means of carrying on the work of mining; as to the best methods of utilizing the products of the mines; as to the product also of others engaged in mining industries, and as to the best market for the products of his mine. In this manner only will he be put on equality with those engaged in the other great industries that produce the material wealth of this nation.

The preservation of our natural resources has been a topic recently of very much discussion and has caused much anxiety. The preservation of our mineral resources is unquestionably the most important problem of the matter of preserving the natural resources of this nation. Every pound of mineral extracted from the earth leaves the mineral resources of less value than they were before the extraction. How important, then, it is that every particle of mineral wealth should be extracted in the most enlightened manner, by the most economic means, and that none of its value should be wasted in its utilization.

Mr. Speaker, the miners of precious metals, such as gold and silver, throughout the country; the miners of the baser metals, such as iron, copper, lead, zinc, and others of that class; the miners of coal, of oil and gas, come to this Congress with a united appeal asking that this Bureau of Mines be established, and asking that this great industry, second only to agriculture in producing the wealth of this nation, shall be given some reasonable governmental recognition such as has been given to the other great industries of our land. They ask this, not alone for the preservation of the natural resources of the country, for the better utilization of the mineral products, but they ask it for the sake of humanity, for the preservation of human life.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the two great basic industries of the country are agriculture and mining. We already provide the means of advancing and promoting agriculture, and this bill provides a means by which mining may be advanced and promoted. It has been said that this bill invades the rights of the States in the exercise of their police powers. It does nothing of the kind. It does not interfere with the police powers of the States in any shape or form. It does not propose that there shall be inspections of the mines. It does not propose that there shall be regulations laid down under Federal direction for the operation of the mines. It provides for the establishment of a bureau, the officials of which will investigate into the means of promoting the best interests of mining and protecting the lives of those engaged in mining.

The fuel supply of our country is of great importance, not only to the individuals who own coal lands or the corporations that own coal lands, but it is of great importance to the entire public. We are mining annually about 450,000,000 tons of coal, and it is estimated by the Geological Survey that in mining and placing upon the market ready for use 450,000,000 tons of coal over 200,000,000 tons of coal is wasted—over 200,000,000 tons of the fuel supply of the country that should be kept for the future is lost by our present method of mining. The establishment of this bureau seeks to overcome that, and in addition to doing that it seeks to preserve the lives of those engaged in the production of coal. [Applause.]

Mr. HUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota has called attention to the fact that the legislative bill, which has been adopted, carried an appropriation of $150,000 to enable parties to discover the causes of mine explosions. He has also called attention to the fact that the sundry civil bill carries an appropriation of $250,000 for the test of lignites and fuels, and he argues, therefore, that the purposes to be accomplished by this bill have been already provided for. Now, the gentleman knows that in both the cases to which I have referred the appropriations are temporary. They are made year by year, not provided for permanently, as they would be under this incorporation of a Bureau of Mines. But I draw from the fact that these appropriations were made a very different lesson from that drawn by the gentleman from Minnesota. I draw from those appropriations the lesson that Congress recognizes the fact that appropriations for these purposes are properly competent for Congress to make.

They are, in other words, within the proper governmental function of Congress to exercise. They belong to that class of needs that individuals can not properly and successfully respond to. Now, the two great basic industries of this country are agriculture and mining. Think of the millions of money that we have appropriated and that we are appropriating every year toward the development of agriculture, toward the discovery of the properties of soils, toward the maintenance of agricultural colleges, and all that sort of thing. Now, it seems to me that the time has arrived when the Government should give some attention to the other great basic industry, the mining industry of this country, so that we shall ascertain what we have in the way of mineral wealth. If I had the time, I would like to go into that branch of the subject, but for lack of time I wish to put in the Record, under the leave already granted, a letter upon the subject from Mr. Thomas F. Walsh, addressed to the chairman and members of the House Committee on Mines and Mining. [Applause.]

The letter referred to is as follows:

Letter from Thomas F. Walsh, of Washington, D. C., favoring the establishment of a Bureau of Mines and Mining and referring to the importance of the development and production of the rarer minerals, radium, platinum, vanadium, columbite, etc.

SOME ADDITIONAL REASONS FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A BUREAU OF MINES.

To the honorable Chairman and Members of the House Committee on Mines and Mining.

GENTLEMEN: In the hearings before your honorable committee on the question of the establishment of a Bureau of Mines, the fields of coal mining, iron mining, and precious-metal mining were well and ably covered by representatives of these respective industries, and the great benefits that a Bureau of Mines would confer upon them were pointed out in an able and intelligent manner. However, a great field of undeveloped mineral wealth, to which I beg to call your attention, was scarcely touched upon. I refer to the development and production of what is classed as the rarer minerals, such as radium, platinum, vanadium, uranium, tungsten, columbite, and others, all of which are much needed in our manufacturing and chemical industries.

Owing to a lack of knowledge of their properties and treatment, we are to-day producing practically none in America, but import them in large quantities from Europe at an expense of millions of dollars. Incredible as it seems, no effort has been or is being made to produce these valuable commodities of commerce. I believe we have them in paying quantities in the vast area of the mineralized portions of our country. More knowledge on this subject will prove that these little-known minerals are not as rare as they are supposed to be. Aluminum when first used was thought to be a scarce metal, yet when energetic efforts were directed toward its production it was found in quantities and in the common clays. I believe the same relative results will follow a thorough search for the rarer minerals. The proposed bureau, in its educational work in this particular line—by disseminating directly through the schools of mining, as well as through the public press, a knowledge as to how to recognize and find those minerals and how to treat and market them when found—would give such an impetus to its development and production as would probably result in an output of a new wealth greater than that of the precious minerals of to-day.

To give some idea of the great value of those minerals, I will, for illustration, take vanadium, one of the rarer of the economic class. As an alloy in the making of the highest grade of steel, vanadium is the best ever discovered. It is the most-prized ingredient the steel manufacturers can have. If it could be mined and sold at a reasonable price, our steel makers would gladly buy all that could be produced. As it is now, when they need it they have to import it from Europe and pay $5 per pound, or $10,000 per ton. The same is in a measure true of the other rarer minerals. There is a pressing and constant demand for them, but none is produced because it is a sphere of our mining activities that, principally for the want of knowledge on the subject, we have heretofore ignored, content to pay a great tribute to other nations for those things which we have at home.

Take another illustration—radium, the rarest of all minerals. Because of the small amount produced, it has not yet passed from the scientific and physical to the economic. If we want an atom of it, we must beg for it from the Austrian Government. Notwithstanding the small mineral area of that country, it has, because of its research work, a monopoly on it and its associated mineral, uranium. The production of the other rarer minerals will undoubtedly result in the production of radium, for we have reason to believe they go together. The dreams of the ages has been the finding of perpetual motion. We seem to have it in radium. The proposed mining bureau, without interfering with its more utilitarian duties, can direct and foster the production of this most valuable mineral; it can investigate its properties and potentialities and, perhaps, apply it to the service of humanity in ways that will be as great in their benefits as radium is enduring.

It may be asked, Can those rarer minerals be found in our country? I have the best of reasons for believing they can. Some prospecting recently made in this direction, in Colorado, promises good results. I have been over the mining districts of Bohemia, Austria, where many of them, especially uranium and radium, have been found. I have been over every mineralized State of our Union. So far as I could see, we have the same conditions, the same character and class of baser minerals in which the rare ones are found. We have a mineralized area far greater than that of Europe, and in which we have found every mineral that we have heretofore searched for. The fact that we have not found certain ores is no evidence that they do not exist, but rather a proof that we have not looked for them. If it should be ascertained that, in accordance with our previous knowledge of the minerals and with their well-known affinity for each other, the rarer ones will be found associated with the baser ones in iron, zinc, copper, and lead sulphides, then we are apt to find them in broad areas and in many unsuspected places—in the sulphide deposits of Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia, Arkansas, and Missouri, as well as in the great mining States of the West.

An opinion prevailed that they would not be found in sulphides. But last year I had a piece of sulphide ore tested for radio activity and received a report that it possessed it in as strong a degree as the pitchblend ore of Bohemia, which was conclusive proof of the presence of both uranium and radium.

Throughout our mining districts there are billions of tons of low-grade sulphide mineral on the dumps of mines awaiting the application of science to bring them into use. Whilst it can not be expected that all of these ores carry the rarer minerals, if they are found in a fraction of them the wealth they can be made to yield will be incalculable.

It may seem strange that this field of wealth should remain so long untouched, yet the explanation is simple. In mining, as in other things, we followed the line of least resistance, the course that with the simplest efforts led to the quickest and most direct results in the extraction and treatment of the ores—first the rocker, then the sluice box, then the mill and smelter. We mined only the ores we could treat with these methods. If we noticed some strange mineral, which we often did, we either did not give it a thought or wished it well away because of its refractory influences in the treatment of the minerals we were after. This, as stated, was due to a want of knowledge of those rarer minerals and a consequent want of market for them, and this is why we are not producing any of them to-day, but instead paying out millions annually to Europe because we must have them. The importations will give but a faint idea of their enormous value to us; for if we were producing them ourselves, our own industries would use a hundred times more than they do now. Their development and extraction will create a new industry that in turn will create new homes, new occupations, and new wealth for our own people. A great interest is awakening on this subject. Since I had the honor of addressing your committee I have had over a dozen letters asking for information and advice on every feature of the question. They are all of the same tenor. I will quote an extract from one, written from the southwest portion of New Mexico by a mining engineer:

"I enclose a newspaper clipping and trust the bill referred to—the bill creating the Bureau of Mines—will soon become a law. It is one of the most needed enactments of the present day. I believe that radium and several other of the rarer minerals exist in this locality, but so little is known about them that the ordinary individual does not even know how they occur, much less how to extract nor where to get them treated. Please give me such information on the subject as will help me to look for and develop these ores."

The great national industry of mining is worthy of the same governmental encouragement and protection that is given the other industries, especially in the saving of life. The coal miner takes his life in his hands and toils all day in the darkened, dusty caverns of the coal mines, looking forward with pleasure to the hour that will reunite him to his little family. It is only too often he is brought back in the cold stillness of death, the victim of an explosion, in most cases brought about by some hidden force of nature which is not yet understood. Surely, the lives of the vast army of these brave toilers should be the serious concern of the National Government.

The prospector, who braves the terrors of the snowy avalanche, climbs over precipitous rocks in high altitudes, in search of nature's treasures, is as much deserving of the nation's help as is his brother on the safe and tranquil farm.

Mining in all of its branches is worthy of recognition and help from our General Government, for the highest humanitarian and most important economic reasons. This it has not yet received. The time has come when the same beneficent helping hand that is given to agriculture should be extended to the more complicated and difficult industry of mining, for one is at least as necessary to the nation's prosperity as the other.

It has been asked under what head should the new Bureau be placed? I believe that it should be placed in the Department of the Interior and be at least the coequal of all other bureaus. It should be under the direct control of the Secretary of the Interior. It should be composed of the ablest experts that could be secured, men fully informed upon every feature of operative mining and who could advise with the Secretary upon the many perplexing questions relating to mineral interests and mineral lands.

The work of this mining bureau will be of the highest technical and scientific character. In no Department of our Government will work of more importance be undertaken nor more beneficial and enduring results be accomplished. Through its well-equipped laboratories and trained experts it will help to solve the perplexing problems now confronting and baffling the mine operators of our land; to stop the deplorable loss of human life now going sadly on, and to show us how to conserve and economize our mineral resources and guide and lead us to the development of greater wealth for the nation's enrichment. Year by year it will grow in importance and achievement and will be regarded with just confidence and pride by every American citizen.

I beg to remain, respectfully, yours,

THOMAS F. WALSH.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, the Bureau of Mines and Mining provided for in this bill should be established. We have made appropriations at this session for work that should be done under this Bureau. It could very readily and very properly take over the work that has been planned for an investigation of mine disasters and for tests of coal and lignites. All of these things that are done now by persons under other Departments might well be done under the permanent Bureau that is provided for in this bill, and I sincerely hope that bill will pass.

It is doubtful if anywhere else there can be found a more abundant or greater variety of mineral resources than we have in this country. We have made valuable discoveries of these resources within the past twenty-five years. We have in the same time made marvelous development in the production of these products and extended their use in many ways.

The Director of the Geological Survey, in his report on the mineral resources of the United States for the year 1906, has made some interesting and valuable compilations of facts on this subject:

"In the twenty-seven years from 1880 to 1906, inclusive, the value of the mineral output of the United States has increased nearly five and one-fourth times. This marvelous growth is of additional interest in that it shows approximately by its fluctuations the financial ebb and flow of the whole country. From $364,928,298 in 1880 the value rose to $451,000,000 in 1882, declined to $406,000,000 in 1884, rose steadily to $606,000,000 in 1890, declined slightly to $605,000,000 in 1891, rose to $622,000,000 in 1892, fell to less than $550,000,000 in 1893 and 1894, rose to $640,000,000 in 1895, remained at the same figure in 1896, rose rapidly to $1,491,000,000 in 1903, declined to $1,361,000,000 in 1904, rose to $1,623,000,000 in 1905, and advanced to the immense sum of $1,902,517,565 in 1906. Keeping pace with this growth has been a strain, and it is gratifying that the system has so expanded that the statistics of this wonderful production continually increase in completeness and accuracy. This attainment is largely the result of the hearty cooperation of the producers.

"The varied character of the units of measurement employed in the mineral industry makes it impossible to compare the outputs of the several minerals except in the value of the products. The figures given show a continuation of the activity in the mineral industries of the United States noted in 1900, 1901, 1902, and 1903, though the value of the output for 1904 was almost 9 per cent less than that for 1903; the value in 1905 was about 9 per cent greater than that for 1903.

"In 1906, for the second time, the total value of our mineral production exceeded the enormous sum of $1,500,000,000.

"The exact figures for 1906 are $1,902,517,565, as compared with $1,623,928,720 in 1905, with $1,361,067,554 in 1904, with $1,491,928,980 in 1903, and with $1,323,102,717 in 1902; a gain in 1906 over 1905 of $278,588,845, or 17.15 per cent; a gain in 1906 over 1904 of $541,450,011, or 39.78 per cent; over 1903 of $410,588,585, or 27.52 per cent, and over 1902 of $579,414,848, or 43.79 per cent.

"As heretofore, iron and coal are the most important of our mineral products. The value of the iron in 1906 was $505,700,000; the value of the coal, $513,079,809. The fuels increased from $602,257,548 in 1905 to $652,398,476 in 1906, a gain of $50,140,928, or 8.33 per cent. Anthracite coal showed a decrease in value of $9,961,306, from $141,879,000 in 1905 to $131,917,694 in 1906. The average price of anthracite coal per long ton at the mine was $2.30, as against $2.25 in 1905, $2.35 in 1904, $2.50 in 1903, and $2.35 in 1902; and the average price per short ton for bituminous coal at the mine was $1.11, as against $1.06 in 1905, $1.10 in 1904, $1.24 in 1903, and $1.12 in 1902. The increase in value of the bituminous coal output over 1905 was $46,503,821—a combined increase in value of coal of $36,542,515, or 7.67 per cent.

"The gain of $278,588,845 in the total value of our mineral production is due to gains in both metallic and nonmetallic products, the metallic products showing an increase from $702,453,101 in 1905 to $886,110,856 in 1906, a gain of $183,657,755, and the nonmetallic products showing an increase from $921,075,619 in 1905 to $1,016,206,709 in 1906, a gain of $95,131,090. To these products should be added estimated unspecified products, including molybdenum, bismuth, and other mineral products, valued at $200,000, making a total mineral production for 1906 of $1,902,517,565.

"METALS.

"Iron and steel.—Twenty States produced pig iron in 1906, as against 20 in 1905, 20 in 1904, 22 in 1903, 22 in 1902, 20 in 1901, and 21 in 1900 and 1899. The total production of pig iron in 1906 was 25,307,191 long tons, as against 22,992,380 long tons in 1905, 16,497,083 long tons in 1904, 18,009,252 tons in 1903, 17,821,307 tons in 1902, and 15,878,354 tons in 1901. The production of 1906 shows an increase in quantity of 2,314,811 long tons, or over 10 per cent, over the production of 1905, and an increase in value from $382,450,000 to $505,700,000, amounting to $123,250,000, or 32.25 per cent. The average price per long ton of pig iron increased from $16.63 in 1905 to $19.98 in 1906. The average prices per long ton in recent years have been as follows: 1904, $14.13; 1903, $19.12; 1902, $20.92; 1901, $15.25.

"Iron ores.—The production of iron ores in 1906 amounted to 47,749,728 long tons, as compared with 42,526,133 long tons in 1905, with 27,644,330 long tons in 1904, with 35,019,308 long tons in 1903, and with 35,554,135 tons in 1902. The value at the mines of the ore mined in 1906 was $100,597,106, as compared with $75,165,604 in 1905. As in the seven preceding years, the production of iron ores in the United States in 1906 was never equaled by that of any other country.

"Manganese ores.—The production of manganese ores was 2,825 long tons, valued at $25,335, in 1903, and increased to 3,146 long tons, valued at $29,466, in 1904, and to 4,118 long tons, valued at $36,214, in 1905. The average price per ton in 1905 was $8.80, as compared with $9.37 in 1904 and with $8.97 in 1903. In 1906 the production of manganese ores was 6,921 long tons, valued at $88,132. The average price was $12.73 per ton. Manganiferous iron ores, carrying from 20 to 40 per cent of manganese, were produced to the extent of 41,300 long tons, valued at $122,400.

"Gold.—The production of gold increased from 3,910,729 ounces, valued at $80,835,648, in 1904, to 4,265,742 ounces, valued at $88,180,700, in 1905, and to 4,565,333 ounces, valued at $94,373,800, in 1906, an increase in 1906 of 299,591 ounces in quantity and of $8,193,100 in value.

"Silver.—The production of silver increased in quantity from 55,999,864 ounces in 1904 to 56,101,600 ounces in 1905, and to 56,517,900 ounces in 1906; it increased in commercial value from $32,085,378 in 1904 to $34,221,976 in 1905, and to $38,258,400 in 1906, a gain in 1906 of $4,034,424.

"Copper.—The production of copper increased from 812,537,267 pounds, valued at $105,629,845, in 1904, to 901,907,843 pounds, valued at $139,795,716, in 1905, and to 917,805,682 pounds, valued at $177,595,888, in 1906, an increase in 1906 of 15,997,839 pounds in quantity, and of $37,800,172 in value.

"Lead.—The production of lead in 1906 was 350,153 short tons, as against 302,000 short tons in 1905, 307,000 short tons in 1904, and 282,000 short tons in 1903. The value of the production in 1906 was $39,917,442, as compared with $28,690,000 in 1905, with $26,402,000 in 1904, and with $23,520,000 in 1903.

"Zinc.—The production of zinc in 1906 was 190,694 short tons, as against 203,849 short tons in 1905, 186,702 short tons in 1904, and 159,219 short tons in 1903. The value of the zinc production in 1906 was $24,362,668, as compared with $21,054,182 in 1905, with $18,670,200 in 1904, and with $16,717,995 in 1903.

"Bauxite.—In 1906 the production of Bauxite was 75,332 long tons, valued at $368,311, as compared with 48,129 long tons, valued at $240,292, in 1905, with 47,661 long tons, valued at $235,704, in 1904, and with 48,087 long tons, valued at $171,306, in 1903.

"Aluminum.—The consumption of aluminum during 1906 was 14,910,000 pounds, valued at $4,262,286, as against 11,347,000 pounds, valued at $3,246,300, in 1905, and 8,600,000 pounds, valued at $2,477,000, in 1904.

"Quicksilver.—The production of quicksilver during 1906 amounted to 26,238 flasks (of 76½ avoirdupois pounds net; 75 avoirdupois pounds net after June, 1904), as compared with 30,451 flasks in 1905, with 34,570 flasks in 1904, with 35,620 flasks in 1903, and with 34,291 flasks in 1902. The value of the quicksilver produced in 1906 was $958,634, as compared with $1,103,120 in 1905, with $1,503,795 in 1904, with $1,544,934 in 1903, and with $1,467,848 in 1902. California reported 20,310 flasks, as compared with 24,635 flasks in 1905, with 29,217 flasks in 1904, with 30,526 flasks in 1903, and with 28,972 flasks in 1902; and Texas reported 4,761 flasks, as against 4,723 flasks in 1905, 5,336 flasks in 1904, 5,029 flasks in 1903, and 5,319 flasks in 1902. Utah reported 1,164 flasks and Oregon 3 flasks in 1906.

Chromic iron ore.—California was the only State producing chromite during 1906, the quantity being 107 long tons, valued at $1,800, as compared with 22 long tons, valued at $375, in 1905, with 123 long tons, valued at $1,845, in 1904, with 150 long tons, valued at $2,250, in 1903, and with 315 long tons, valued at $4,567, in 1902.

Molybdenum.—The commercial production of molybdenum in 1906 was approximately the same as the production of 1905, which, in turn, was in excess of the 1904 production of 14.5 short tons of concentrates, valued at $2,175. The production in 1903 was 795 short tons of concentrates, valued at $60,865. The value of molybdenum ores fluctuates very greatly.

Nickel.—There was no production of metallic nickel reported in 1906, as in 1905, only a small quantity of nickel and cobalt ore being reported as sold. In 1904 the output was 24,000 pounds, as against a production of 114,200 pounds in 1903 and of 5,748 pounds in 1902. The value in 1904 was $11,400, as against $45,900 in 1903 and $2,701 in 1902. The imports of nickel in 1906 were valued at $1,902,367, as against $1,962,131 in 1905, $1,121,491 in 1904, $1,493,889 in 1903, and $1,437,649 in 1902.

Rutile.—A small production of rutile, chiefly from Virginia, was reported in 1906.

Tungsten.—The commercial production of concentrated tungsten ores during 1906 amounted approximately to 928 short tons, valued at $348,867, as against 803 short tons, valued at $268,676 in 1905; 740 short tons, valued at $184,000 in 1904; 292 short tons, valued at $43,639 in 1903, and 184 short tons in 1902, of which not more than a few tons were sold.

Uranium and vanadium.—The production of uranium and vanadium minerals in 1906, as reported to the Survey and included under unspecified products, was the largest of recent years. The production in 1905 was valued at $375, as against $10,600 in 1904, $5,625 in 1903, and $48,125 in 1902.

Tantalum.—A commercial production of tantalum in 1906 was reported from Colorado and South Dakota.

Platinum.—The production of platinum from domestic ores in 1906 was 1,439 ounces, valued at $45,189, as compared with 318 ounces, valued at $5,320, in 1905; with 200 ounces, valued at $4,100, in 1904; with 110 ounces, valued at $2,080, in 1903, and with 94 ounces, valued at $1,814, in 1902. In December, 1904, the price of ingot platinum at New York advanced from $18.50 to $19.50 per ounce; in April, 1905, it was $20.50; in January, 1906, it was $20.50, in February, 1906, it advanced to $25; in September, 1906, it rose to $33; in November it was $38, remaining at that price until late in February, 1907, when hard platinum was quoted at $41 per ounce. This price declined on June 15 to $26 for ordinary, and $28.50 for hard; then it rose to $27 and $29, respectively, on July 27, and stands now (August 3, 1907), at $28 for ordinary and $29.50 for hard.

Antimony.—The antimony obtained from the smelting of domestic ores in 1906 amounted to 404 short tons, valued at $38,149, and the antimony obtained from hard lead produced from foreign and domestic lead ores was 1,362 short tons, valued at $286,004, a total production for 1906 of 1,766 short tons, valued at $602,949, as compared with 3,240 short tons, valued at $705,787 in 1905; with 3,057 short tons, valued at $505,524, in 1904; with 3,128 short tons, valued at $548,433, in 1903, and with 3,561 short tons, valued at $634,506, in 1902.

Bismuth.—The marketed production of bismuth ore in 1906 was 8,334 pounds, valued at $12,500; in 1905 it was 24,405 pounds, valued at $4,187; in 1904 it was 5,184 pounds, valued at $314. There was no marketed production of bismuth ores in the United States during 1903 or 1902.

Tin.—There was a small production of metallic tin in South Dakota in 1906, which, with concentrates from Alaska and from the North Carolina-South Carolina deposits, was valued at $35,000.

FUELS.

Coal.—For the first time in the history of the United States the production of coal in 1906 reached a total of over 400,000,000 short tons, showing an actual output of 414,157,278 tons of 2,000 pounds, valued at $513,079,809. Of this total, the output of anthracite coal amounted to 63,645,010 long tons (equivalent to 71,282,411 short tons), which, as compared with the production of 69,339,152 long tons in 1905, was a decrease of 5,694,142 long tons, or over 8 per cent. The value of anthracite coal at the mines in 1906 was $131,917,694, as against $141,879,000 in 1905, $138,974,020 in 1904, $152,036,448 in 1903, and $76,173,586 in 1902. The average price of the marketed anthracite coal sold during the year at the mines was $2.30 per long ton, as against $2.25 per long ton in 1905, $2.35 in 1904, $2.50 in 1903, and $2.35 in 1902.

The output of bituminous coal (which includes semiarthracite and all semibituminous and lignite coals), amounted in 1906 to 342,874,867 short tons, valued at $381,162,115, as compared with 315,062,785 short tons, valued at $334,658,294, in 1905; with 278,659,689 short tons, valued at $305,397,001, in 1904; with 282,749,348 short tons, valued at $351,687,933, in 1903; and with 260,216,844 short tons, valued at $290,858,483, in 1902. The increase in the production of bituminous coal in 1906 over 1905 was therefore 27,812,082 short tons in quantity and $46,503,821 in value. The average price of bituminous coal per ton at the mines during 1906 was $1.11, as against $1.06 in 1905, $1.10 in 1904, and $1.24 per ton in 1903, the highest price recorded by the Survey.

Coke.—The coke production of the United States in 1906, which included the output, 4,558,127 short tons, from 3,362 re-tort or by-product ovens, amounted to 36,401,217 short tons, as compared with 32,231,129 short tons in 1905, with 23,661,106 short tons in 1904, with 25,274,281 short tons in 1903, and with 25,401,730 short tons in 1902. The increase in quantity in 1906 from 1905 was 4,159,088 short tons, or over 12 per cent. The total value was $91,608,034, as against $72,476,196 in 1905, a gain of $19,157,338, or 26 per cent. The average price per ton in 1906 was $2.52, against $2.25 in 1905. The average output from the by-product ovens in 1906 was 1,356 tons per oven, against an average of 373.6 tons per oven from the beehive ovens.

Natural gas.—The value of the natural gas produced in 1906 was $46,873,932, as compared with $41,562,855 in 1905, with $38,496,760 in 1904, with $35,807,860 in 1903, and with $30,867,863 in 1902—a gain of about 13 per cent in 1906 over 1905.

Gas, coke, tar, and ammonia.—The aggregate value of all the products obtained from the distillation of coal in gas works and re-tort ovens in 1905 was $56,684,972, as against $51,157,736 in 1904, and $47,830,600 in 1903. No report has been prepared for 1906; the estimated value of the products is distributed among the respective States in the table of output and value by States.

Petroleum.—The total production of crude petroleum in the United States in 1906 was 126,493,936 barrels, as against 134,717,580 barrels in 1905, 117,080,960 barrels in 1904, and 100,461,337 barrels in 1903, a decrease in 1906 of 8,277,644 barrels, or 6.14 per cent from the production of 1905. Among the noteworthy changes in production in 1906 were gains, as compared with 1905, of nearly 10,000,000 barrels in the Mid-Continent field and of over 4,000,000 barrels in the Illinois field; these gains were more than offset by losses of over 15,000,000 barrels in Texas, over 3,000,000 barrels in Indiana, and of over 1,000,000 barrels each in Ohio and West Virginia.

The value of crude petroleum produced during 1906 was $92,444,735, or an average price of 73.1 cents per barrel, as against $84,157,399, or an average price of 62.47 cents per barrel, in 1905; against $101,175,455, or 86.41 cents per barrel, in 1904, and against $94,694,050, or 94.26 cents per barrel, in 1903.

STRUCTURAL MATERIALS.

Cement.—The total production of hydraulic cement in the United States in 1906 was 51,000,445 barrels, valued at $55,302,277, as compared with 40,102,308 barrels, valued at $35,931,533, in 1905; with 31,675,257 barrels, valued at $26,031,920, in 1904; with 29,899,140 barrels, valued at $31,931,341, in 1903, and with 25,753,504 barrels, valued at $25,366,380, in 1902. The Portland cement production in 1906 was 46,463,424 barrels, valued at $52,466,186, as compared with 35,246,812 barrels, valued at $33,245,867, in 1905; with 26,505,881 barrels, valued at $23,355,119, in 1904; with 22,342,973 barrels, valued at $27,713,319, in 1903, and with 17,230,644 barrels, valued at $20,864,078, in 1902—an increase in quantity in 1906, as compared with 1905, of 11,216,612 barrels, and in value of $19,220,319. The production of natural cement in 1906 was 4,055,797 barrels, valued at $2,423,170, as compared with 4,473,049 barrels, valued at $2,413,052, in 1905; with 4,866,331 barrels, valued at $2,450,150, in 1904; with 7,030,271 barrels, valued at $3,675,520, in 1903, and with 8,044,305 barrels, valued at $4,076,630, in 1902—a decrease in quantity in 1906 of 417,252 barrels and an increase in value of $10,118. The production of slag cement in 1906 amounted to 481,224 barrels, valued at $412,921, as against 382,447 barrels, valued at $272,614, in 1905; 303,045 barrels, valued at $226,651, in 1904, and 525,806 barrels, valued at $542,502, in 1903.

Clay products.—The activity in all branches of the clay-working industries noted in the reports as true of 1899, 1900, 1901, 1902, and 1903 diminished very slightly during 1904, but increased vigorously in 1905, which increase continued in 1906. The value of all clay products, as reported to this office in 1906, was $161,032,722, as against $149,697,188 in 1905, $131,023,248 in 1904, $131,062,421 in 1903, and $122,169,531 in 1902. The brick and tile products in 1906 were valued at $129,591,838, as against $121,778,294 in 1905, $105,864,978 in 1904, $105,626,369 in 1903, and $98,042,078 in 1902. The pottery products were valued in 1906 at $31,440,884, as against $27,918,894 in 1905, $25,158,270 in 1904, $25,436,052 in 1903, and $24,127,453 in 1902.

"The commercial production of clay mined and sold in 1906 by those not manufacturing the clay themselves was valued at $3,245,256, as against $2,768,006 in 1905, $2,320,162 in 1904, and $2,594,042 in 1903.

"Lime.—The production of lime in 1906 was 3,197,754 short tons, valued at $12,480,653, as against 2,984,100 short tons, valued at $10,941,680, in 1905, and against 2,707,809 short tons, valued at $9,951,456, in 1904. The output was valued at $9,255,882 in 1903 and at $9,335,618 in 1902. The average price per short ton was $3.67 in 1905 and $3.90 in 1906.

"Sand-lime brick.—The production of sand-lime brick in 1906 was valued at $1,170,005, as against $972,064 in 1905, $463,128 in 1904, and $155,040 in 1903.

"Slate.—The production of slate in 1906 was valued at $5,668,346, as against $5,496,207 in 1905, $5,617,195 in 1904, $6,256,885 in 1903, and $5,696,051 in 1902.

"Stone.—The value of all kinds of stone produced in the United States during 1906 amounted to $66,378,794, as compared with $63,798,748 in 1905, with $58,765,715 in 1904, with $57,433,141 in 1903, and with $54,798,682 in 1902.

"Included under stone is the limestone used for fluxing in blast furnaces, which in 1906 was 16,077,202 long tons, valued at $7,612,692, as compared with 15,387,891 long tons, valued at $7,004,265, in 1905; with 10,657,038 long tons, valued at $4,702,768, in 1904, and with 12,029,719 long tons, valued at $5,423,732, in 1903.

"ABRASIVE MATERIALS.

"Alundum or artificial corundum.—The production of alundum by the Norton Emery Wheel Company amounted in 1906 to 4,712,000 pounds, valued at $282,720, an average of 6 cents per pound, as compared with 3,612,000 pounds manufactured in 1905, valued at $252,840, an average of 7 cents per pound, and with 4,020,000 pounds manufactured in 1904.

"Carborundum.—The production of carborundum in 1906 was 6,225,300 pounds, as against 5,596,000 pounds in 1905, 7,060,380 pounds in 1904, 4,759,890 pounds in 1903, and 3,741,500 pounds in 1902. The value of the carborundum varies from 7 to 10 cents a pound.

"Corundum and emery.—The combined production of corundum and emery in 1906 amounted to 1,160 short tons, valued at $44,310, as against 2,126 short tons, valued at $61,464, in 1905; 1,916 short tons, valued at $56,985, in 1904; 2,542 short tons, valued at $64,102, in 1903; and 4,251 short tons, valued at $104,605, in 1902.

"Crushed steel.—The production of crushed steel in 1906 was 837,000 pounds, as against 612,000 pounds in 1905, 790,000 pounds in 1904, 755,000 pounds in 1903, and 735,000 pounds in 1902.

"Crystalline quartz.—In 1906 the production of crystalline quartz included under abrasives amounted to 24,082 short tons, valued at $121,671, as against 19,039 short tons, valued at $88,118, in 1905; against 31,940 short tons, valued at $74,850, in 1904; 8,938 short tons, valued at $76,908, in 1903, and 15,104 short tons, valued at $84,335, in 1902.

"Garnet.—The production of abrasive garnet in the United States during 1906 amounted to 4,650 short tons, valued at $157,000, as against 5,050 short tons, valued at $148,095, in 1905; 3,854 short tons, valued at $117,581, in 1904; 3,950 short tons, valued at $132,500, in 1903; and 3,926 short tons, valued at $132,820, in 1902. The average price for the 1906 production is reported at $33.98 per ton.

"Grindstones.—The total value of all kinds of grindstones produced during 1906 was $744,894, as against $777,606 in 1905, $881,527 in 1904, $721,446 in 1903, and $667,431 in 1902. The production of 1904 was the largest on record for any year. It should be remembered, however, that the price which ranged from $15 to $18 per ton, has decreased to from $8 to $11 per ton, and that therefore the tonnage of grindstones used has correspondingly increased within the last few years.

"Infusorial earth and tripoli.—In 1906 the production of infusorial earth and tripoli amounted to 8,099 short tons, valued at $72,108, as against 10,977 short tons, valued at $64,637, in 1905; against 6,274 short tons, valued at $44,164, in 1904; 9,219 short tons, valued at $76,273, in 1903; and 5,665 short tons, valued at $53,244, in 1902.

"Millstones and buhrstones.—The value of the production of millstones and buhrstones in 1906 was $48,590, as against $37,974, in 1905, $37,338 in 1904, $52,552 in 1903, and $59,808 in 1902. From 1886 to 1894 there was a very large decrease—from $140,000 to $13,887—in the production of buhrstones. From 1894 to 1902 there was a gradual increase in the production, but there was a comparative decrease in 1903, 1904, 1905, and 1906.

"Oilstones and whetstones.—There was a continued increase in the commercial domestic production of oilstones and whetstones during 1906, the value rising from $188,985 in 1904 to $244,546 in 1905 and to $268,070 in 1906. The production was valued at $366,857 in 1903 and at $221,762 in 1902.

"Pumice.—The production of pumice amounted in 1906 to 12,200 short tons, valued at $16,750, as against 1,832 short tons, valued at $5,540 in 1905; 1,530 short tons, valued at $5,421, in 1904; 885 short tons, valued at $2,665, in 1903, and 700 short tons, valued at $2,750, in 1902.

"CHEMICAL MATERIALS.

"Arsenious oxide.—The domestic production of arsenious oxide (white arsenic) in 1906 was 1,474,000 pounds, valued at $63,460, as against 1,507,386 pounds, valued at $35,210, in 1905; 72,413 pounds, valued at $2,185, in 1904; 1,222,000 pounds, valued at $36,691, in 1903, and 2,706,000 pounds, valued at $81,180, in 1902.

"Borax.—The reported returns for 1906 gave an aggregate production of crude borax of 58,173 short tons, valued at $1,182,410, as against 46,334 short tons, valued at $1,019,154, in 1905; 45,647 short tons, valued at $698,810, in 1904, and 34,430 short tons, valued at $661,400, in 1903.

"Bromine.—The production of bromine in 1906, including the bromine contained in potassium bromide, amounted to 1,283,250 pounds, valued at $165,204, as compared with 1,192,758 pounds, valued at $178,914, in 1905; with 807,100 pounds, valued at $269,130, in 1904; with 598,500 pounds, valued at $167,580, in 1903, and with 513,893 pounds, valued at $128,472, in 1902.

"Fluorspar.—The total commercial production of fluorspar in 1906 was 40,796 short tons, valued at $244,025, as compared with 57,385 short tons, valued at $362,488, in 1905; with 36,452 short tons, valued at $234,755, in 1904; and with 42,523 short tons, valued at $213,617, in 1903. The prices of crude fluorspar in 1906 were reported as ranging from $3.60 to $6 per ton and the prices of ground fluorspar as ranging from $9 to $12 per ton.

"Gypsum.—The output of crude gypsum in 1906 was 1,540,585 short tons, valued in its first marketable condition at $3,837,975, as compared with 1,043,202 short tons, valued at $3,029,227, in 1905; with 940,917 short tons, valued at $2,784,325, in 1904; with 1,041,704 short tons, valued at $3,792,943, in 1903; and with 816,478 short tons, valued at $2,089,341, in 1902. The greatly increased production of late years is attributable to the largely increased use of wall plaster and of plaster of Paris in large modern buildings.

"Lithium minerals.—The production of lithium minerals in 1906 was 383 short tons, valued at $7,411, as against 79 short tons, valued at $1,412, in 1905; 577 short tons, valued at $5,155, in 1904; and 1,155 short tons, valued at $23,425, in 1903. The output in 1905 and 1906 came from California and South Dakota. There were no imports of lithium salts in either 1905 or 1906.

"Marls.—The production of marls in the United States in 1906 was 19,104 short tons, valued at $7,341; in 1905 it was 38,026 short tons, valued at $16,494; in 1904 it was 18,980 short tons, valued at $13,145, and in 1903 it was 34,211 short tons, valued at $22,521.

"Phosphate rock.—The total commercial production of phosphate rock reported to the Survey in 1906 amounted to 2,080,957 long tons, valued at $8,579,437, as compared with 1,947,190 long tons, valued at $6,763,403, in 1905; with 1,874,428 long tons, valued at $6,580,875, in 1904, and with 1,581,576 long tons, valued at $5,319,294, in 1903. The total quantity of phosphate rock reported as mined during 1906 was 2,001,394 long tons, as against 2,138,309 long tons mined in 1905 and 1,991,169 long tons mined in 1904.

"Salt.—The salt product includes salt in the form of brine used in large quantities for the manufacture of soda ash, sodium bicarbonate, caustic soda, and other sodium salts. The domestic production of salt in 1906 amounted to 28,172,350 barrels of 280 pounds, valued at $6,653,350, as compared with 23,966,122 barrels, valued at $6,095,922, in 1905; with 22,030,002 barrels, valued at $6,021,222, in 1904; with 18,968,089 barrels, valued at $5,286,988, in 1903, and with 23,849,231 barrels, valued at $5,668,636, in 1902.

"Sulphur and pyrite.—The domestic production of sulphur in 1906 was 294,153 long tons, valued at $5,006,678; the production of pyrite was 261,422 long tons, valued at $931,305. The combined production in 1906 of sulphur and pyrite for the manufacture of sulphuric acid amounted to 555,575 long tons, valued at $6,027,983, as compared with 434,677 long tons, valued at $4,645,052, in 1905; with 334,373 long tons, valued at $3,478,568, in 1904; with 233,127 long tons, valued at $1,109,818, in 1903, and with 207,874 long tons, valued at $947,089, in 1902.

"PIGMENTS."

"Barytes.—The production of crude barytes in 1906 was 50,231 short tons, valued at $160,367, as compared with 48,235 short tons, valued at $148,803, in 1905; with 65,727 short tons, valued at $174,958, in 1904; with 50,397 short tons, valued at $152,150, in 1903, and with 61,668 short tons, valued at $203,154, in 1902.

"Cobalt oxide.—There was no production of cobalt oxide reported in 1905 and 1906. In 1904 it was 22,000 pounds, valued at $42,600; in 1903 it was 120,000 pounds, valued at $228,000; in 1902 it was 3,730 pounds, valued at $6,714. All the cobalt oxide was obtained as a by-product in smelting lead ores at Mine La Motte, Missouri.

"Mineral paints.—The commercial production of mineral paints in 1906 amounted to 49,921 short tons, valued at $521,729, as compared with 56,599 short tons, valued at $724,933, in 1905; with 52,336 short tons, valued at $493,434, in 1904; with 56,262 short tons, valued at $500,922, in 1903; with 60,191 short tons, valued at $745,227, in 1902.

"Zinc white.—The production of zinc white in 1906 amounted to 74,680 short tons, valued at $5,999,375, as compared with 68,603 short tons, valued at $5,520,240, in 1905; with 63,363 short tons, valued at $4,808,482, in 1904; with 62,962 short tons, valued at $4,801,718, in 1903, and with 52,645 short tons, valued at $4,016,499, in 1902.

"MISCELLANEOUS."

"Asbestos.—The asbestos commercially produced in the United States in 1906 was obtained chiefly from deposits in Georgia, Virginia, and Wyoming, with small quantities from Arizona, California, and Massachusetts. The total commercial production was 1,695 short tons, valued at $28,565, as against 3,109 short tons, valued at $42,975, in 1905; against 1,480 short tons, valued at $25,740, in 1904, and 887 short tons, valued at $16,760, in 1903.

"Asphalt.—Under this title are included the various bitumens or hydrocarbons not discussed elsewhere under the heading 'Petroleum.' The commercial production in 1906 was 138,059 short tons, valued at $1,290,340, as against 115,267 short tons, valued at $758,153, in 1905; 108,572 short tons, valued at $879,836, in 1904; 101,255 short tons, valued at $1,005,446, in 1903, and 105,458 short tons, valued at $765,048, in 1902.

"Feldspar.—The production of feldspar in 1906 was 75,656 short tons, valued at $401,531, as against 35,419 short tons, valued at $226,157, in 1905; 45,188 short tons, valued at $266,326, in 1904; 41,891 short tons, valued at $256,733, in 1903, and 45,287 short tons, valued at $250,424, in 1902.

"Fibrous talc.—This variety of talc or soapstone occurs in but one locality in the United States—Gouverneur, St. Lawrence County, N. Y. It is used principally as makeweight in the manufacture of paper. In 1906 the production was 61,672 short tons, valued at $557,200, as against 56,500 short tons, valued at $445,000, in 1905; 64,005 short tons, valued at $507,400, in 1904; 60,230 short tons, valued at $421,600, in 1903, and 71,100 short tons, valued at $615,350, in 1902.

"Fuller's earth.—As reported to the Survey, the production of fuller's earth in 1906 was 32,040 short tons, valued at $265,400, as against 25,178 short tons, valued at $214,497, in 1905; 29,480 short tons, valued at $168,500, in 1904, and 20,693 short tons, valued at $190,277, in 1903. The imports in 1906 were valued at $108,695, as against $105,997, in 1905.

"Glass sand.—The production of glass sand in 1906 was 1,089,430 short tons, valued at $1,208,788, as against 1,060,334 short tons, valued at $1,107,730, in 1905; 858,719 short tons, valued at $796,492, in 1904, and 823,044 short tons, valued at $855,828, in 1903.

"Graphite.—The commercial production of crystalline graphite during 1906 amounted to 5,887,982 pounds, valued at $238,064, as compared with 6,036,567 pounds, valued at $237,572, in 1905; with 5,681,177 pounds, valued at $238,447, in 1904, and with 4,538,155 pounds, valued at $154,170, in 1903. The production of amorphous graphite in 1906 was 16,853 short tons, valued at $102,175, as compared with 21,953 short tons, valued at $80,639, in 1905; with 16,927 short tons, valued at $82,925, in 1904, and with 16,591 short tons, valued at $71,384, in 1903. The production of artificial graphite in 1906 was 5,074,757 pounds, valued at $337,204, the average price being 6.64 cents per pound, as compared with 4,591,550 pounds, valued at $313,980, the average price being 6.83 cents per pound in 1905; with 3,248, 000 pounds, valued at $217,790, the average price being 6.71 cents per pound, in 1904; with 2,620,000 pounds, valued at $178,670, in 1903, when the average price was 6.82 cents per pound, and with 2,358,828 pounds, valued at $110,700, in 1902, when the average price was 4.69 cents per pound.

"Magnesite.—The production of magnesite in the United States continues to be limited to California. During the year 1906 the commercial production reported was 7,805 short tons, valued at $23,415, as compared with 3,933 short tons, valued at $15,221, in 1905; with 2,850 short tons, valued at $9,298, in 1904, and with 3,744 short tons, valued at $10,595, in 1903.

"Mica.—The total production of mica in 1906 was 1,423,100 pounds of sheet mica, valued at $252,248, and 1,489 short tons of scrap mica, valued at $22,742, as against 924,875 pounds of sheet mica, valued at $160,732, and 1,126 short tons of scrap mica, valued at $17,856, in 1905; and 668,358 pounds of sheet mica, valued at $109,462, and 1,096 short tons of scrap mica, valued at $10,854, in 1904.

"Mineral waters.—The total production of mineral waters in 1906 was 51,407,668 gallons, valued at $8,559,650, as compared with 47,590,081 gallons, valued at $6,811,611, in 1905; with 50,723,500 gallons, valued at $7,198,450, in 1904; and with 51,242,757 gallons, valued at $9,041,078, in 1903.

"Monazite and zircon.—The production of monazite is confined exclusively to North Carolina and South Carolina, about five-sixths being obtained from the former State. In 1906 the production was 847,275 pounds of concentrates, valued at $152,560. In 1905 the production (including small quantities of zircon and columbite) amounted to 1,352,418 pounds, valued at $163,908, as compared with 745,999 pounds (including small quantities of zircon, columbite, and gadolinite), valued at $85,038, in 1904; with 865,000 pounds, valued at $65,200 (including 3,000 pounds of zircon, valued at $570), in 1903; and with 802,000 pounds of monazite, valued at $64,160, in 1902.

"Peat.—There was no commercial production of peat in 1906. Considerable experimental work has been done in the production of peat bricks for use as fuel under boilers, and in the practical tests of machine peat.

"Potassium salts.—There was no production of potassium salts in the United States in 1906; the imports amounted to 226,859,750 pounds, valued at $5,941,217.

"Precious stones.—The value of the gems and precious stones found in the United States in 1906 was reported as $208,000, as against $326,350 in 1905, $324,300 in 1904, $307,900 in 1903, and $328,450 in 1902. There has been a great advance in the lapidary industry in the United States since 1894. The cutting of our native gems has grown to the proportions of an industry.

"Quartz (flint).—The production of flint in 1906 was 66,697 short tons, valued at $243,012, as against 51,145 short tons, valued at $104,109, in 1905; 52,270 short tons, valued at $100,590, in 1904; 55,233 short tons, valued at $156,947, in 1903, and 36,365 short tons, valued at $144,209, in 1902.

"Sand and gravel.—The production of sand for molding, building, engine, furnace, and other purposes, and of gravel, reported in 1906, was 31,842,572 short tons, valued at $11,489,420, as against 22,144,633 short tons, valued at $10,115,915, in 1905, and 9,821,000 short tons, valued at $4,951,607, in 1904.

"Selenium.—There was a small production of selenium in 1906 in the electrolytic refining of copper.

"Talc and soapstone.—Exclusive of the production of fibrous talc from Gouverneur, N. Y., the production of talc and soapstone in 1906 amounted to 58,972 short tons, valued at $875,356 as compared with 40,134 short tons, valued at $637,062, in 1905; with 27,184 short tons, valued at $433,331, in 1904; with 26,671 short tons, valued at $418,460, in 1903; and with 26,854 short tons, valued at $525,157, in 1902.

"Cadmium.—Cadmium is being produced by the Graselli Chemical Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, and the product is shipped to Germany. It is noteworthy that cadmium is now exported from the United States, rather than imported, as has heretofore been the case.

No information is at hand as to the source of the ores nor as to the process used in reducing the metal.

From the tabular statement headed 'Mineral products of the United States in 1905 and 1906,' including also the tables for the years 1880 to 1906, all unnecessary duplication has been excluded. The manufactured coke product, amounting in 1906 to 36,401,217 short tons and valued at $91,608,034, is excluded, as the quantity and value of the coal used in its manufacture are included in the statistics of coal production. Similarly, white lead, red lead, sublimed lead, zinc lead, litharge, and orange mineral, whose average aggregate value for the last ten years has largely exceeded $10,000,000, are not given in the table, the base from which they are made being included in the output of pig lead. Zinc white or zinc oxide, on the other hand, made directly from the ores and consequently not included in spelter production, is tabulated. The production of pig iron and its value are given in the table as the best means of presenting the statistics of the production of iron in the first marketable condition, the value of iron ores being excluded. Similarly, the value of the products of the clay industries is given as being the first marketable condition of the greater part of the clay produced, although the production and value of the clay mined and sold in the raw state by clay miners to manufacturers of clay are elsewhere shown separately, but are not included in the tabular statement, in order to avoid duplication.

"In the second large tabular statement, however, under the heading 'Output and value, by States and Territories, of mineral products of the United States in the calendar years 1905 and 1906,' raw clay, iron ores, lead paints, and the coal products are included under the respective producing States.

"It will be seen that the two tabular statements differ materially. They both give the value of the mineral products in the years 1905 and 1906; but the first gives the net value of the mineral products of the whole country in their first marketable form and the second gives the value of these products and, in addition, the value of some of their raw materials or derivatives in their first marketable condition. The first table avoids duplication; the second does not.

"The figures for gold and silver for 1905 and 1906 in the first table are the official figures agreed upon by the United States Geological Survey and the Director of the Mint."

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the gentleman from Minnesota use some time.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, how much time remains to the other side?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has three minutes, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has five minutes, and the gentleman from Minnesota has five minutes. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this bill is of so much importance to the mining interests of the United States and of so much importance to the people that I individually represent that I do not feel that I would properly represent them if I did not take this occasion to say how heartily I am in favor of the bill. I do not think that it needs an argument for us to pass this bill. We have already, as has been said heretofore, established a Department of Agriculture; we have established a Department of Manufactures, and there is no reason in the world why we should not extend the same equal fair treatment to those people who are engaged in the mining business in this country. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Two minutes.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota seems to think that the establishment of such a bureau as here proposed is wholly in the interest of the operators of mines and not in the interest of those who work in the mines. Mr. Speaker, this bill is intended to develop mining, make the lives of miners more safe, and the property in mines more secure. The bill is also intended to develop a scientific knowledge of mining, so that they will be able to determine the best, safest, and most economical means of mining. A few years ago aluminum was considered a very scarce mineral in this country, and yet we find that to-day it is very cheap. We send across the ocean to get what radium we use, and its use is limited to scientific appliances only and has not yet passed to the economic. At this time we do not produce any, but who knows, Mr. Speaker, but what in a few years under the direction of such a bureau as this that this country may produce these precious metals without having to send our money across the water to get them.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Members of this House feel the importance and the people are ready to indorse their action in doing everything possible for the safety of those who work in the mines. We have considered it of enough importance to make a Cabinet officer of the gentleman who presides over the Department of Agriculture. And yet mining, that comes next to that in importance, that deals with products that come out of the ground, we have given very little attention.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] said a moment ago that my statement was that, in the provision carried in the legislative bill and in the sundry civil bill for the investigation of the causes of mine explosions and for the testing of lignite and other fuels, the purpose of this bill has been accomplished. That statement, Mr. Speaker, is not entirely accurate. I said that so far as the safety of the miners was concerned, and so far as it is necessary to test the relative heat units of coal produced by private interests is concerned, these two appropriations do meet the requirements of this bill. But this bill goes away beyond this purpose. I called attention a moment ago to the fact that this bill goes far beyond anything that has ever been proposed in the past. We propose now to go into the States. For what purpose? For the purpose of fostering local industry, for the purpose of promoting and developing industries in which the citizens and corporations of States are alone interested.

The gentleman says this is one of the great basic industries of the country, the industry of mining. That I concede. But under the operations of this bill how many States will derive any benefit? It will be the coal-bearing States. There is no demand from the precious-metal States for this legislation; there is no demand from the State of Minnesota, that has the greatest iron mines of any State in the Union; there is no demand from the State of Michigan, where the great copper mines are located. This whole demand comes from the coal-bearing States, and is supported only by the fact that in these coal mines lives are destroyed by accident and by explosion the cause of which is unknown, and to ascertain that cause, if possible, we have authorized a full investigation at this session, at an expense of $150,000.

Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HACKNEY]?

Mr. TAWNEY. I can not yield. Now, Mr. Speaker, that being so, this is not a bill for the benefit of the entire United States. It is limited only to those States in which coal mining is carried on. Its effect will be limited to those States exclusively.

Why, Mr. Speaker, is it necessary for the Congress of the United States to create a great bureau here at the seat of government, and to provide that bureau with the necessary machinery for the purpose of fostering and promoting the interests of the coal trust of the United States? For that is what it means. Ah, Mr. Speaker, if we can justify this legislation, then we can justify legislation in the interest of any private industry, I care not what it is or how much the expense. It is the corporations owning the coal mines of the country that are to be the beneficiaries of this legislation, and not the men who work in the mines.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. While it is true we can not compel the coal men in the States to yield to Federal supervision, can not we go into public lands and perfect the mines there and find out all the trouble in mining and let the States profit by that?

Mr. TAWNEY. Ample opportunity, as I said to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] a moment ago, exists for that, as well as ample appropriation for that purpose. We are classifying the coal lands, and if the Government of the United States wants to go into the business of mining on its own territory for the purpose of developing the best methods of coal mining that might be entirely within the functions of the Government, and we would not be infringing upon the rights of any State when we attempted that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Private individuals are mining in all of our Territories. Can not we go there and compel them to submit, start at the top and go to the bottom, and get a perfect mining system?

Mr. TAWNEY. Whether we can or not, if the mine is owned by a private individual, I shall not attempt to discuss. I am trying to impress upon the House the fact that we are called upon to do something that we know absolutely nothing about so far as the ultimate effect will be; something that, if it benefits anyone, will benefit only the wealthy coal corporations of the country.

Mr. NICHOLLS. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. TAWNEY. There is no man on the Committee on Mines and Mining who has attempted to say to what extent it will be necessary to employ clerks and other employees to carry out the provisions of this law, or the amount of money that will be necessary; and I hope the bill will be voted down.

Mr. HUFF. I yield one minute of my time to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE].

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, it is very evident that this bill is going to pass, and I have simply taken the floor to answer one statement made by the gentleman from Minnesota

[Mr. TAWNEY]. The gentleman from Minnesota says that this legislation is demanded only by the coal interests of the country and that no precious-mining State in the Union is asking for its passage. I desire to say to the gentleman from Minnesota that I represent not only a coal-mining State, but the greatest precious-mining State in the Union, and the State of Colorado, by its Representatives in this body, is urging and insisting upon this legislation. [Applause.] Every single precious-mining State in the Union has been represented upon the floor of this House this afternoon asking for this legislation—California, Nevada, Idaho, Utah, Montana, and all the other precious-mining States of the Union.

Mr. TAWNEY. All of them are coal-bearing States, too.

Mr. RONYNGE. I can not yield. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that the American Mining Congress, composed almost entirely of representatives from the precious-mining States, have for years been asking for this legislation. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Speaker, the very purpose of this mines and mining bureau is to provide the plan to handle this $150,000 of money. It is not the expectation that there will be asked for any additional appropriation to carry into force and operation this proposition. The money needed is provided in said amount. And, therefore, my friend from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is on the wrong road in objecting to this. We want a mines and mining bureau that can handle this proposition in a scientific way. I want, also, to say that not only the coal-mining industries, but all of the mining industries everywhere, have been asking for this bureau to be established under the Government. They were disappointed when the Department of Commerce and Labor was created that there was not in connection with that, along with the Bureau of Corporations, a bureau of mines and mining. The coal-mining interests are certainly in favor of the proposition and have requested it, and I am interested in it especially on their account.

This is the best single move that has ever been made in behalf of labor. Next to agriculture in importance, upon which we spend twelve millions a year, is the establishment of a distinctive miners' bureau in the great field of the toiler. For many a year agriculture languished without governmental consideration. Years ago, after many a fruitless effort, a Bureau of Agriculture was established by Congress, and its head was designated by the title of Commissioner of Agriculture. The Bureau grew in a few years into such usefulness that it became and is a great Department of the Government, not second to any of the Departments in importance.

No one would do without it in our scheme of cooperative industry.

The substance of the bill is as follows:

That there is hereby established in the Department of the Interior a Bureau, to be called the Bureau of Mines, and a Commissioner of said Bureau, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall receive a salary of $8,000 per annum; and there shall also be in the said Bureau such clerks, agents, experts, and other employees as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Sec. 2. That it shall be the province and duty of said Bureau and its Commissioner, under the direction of the Secretary of said Department, to foster, promote, and develop the mining industries of the United States; to make diligent investigation of the methods of mining, the safety of miners, the possible improvement of conditions under which mining operations are carried on, the treatment of ores, the use of explosives and electricity, the prevention of accidents, the values of mineral products and markets for the same, and of other matters pertinent to said industries, and from time to time to make such public reports of the work, investigations, and information obtained as the Secretary of said Department may direct, with the recommendations of such Bureau.

Sec. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall provide the said Bureau with furnished offices within the city of Washington, with such books, records, stationery, and appliances, and such assistants, clerks, stenographers, typewriters, and other employees as may be necessary for the proper discharge of the duties imposed by this act upon such Bureau, fixing the compensation of such clerks and employees within appropriations made for that purpose.

The Director of the Geological Survey has called emphatic attention to an important feature of the proposed Bureau in his letter to the Secretary of the Interior of January 11, 1908, which is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1908.

Sir: In connection with the suggestion that I made to you Thursday that Federal legislation might be enacted sometime to control the purity of explosives, as articles of interstate commerce, I have the honor to submit the following data, prepared by the explosives expert in the technologic branch:

The proper use of explosives is recognized as being a factor of the greatest importance in regard to safety in mines, and it is very probable that of that class of accidents in mining which are believed to be preventable those due to the unwise or improper use of explosives and to the use of improper kinds of explosives make up by far the largest proportion.

Owing to recent accidents "safety explosives" are being more largely tried in the mines of the United States than has been the case at any previous time, and it is therefore a matter of importance that those desiring explosives of this class, and who are willing to pay the higher price charged for this class of goods, should not be misled by the improper use of the name "safety powder," etc., on goods which are certainly not of that character. For example, an explosive known and advertised as a "flameless" blasting powder has been found, on analysis by this Department to be simply common black powder in which ordinary bituminous coal has been substituted for the charcoal ordinarily employed. This explosive is not only not flameless, but it is undoubtedly a more dangerous material than ordinary black powder, and the use of the term "flameless" in such a case as this is misleading and highly dangerous.

A sample of explosive taken from the Whipple mine, West Virginia (in which an accident in May of last year killed fifteen men), was found upon analysis to be a dynamite of 50 per cent nitroglycerin content, a grade of material most unsuited for coal-mine operations and the use of which would be forbidden in any other country.

Variations in the quality of explosives, from the strength named upon the label, have been found to be rather common in many of the explosives examined, and it is further a matter of knowledge that manufacturers of explosives have at times changed the composition of an explosive while still selling it under the former name. This introduces a chance of extreme danger, since if the former explosive mixture was known by tests to be safe for a given purpose, it might readily happen that the latter composition, quite different and yet sold to the purchaser by the same name, would prove dangerous.

The manufacture, sale, and use of explosives in foreign countries is controlled by law, and explosives are allowed to be made and sold only when they are in accordance with regulations laid down. When the composition of an explosive is changed it is required that the designating term be changed. It is further provided that only those explosives the safety of which has been shown by tests in the explosive gallery in the presence of fire damp should be used in gaseous mines.

It has been expected that the general investigation of the explosives used in mining will be taken up by the technologic branch of the Survey as soon as the proper authority and equipment can be provided for that purpose, as it has been realized that investigations of this kind are of the first importance as a means of preventing a large class of mine accidents. Examination of the explosives used by the Isthmian Canal Commission and the Reclamation Service has shown large variation in the composition of the same brand of dynamite manufactured by the same companies and, as stated above, the examination of certain "flameless" powders have shown them to be entirely unsafe. Furthermore, in recent conferences with large coal operators they have reported such large variations in the behavior of so-called "safety explosives" as to indicate large variations in their quality. The analysis of powder for the Isthmian Canal Commission has resulted in several cargoes of material being found to be of low grade, and the amounts refunded to the Government on these shipments has amounted during the past three months to several thousand dollars.

It is also evident from many statements which have been made to me by practical mining men that they would welcome any legislation that would compel the manufacturers to properly label their products. While I believe that it would be unwise to enact any legislation before additional investigations have been conducted, I think it is well for the Department to have in mind the possibility of controlling the purity of mining explosives in the way suggested, and, if appropriations are available, to conduct certain investigations with this end in view.

Respectfully submitted,

GEO. OTIS SMITH.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

The miners of coal are particularly interested in the proposed Bureau, for, at the very best, coal mining is a hazardous occupation. The coal miner takes his very life in his hands when he goes down into the mine to pursue his vocation. Coal-mine operators desire to make mining safe, and it is generally faulty knowledge of what makes it safe if they fail. The great dangers in the mining business are not sufficiently understood to enable due protection to life and property.

Everybody should be interested in preserving and protecting life.

This Congress ought to be interested in it. The operators and the miners alike favor the creation of this Bureau. In the hearings in the Committee on Mines and Mining they appeared in great numbers to plead for it. John Mitchell expresses his interest in the matter by a telegram and letter to me, and there is also an urgent telegram to the committee, which I will submit.

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Indianapolis, Ind., March 4, 1908.

Hon. JOHN C. CHANEY,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Replying further to your telegram dated March 3, I regret to say that the condition of my health and the situation in the bituminous coal industry make it impossible for me to leave Indianapolis in the near future.

For your information I inclose herein copy of telegram sent by the recent joint conference of miners and operators to the chairmen of the Senate and House Committees on Mines and Mining. I trust that the steps taken will go to show the strong desire of the miners and operators of the country to see provision made for the investigation of mine disasters.

Thanking you for keeping me advised concerning the progress of affairs, I am, with respect,

Yours, truly,

JOHN MITCHELL,

President United Mine Workers of America.

CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The following motion was adopted unanimously by conference of operators and miners of central competitive coal field:
"That we, the representatives of the operators and miners of western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, in joint conference assembled, indorse the creation of a Bureau of Mining Technology, as proposed by bill introduced in Congress, and urge upon Congress to appropriate the sum of $200,000 for that purpose."

The Bureau is in line with the recommendations of the President.

Mr. Carnegie, always interested in what is useful to his fellow-men, recommends the Bureau in his letter to the late Denver convention.

The letter reads:

NEW YORK, January 14, 1908.

VICTOR C. ALDERSON, Esq.,
Secretary American Mining Congress, Denver, Colo.

DEAR MR. ALDERSON: Yours of January 8 received. I was delighted when I read the President's recommendation that a Bureau of Mines be established. Within the past month we have had two startling illustrations in western Pennsylvania alone as proofs of its necessity. It is really a scandal that our country is so far behind all others in insuring the safety of the miner.

I shall take pleasure in doing anything that I can to assist in the work of pressing Congress to give this subject immediate and favorable consideration.

If it occurs to you that I can be of assistance, pray command me. I have the matter very deeply at heart.

Very truly, yours,

ANDREW CARNEGIE.

The American Mining Congress passed the following resolution in regard to it:

Resolved, That the American Mining Congress urge the establishment under the Department of the Interior at the approaching session of Congress of an independent bureau of mines and engineering investigation, with ample authority and funds for—

(a) The investigation of and inquiry into the nature and extent of the quarry industries; the cost, methods, and processes employed in the mining, handling, transportation, treating, and using of mineral products in the United States, its Territories, and insular possessions, and recommending to Congress the legislation appropriate thereto, with the view of benefiting these industries by improving mining conditions, developing more efficient methods, and preventing mine and quarry accidents, as well as unnecessary waste, and of securing thereby the wise utilization and conservation of our fuels and other mineral resources.

(b) Investigation in foreign countries concerning the mining, handling, treating, and using of fuels and other mineral products, with a view to benefiting American industries.

(c) The investigation of the engineering problem of the Government, the testing of minerals belonging to or for the use of the Government, and the making at cost of similar tests and investigations for State and municipal governments and persons engaged in mining and engineering pursuits, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

(d) The cooperation with the Geological Survey in determining the value of the mineral resources in the United States; and with the General Land Office, the Forest Service, and the Geological Survey, in the disposition and management of the mineral lands belonging to the Federal Government.

(e) The publication in such form as to be readily available of the information obtained from these investigations and inquiries, the wide and prompt distribution of these publications among the mining men of the country, and the cooperation of Government experts in further educational work by public addresses in mining camps and at the meetings of men associated with mining and quarrying industries, with a view to the prevention of accidents and of waste, and the adoption of more efficient means.

I hereby certify that the above is an exact copy of the resolution passed by the tenth annual session of the American Mining Congress held in Joplin, Mo., November 11-16, 1907.

The Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress passed upon the question after this fashion:

HEADQUARTERS, CONVENTION HALL,
Muskogee, Okla., November 22, 1907.

At the eighteenth annual session of the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress, held in this city November 19-22, 1907, the following was passed:

"Whereas the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress has for many years been urging the establishment of a national Department of Mines and Mining, and it none the less now believes that this great basal industry of the country deserves and needs such public recognition, although it realizes that the time is not now opportune for the accomplishment of this purpose; and

"Whereas the magnitude and increasing complexity of the industry, the increasing difficulties which stand in the way of the progress of the individual miner, the increasing extent and destructiveness of both life and property by mining accidents, and the enormous waste in the mining and utilization of our mineral resources all make imperative prompt action by the Federal Government in the establishment of a well-equipped Bureau of Mines, which shall devote itself vigorously to the betterment of these conditions: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress, in its eighteenth session assembled, urges upon the Congress of the United States at its coming session the establishment, under the Department of the Interior, of an independent bureau of mines and engineering investigation, with ample authority and funds for the investigation of and inquiry into the nature and extent of the mine and quarry industries, the cost, methods, and processes employed in the mining, handling, transportation, treating, and using of mineral products in the United States, its Territories, and insular possessions, and recommending to Congress the legislation appropriate thereto, with the view of benefiting these industries by improving mining conditions, developing more efficient methods, and preventing mine and quarry accidents, as well as unnecessary waste, and of securing thereby the wise utilization and conservation of our fuels and other mineral resources.

"Investigation in foreign countries concerning the mining, handling, treating, and using of fuels and other mineral resources.

"The investigation of the engineering problems of the Government, the testing of materials belonging to or for use of the Government, and the making at cost of similar tests and investigations for State and municipal governments and persons engaged in mining and engineering pursuits under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

"The cooperation with the Geological Survey in determining the value of the mineral resources in the United States, and with the General Land Office, the Forest Service, and the Geological Survey in the disposition and management of the mineral lands belonging to the Federal Government.

"The publication in such form as to be readily available of the information obtained from these investigations and inquiries, the wide and prompt distribution of these publications among the mining men of the country, and the cooperation of Government experts in further educational work by public addresses in mining camps, and at the meetings of men associated with mine and quarrying industries, with a view to the prevention of accidents and of waste, and the adoption of more efficient methods."

Hon. Thomas F. Walsh, who has "grown up" in the mining world, and whose experience and practical knowledge is extensive, speaks of the subject as follows:

To the honorable Chairman and Members of the House Committee on Mines and Mining.

GENTLEMEN: In the hearings before your honorable committee on the question of the establishment of a Bureau of Mines, the fields of coal mining, iron mining, and precious-metal mining were well and ably covered by representatives of these respective industries, and the great benefits that a Bureau of Mines would confer upon them were pointed out in an able and intelligent manner. However, a great field of undeveloped mineral wealth, to which I beg to call your attention, was scarcely touched upon. I refer to the development and production of what is classed as the rarer minerals, such as radium, platinum, vanadium, uranium, tungsten, columbite, and others, all of which are much needed in our manufacturing and chemical industries.

Owing to a lack of knowledge of their properties and treatment, we are to-day producing practically none in America, but import them in large quantities from Europe at an expense of millions of dollars. Incredible as it seems, no effort has been or is being made to produce these valuable commodities of commerce. I believe we have them in paying quantities in the vast area of the mineralized portions of our country. More knowledge on this subject will prove that these little-known minerals are not as rare as they are supposed to be. Aluminum when first used was thought to be a scarce metal, yet when energetic efforts were directed toward its production it was found in quantities and in the common clays. I believe the same relative results will follow a thorough search for the rarer minerals. The proposed Bureau, in its educational work in this particular line—by disseminating directly through the schools of mining, as well as through the public press, a knowledge as to how to recognize and find those minerals and how to treat and market them when found—would give such an impetus to its development and production as would probably result in an output of a new wealth greater than that of the precious minerals of to-day.

To give some idea of the great value of those minerals, I will, for illustration, take vanadium, one of the rarer of the economic class. As an alloy in the making of the highest grade of steel, vanadium is the best ever discovered. It is the most prized ingredient the steel manufacturers can have. If it could be mined and sold at a reasonable price, our steel makers would gladly buy all that could be produced. As it is now, when they need it they have to import it from Europe and pay $5 per pound, or $10,000 per ton. The same is in a measure true of the other rarer minerals. There is a pressing and constant demand for them, but none is produced because it is a sphere of our mining activities that principally for the want of knowledge on the subject we have heretofore ignored, content to pay a great tribute to other nations for those things which we have at home.

Take another illustration—radium, the rarest of all minerals. Because of the small amount produced it has not yet passed from the scientific and physical to the economic. If we want an atom of it we must beg for it from the Austrian Government. Notwithstanding the small mineral area of that country, it has, because of its research work, a monopoly on it and its associated mineral, uranium. The production of the other rarer minerals will undoubtedly result in the production of radium, for we have reason to believe they go together. The dream of the ages has been the finding of perpetual motion. We seem to have it in radium. The proposed mining Bureau, without interfering with its more utilitarian duties, can direct and foster the production of this most valuable mineral; it can investigate its properties and potentialities and, perhaps, apply it to the service of humanity in ways that will be as great in their benefits as radium is enduring.

It may be asked, can those rarer minerals be found in our country? I have the best of reasons for believing they can. Some prospecting recently made in this direction, in Colorado, promises good results. I have been over the mining districts of Bohemia, Austria, where many of them, especially uranium and radium, have been found. I have been over every mineralized State of our Union. So far as I could see we have the same conditions, the same character and class of base minerals in which the rare ones are found. We have a mineralized area far greater than that of Europe, and in which we have found every mineral that we have heretofore searched for. The fact that we have not found certain ores is no evidence that they do not exist, but rather a proof that we have not looked for them. If it should be ascertained that, in accordance with our previous knowledge of the minerals and with their well-known affinity for each other, the rarer ones will be found associated with the baser ones in iron, zinc, copper and lead sulphides, then we are apt to find them in broad areas and in many unsuspected places—in the sulphide deposits of Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia, Arkansas, and Missouri, as well as in the great mining States of the West.

An opinion prevailed that they would not be found in sulphides. But last year I had a piece of sulphide ore tested for radio activity and received a report that it possessed it in as strong a degree as the pitchblend ore of Bohemia, which was conclusive proof of the presence of both uranium and radium.

Throughout our mining districts there are billions of tons of low-grade sulphide mineral on the dumps of mines awaiting the application of science to bring them into use. Whilst it can not be expected that all of these ores carry the rarer minerals, if they are found in a fraction of them the wealth they can be made to yield will be incalculable.

It may seem strange that this field of wealth should remain so long untouched, yet the explanation is simple. In mining, as in other things, we followed the line of least resistance, the course that with the simplest efforts led to the quickest and most direct results in the extraction and treatment of the ores—first, the rocker, then the sluice box, then the mill and smelter. We mined only the ores we could treat with these methods. If we noticed some strange mineral, which we often did, we either did not give it a thought or wished it well away because of its refractory influences in the treatment of the minerals we were after. This, as stated, was due to a want of knowledge of those rarer minerals and a consequent want of market for them, and this is why we are not producing any of them to-day, but instead paying out millions annually to Europe because we must have them. The importations will give but a faint idea of their enormous value to us, for if we were producing them ourselves our own industries would use a hundred times more than they do now. Their development and extraction will create a new industry that in turn will create new homes, new occupations, and new wealth for our own people. A great interest is awakening on this subject. Since I had the honor of addressing your committee I have had over a dozen letters asking for information and advice on every feature of the question. They are all of the same tenor. I will quote an extract from one, written from the southwest portion of New Mexico by a mining engineer:

"I inclose a newspaper clipping and trust the bill referred to—the bill creating the Bureau of Mines—will soon become a law. It is one of the most needed enactments of the present day. I believe that radium and several other of the rarer minerals exist in this locality, but so little is known about them that the ordinary individual does not even know how they occur, much less how to extract nor where to get them treated. Please give me such information on the subject as will help me to look for and develop these ores."

The great national industry of mining is worthy of the same governmental encouragement and protection that is given the other industries, especially in the saving of life. The coal miner takes his life in his hands and toils all day in the darkened dusty caverns of the coal mines, looking forward with pleasure to the hour that will reunite him to his little family. It is only too often he is brought back in the cold stillness of death, the victim of an explosion, in most cases brought about by some hidden force of nature which is not yet understood. Surely the lives of the vast army of these brave toilers should be the serious concern of the National Government.

The prospector, who braves the terrors of the snowy avalanche, climbs over precipitous rocks in high altitudes, in search of nature's treasures, is as much deserving of the nation's help as is his brother on the safe and tranquil farm.

Mining in all of its branches is worthy of recognition and help from our General Government, for the highest humanitarian and most important economic reasons. This it has not yet received. The time has come when the same beneficent helping hand that is given to agriculture should be extended to the more complicated and difficult industry of mining, for one is at least as necessary to the nation's prosperity as the other.

It has been asked under what head should the new bureau be placed? I believe that it should be placed in the Department of the Interior and be at least the coequal of all other bureaus. It should be under the direct control of the Secretary of the Interior. It should be composed of the ablest experts that could be secured, men fully informed upon every feature of operative mining and who could advise with the Secretary upon the many perplexing questions relating to mineral interests and mineral lands.

The work of this Mining Bureau will be of the highest technical and scientific character. In no department of our Government will work of more importance be undertaken nor more beneficial and enduring results be accomplished. Through its well-equipped laboratories and trained experts it will help to solve the perplexing problems now confronting and baffling the mine operators of our land; to stop the deplorable loss of human life now going sadly on, and to show us how to conserve and economize our mineral resources and guide and lead us to the development of greater wealth for the nation's enrichment. Year by year it will grow in importance and achievement, and will be regarded with just confidence and pride by every American citizen.

I beg to remain, respectfully, yours,

THOMAS F. WALSH.

The protection of life, while a most important part of the work of the proposed bureau, is by no means the only necessity for this bureau.

The conservation of the mining resources of the country is a thing of great importance to the Government. A government can be great only when its people are great. Its people can be great only when the country's resources are great, and when the country's resources are wasting there should be advisory direction. This the bureau may do.

The resources of the country are the storehouses of labor. From these storehouses come the wealth, the prosperity, and the happiness of the millions composing the great Republic, and this Bureau will magnify these resources by saving them.

When this Bureau is once in action, we shall wonder why we did without it so long. I trust this bill will become a law at the present session, now that appropriation has been made to establish and equip it.

Mr. HUFF. I now yield one minute of my time to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. HALL].

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, in the short time allotted to me it would be impossible to do anything but give a brief outline of my views upon this subject as they were derived from the hearings before the Mining Committee. The hearings cover a large number of pages of testimony, and it would be, indeed, very instructive if every Member of this House could read those hearings and see with what unanimity and uniformity all interests joined in the request for the establishment of this important Bureau. I can assure the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that his fears are ungrounded as to there being any ulterior motive behind this movement for the establishment of this Bureau.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT]. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I have very little to say at the present time about this bill. It was unanimously reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining, who gave the bill very careful consideration, went thoroughly into the subject, consulted all the various mining industries and the representatives of the laboring classes of the United States. I believe the action of this committee is entitled to proper consideration and that the bill should pass. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. All time has expired. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 222, nays 20, answered "present" 7, not voting 120, as follows:

Mr. FAIRCHILD with Mr. PATTERSON.

For the balance of the day:

Mr. GILHAM with Mr. LAMB.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20063) making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17506) to amend an act entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues," approved June 10, 1890, as amended by the act entitled "An act to provide revenues for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 21927. An act to reimburse certain Departments of the Government for expenses incurred incident to the recent fire in Chelsea, Mass., and for other purposes; and

H. R. 21884. An act granting an annuity to Jennie Carroll and to Mabel H. Lazear.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 21897. An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. R. 92. Joint resolution to create a commission to be called the "National Monetary Commission;" and

S. R. 93. Joint resolution to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of May, 1908, on the day of adjournment of the present session of Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 176. Joint resolution providing for the printing of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18347) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 17874. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and other wars and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 16882. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes;

H. R. 21884. An act granting an annuity to Jennie Carroll and to Mabel H. Lazear;

H. R. 21927. An act to reimburse certain Departments of the Government for expenses incurred incident to the recent fire in Chelsea, Mass., and for other purposes; and

S. 4639. An act to provide for participation by the United States in an international exposition to be held at Tokyo, Japan, in 1912.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on May 20, 1908, they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 20345. An act making appropriation for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909;

H. R. 14382. An act to establish a United States court at Jackson, in the eastern district of Kentucky; and

H. R. 1062. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows of such soldiers and sailors.

RETURN OF BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request from the Senate, which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 16743) for the removal of the restrictions on alienation of lands of allottees of the Quapaw Agency, Okla., and the sale of all tribal lands, school, agency, or other buildings on any of the reservations within the jurisdiction of such agency, and for other purposes.

PENSIONS DUE TO INMATES OF NAVAL HOMES.

By unanimous consent, reference of the bill (S. 5950), to provide for the disposition of pensions due inmates in the Naval Home was changed from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GRIGGS, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. ALLEN, indefinitely, on account of important business.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 21897) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Upon that motion, the bill having been read, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, a second is ordered, and the gentleman from Missouri is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi to twenty minutes.

Mr. BARTHOLOMT. Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is the desire of the House to send this bill to conference as soon as possible, and I therefore do not wish to occupy any time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with my usual custom of expediting the public business and to encourage legislation, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 251, answered "present" 8, not voting 128, as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BARTHOLOMT, Mr. BURLEIGH, and Mr. BRANTLEY.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution and bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. R. 92. Joint resolution to create a commission to be called the "National Monetary Commission"—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

S. 1508. An act granting an increase of pension to Lydia P. Wint—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 6231. An act granting a pension to Lilla May Pavy—to the Committee on Pensions.

PRINTING AND BINDING FOR COMMITTEE ON RAILWAYS AND CANALS.

By unanimous consent, granted to Mr. DAVIDSON, the Committee on Railways and Canals was granted leave to have such printing and binding done as may be necessary for the committee in the transaction of its business.

OBSTRUCTIONS TO NAVIGATION, KEY WEST HARBOR, FLORIDA.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 22009) authorizing the Secretary of War to remove certain obstructions to navigation from the main ship channel, Key West Harbor, Florida, and for other purposes, and pass the same, which bill I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to remove, or cause to be removed, certain reefs from the main ship channel, Key West Harbor, Florida, mentioned in a report made by Lieut. L. H. Beach to the Secretary of War on February 1, 1908, and the sum of $5,000 of the amount heretofore appropriated for improving the harbor at Key West and entrance thereto under the river and harbor act approved March 2, 1907, or so much of said sum of $5,000 as may be necessary, is hereby made available for such purpose.

SEC. 2. That the unexpended balance of the amount heretofore appropriated for the improvement of Chicago Harbor, or so much thereof as may be deemed advisable, be, and the same is hereby, made available, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, for expenditure on the existing project for the Chicago River.

SEC. 3. That so much as may be necessary of the amount heretofore appropriated, or authorized to be appropriated, for the maintenance of the South Pass of the Mississippi River, or for examinations and surveys of the South Pass of the Mississippi River, or for the improvement of the Southwest Pass of the Mississippi River, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, be used in dredging shoals in the said river between Cubits Gap and the Head of the Passes whenever it may become necessary to secure a depth of channel through said shoals of 35 feet, with a practical width.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, apply the whole or any part of the unexpended balance of the amount heretofore appropriated for the improvement of the Duluth-Superior Harbor, Minnesota, to dredging inside the Duluth entrance thereto, as recommended in House Document No. 221, Sixtieth Congress, first session.

SEC. 5. That the provision in the river and harbor act approved March 2, 1907, relating to the construction of the Sandy Lake Reservoir Dam, Minnesota, is hereby amended by striking out the words "without a lock for steamboats."

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to expend and to enter into a contract or contracts for the expenditure of so much as may be necessary of the amount heretofore appropriated, or authorized to be appropriated, for the improvement of the harbor at Milwaukee, Wis., for the improvement of the Kinnickinnick River, or any part thereof inside the harbor, as heretofore provided by law, whenever and as soon as the city of Milwaukee shall have complied with the provisions set forth in House Document No. 120, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, and authorized by the river and harbor act approved March 3, 1905, and as amended by the act entitled "An act to amend the river and harbor act of March 3, 1905," approved June 30, 1906, so far as said provisions apply to the improvement of said Kinnickinnick River or any part thereof.

SEC. 7. That the whole or any part of the amount heretofore authorized to be appropriated for the construction of a dredge for Mobile Harbor, Alabama, with the exception of $5,000 for the preparation of plans for said dredge, may be used for dredging said harbor, and the Secretary of War, in his discretion, may enter into a contract or contracts for the performance of the work.

Sec. 8. That to make effective the provision in the river and harbor act approved March 2, 1907, for a survey of the Neversink River, New York, with a view to the removal of bars and other obstructions at and near its mouth, the scope of such survey be enlarged so as to include the Delaware River at and near the mouth of the Neversink River.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule a second is ordered. The gentleman from Massachusetts is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Florida to twenty minutes.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House, I think I can explain this bill in a very few moments. The river and harbor act which was approved March 2, 1907, authorized the expenditure of more than $86,000,000 for the improvement of our rivers and harbors. It was the largest river and harbor bill in our history. When this Congress convened on the first Monday of last December there was a strong demand from many of its Members for a river and harbor bill at this session. A river and harbor congress was held in Washington, attended by hundreds of delegates from all over the country. That congress passed a resolution urging the Congress of the United States to pass a river and harbor bill at this session. In view, however, of the great authorization made less than a year before, and mindful of the necessity of strict economy in appropriation and expenditure, your committee felt that it would not be justified in reporting a general river and harbor appropriation bill at this session.

That policy has been adhered to. No river and harbor bill has been reported; no new surveys have been ordered; no bills calling for appropriations have been considered. However, certain bills asking that appropriations already made or authorized be expended in accordance with recent recommendations of the War Department have been considered favorably. The bill which is now before the House contains eight administrative features, permitting diversions of former appropriations and authorizing modifications of existing projects. It is all in harmony with the recommendation of the Secretary of War.

Such diversions and modifications are imperatively demanded in the interest of navigation. The bill is purely administrative and makes no appropriation whatever. The provisions apply to appropriations formerly made for Key West Harbor, Florida; Chicago Harbor; the South Pass and Southwest Pass of the Mississippi River; the Duluth-Superior Harbor; Sandy Lake Reservoir Dam, Minnesota; Milwaukee Harbor, and Mobile Harbor. The eighth section describes more accurately the location of certain obstructions in the Delaware River near the mouth of the Neversink River, concerning which a survey was ordered in our last bill.

Unless a further explanation of some particular item in the bill is called for, I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to consume any of the time of the House in discussing this measure. It is one that should be passed. It makes no appropriation, and its passage will not cost the Government one cent. It has the unanimous report of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and, in my judgment, it should become a law. Unless some Member on this side of the House desires some time I do not care to say anything more.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules, discharging the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill, and passing the same.

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 207, answered "present" 11, not voting 169, as follows:

RECESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to call for the yeas and nays on that proposition, so that the House may have an opportunity to vote on it.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty Members are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members; as many as favor the motion that the House do recess until 11 a. m. to-morrow will, as their names are called, answer "aye," as many as are opposed will answer "no," those present and not voting will answer "present," and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, pending that, may I present a conference report, to be printed in the Record under the rule, on the child-labor bill? I ask unanimous consent—

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the request, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. What is the conference report?

Mr. OLCOTT. It is on the child-labor bill. I have just received it, signed by the Senate conferees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not present it, because there is no quorum present. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken and there were—yeas 138, nays 74, answered "present" 5, not voting 170, as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 22, 1908.

Prayer by Rev. ULYSSES G. B. PIERCE, of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. KEAN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

EFFICIENCY OF THE MILITIA.

Mr. KEAN. Yesterday the bill (S. 4316) to further amend the act entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes," approved January 21, 1903, was passed, and I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which it was passed. Before that time I had been requested by the military board of the State of New Jersey to oppose the bill. Since that time I have received a dispatch from the adjutant-general of the State, stating that if the military board could be called together he had no doubt that they would withdraw their opposition to the bill. I therefore withdraw the motion to reconsider and let the bill stand passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider is withdrawn. The bill stands passed.

DISBURSEMENT OF INDIAN FUNDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, stating by direction of the President and in response to a resolution of the 16th instant, calling for a detailed statement, showing all revenues of every kind and character collected and all funds from all sources received and credited to each of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole tribes since June 28, 1898, and the disbursements made from the funds of these tribes severally with the authority therefor since that date, that owing to the great amount of work involved it will be impossible to have this statement prepared for use during the present session of Congress, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact filed by the court in the following causes:

In the cause of George W. Boushell and 32 other claimants in subnumbered cases v. United States; and

In the cause of the vestry of The Plains Episcopal Church, of The Plains, Va., v. United States.

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 22009) authorizing the Secretary of War to remove certain obstructions to navigation from the main ship channel, Key West Harbor, Florida, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18347) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. OVERSTREET, Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey, and Mr. MOON of Tennessee, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

S. 902. An act authorizing certain extensions to be made in the lines of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company, the Washington Railway and Electric Company, the City and Suburban Railway of Washington, and the Capital Traction Company, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes:

H. R. 19158. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909; and

H. J. Res. 176. Joint resolution providing for the printing of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I present a resolution adopted by the American Cotton Manufacturers' Association at its twelfth annual convention held at Richmond, Va. I ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

There being no objection, the resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, as follows:

Resolution by the American Cotton Manufacturers' Association at twelfth annual convention at Richmond, Va., May 20, 1908:

We, the American Cotton Manufacturers' Association, in convention assembled, hereby urge upon the Congress of the United States the passage, at this session, of bill H. R. 21357, or a similar bill, providing for the purchase, in aid of navigation, of forest lands in the Southern Appalachian and White Mountain regions, and also for cooperation between private owners and the Federal Government with a view of preserving the forests on privately owned land for the regulation of stream flow in aid of navigation.

Mr. FULTON presented a memorial of sundry Irish-American citizens of Portland, Oreg., remonstrating against the ratification of the treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. NELSON presented a memorial of the New York Clothing Trade Association, remonstrating against the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SCOTT presented sundry memorials of citizens of Ronceverte, W. Va., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "Penrose bill" to exclude nonmailable periodicals from second-class mail privileges, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a memorial of Central Labor Union, American Federation of Labor, of Concord, N. H., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to extend the right of naturalization, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. McCREARY presented a petition of the Ashland Farmers' Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Lexington, Ky., praying for the enactment of legislation to establish a national highways commission, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented petitions of sundry citizens of South Norwalk and Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULLOM presented petitions of sundry citizens of Murphysboro, Watseka, Litchfield, Maywood, and Chicago, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the investigation and the development of the methods of the treatment of tuberculosis, which were referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Modesto, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the investigation and the development of the methods of the treatment of tuberculosis, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

Mr. du PONT presented a petition of Delaware Lodge, No. 231, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers, of Wilmington, Del., praying for the passage of the so-called "Rosenberg anti-injunction bill" and the "Hemenway-Graff self-dumping ash-pan bill," which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FORAKER presented petitions of Lodge No. 32, B. of R. T., of Cleveland; of Division No. 457, B. of L. E., of Toledo; of Division No. 167, of Cleveland; of Division No. 745, of Cleveland; of Division No. 329, of Youngstown; of Division No. 95, of Cincinnati; of Division No. 4, of Toledo; of Division No. 678, of Columbus; of Division No. 360, of Massillon; of Division

No. 408, of Middleport; of Division No. 432, of Akron; of Division No. 3, of Collinwood; of Division No. 140, of Cleveland; of Division No. 395, of Canton, and of citizens of Warren and Gallon, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the passage of the so-called "Rosenberg anti-injunction bill" and the "Hemenway-Graff safety ash-pan bill," which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STEPHENSON presented petitions of sundry citizens of Waukesha, Kenosha, La Crosse, Ripon, and Merrill, and of the Wisconsin Consumers' League, of Oshkosh, all in the State of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of legislation to investigate and develop the methods of the treatment of tuberculosis, which were referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 128, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for the passage of the so-called "Rosenberg anti-injunction" and "Hemenway-Graff safety ash-pan bills," which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Oshkosh, Wis., expressing its approval of the action of the convention of governors, held at the White House May 13 to 16, inclusive, relating to the conservation of the national forests, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented petitions of sundry citizens and labor organizations of Racine, Madison, La Crosse, Marinette, Menominee, Superior, Hudson, Oshkosh, Waukesha, Kenosha, Manitowoc, Appleton, Janesville, Eau Claire, Ashland, Milwaukee, South Kaukauna, and St. Paul, all in the State of Wisconsin, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Keweenaw, Racine, and Platteville, all in the State of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the investigation and the development of the methods of the treatment of tuberculosis, which were referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of La Crosse and Appleton, in the State of Wisconsin, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to extend the right of naturalization, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Madison, Wis.; Spokane, Wash.; Chicago, Ill., and Clark, Nev., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the mailing of telegrams by telegraph companies which are accepted for telegraphic transmission, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Wisconsin Consumers' League, of Madison, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the employment of child labor, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry national banks of Milwaukee, Wis., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "Aldrich currency bill," which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Boston Branch, No. 2, National League of Employees of Navy-Yards, Naval Stations, Arsenals, and Gun Factories, of Charlestown, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to compensate civilian Government employees for personal injury sustained in the line of service, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation making the centenary of the birthday of Abraham Lincoln, February 12, 1909, a legal holiday in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented resolutions adopted by sundry Polish citizens of Chicago, Ill., relative to the treatment accorded Polish people by the German Government, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the memorial of Martin O'Donnell, of Oconto, Wis., remonstrating against the ratification of the treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the South Division Civic Association, of Milwaukee, Wis., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to increase the diversion of the water from Lake Michigan into the Chicago Drainage Canal, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Superior Branch of the Lake Seamen's Union, of Superior, Wis., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to amend section 4463, relating to the complement of the crews of vessels, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of Local Council, United Commercial Travelers of America, of Ashland, Wis., and a memorial of the Wisconsin Retail Implement and Vehicle Dealers' Association, of Markesan, Wis., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill," which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation to amend the act of March 3, 1891, to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and to promote commerce, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Encampment No. 51, Union Veteran Legion, of Fort Wayne, Ind., praying that an appropriation of $200,000 be made for the construction in that city of a national veterans' armory, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Wisconsin, praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post bill," which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

DIVERSION OF WATER FROM LAKE MICHIGAN.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I present a report of a special committee of the Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, setting forth the imperative necessity of preserving the levels of the Great Lakes. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the report was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE CITY OF MILWAUKEE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
April 22, 1908.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to convey to you herewith the report of a special committee of the Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, setting forth the imperative necessity of preserving the levels of the Great Lakes and their connecting channels and harbors and protesting against the diversion of any greater volume of water through the Chicago Drainage Canal than is absolutely necessary for sanitary purposes. The committee is composed of gentlemen having extensive interests in the navigation of the Great Lakes and of unquestioned practical knowledge of the subject. The report was unanimously adopted at a recent meeting of the board of directors of the Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce and was also indorsed by the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Milwaukee. There is but one sentiment in this community on the subject, and that is that the preservation of the existing lake levels is of far greater public necessity than any possible advantages of a deep waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf.

Yours, very truly,

W. J. LANGSON, Secretary.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE CITY OF MILWAUKEE.

The project of a deep waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf.

Report by the special committee on deep waterways to the board of directors, chamber of commerce.

GENTLEMEN: Your special committee on deep waterways in conjunction with the committee on transportation of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association has had under consideration the project now on foot to secure a large and permanent diversion of water from Lake Michigan into the Chicago Drainage Canal.

The project in its ultimate effects, we find, is one which concerns vitally our lake-shipping interests, and therefore prompts us not only to report our findings and conclusions on the same, but also to submit a set of resolutions for your consideration and adoption.

In doing so, we aim to discuss with absolute fairness all the phases involved, in order that you may be able to reach definite and fixed conclusions on the subject.

PRACTICAL PHASES NOT UNDERSTOOD.

The project to perfect a deep-water route from the Lakes to the Gulf has been exploited in the public press for some time, and the promise for shipping connections between the two great water basins has aroused some enthusiasm. The engineering difficulties and other practical phases connected with the project have not been fully exploited nor have the ultimate effects upon the rivers and harbors of the Great Lakes, resultant upon the same, been brought to the attention of the general public.

The volume of water now diverted from Lake Michigan into the Chicago drainage canal is 4,167 cubic feet per second. This lowers the lake level by 1 inch. The sanitary district of Chicago has asked permission from the Secretary of War to obtain an increased flow, making a total of 14,000 cubic feet of water per second during twenty-four hours of each day.

CHICAGO'S ENORMOUS DEMANDS.

At a hearing before the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives on April 16, 1906, and before the Secretary of War on January 14, 1907, permission to withdraw this volume of water from Lake Michigan was urged from the standpoint of sanitation. This subject was exhaustively considered by the International Waterways Commission in its report of January 4, 1907, which shows conclusively that a flow of 10,000 cubic feet per second is more than ample for sanitary requirements, and would, in addition, insure a 14-foot waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf.

It was further shown, to quote from the report, that—

"The diversion of 10,000 cubic feet per second will lower the levels of Lake Michigan-Huron, Lake St. Clair, Lake Erie, Lake Ontario, and the St. Lawrence River, besides the important connecting channels, the Detroit and St. Clair rivers, by amounts varying from  $4\frac{1}{2}$  to  $6\frac{1}{2}$  inches for the different waters, and the diversion of 14,000 cubic feet will lower them from 6 to  $8\frac{1}{2}$  inches. The diversion of 20,000 cubic feet will lower Lake Michigan-Huron about 13 inches and Lake Erie about 11 inches."

SECRETARY DENIED PERMISSION.

As a result of the hearings referred to, the Secretary of War has thus far denied the permission to use any larger flow than now is granted, namely, 4,167 cubic feet per second.

In a report made by the United States Engineering Corps on May 22, 1906, it is stated that "the sanitary condition of the river has been so good so far with the 250,000 cubic feet per minute (4,167 cubic feet per second) already authorized by the War Department that there is no special apparent need for a use to-day of any greater volume."

The same authority also wisely says: "The first right to the use of water belongs to navigation, to which water is an absolute necessity. The second right belongs to the public needs for sanitary purposes, so far as they can not be provided for otherwise, and the use of water for power purposes alone should be made secondary to the above since it is always possible to obtain power in other ways."

HEAVY DAMAGE PREDICTED.

The dredging of the rivers, harbor entrances, and connecting channels has been based upon the past standard lake levels and the necessities of lake traffic. To make any decided and permanent reduction in these levels will not only necessitate most extensive and expensive dredging, but also cause in the interim an enormous reduction in the tonnage of the lake fleet. It is estimated by the Lake Carriers' Association that this reduction in the carrying capacity of the lake fleet would result in the loss of two and one-half million dollars per annum.

But there is another form of loss which can not be minimized. The lowering of the lake levels and the consequent lowering of the river levels will have the tendency to expose piling above the water line and subject them to early decay and rot. The damage to docks and wharves thus caused along the river fronts has not as yet been estimated in dollars and cents, but is, nevertheless, believed to be large.

The cost of restoring the depth in the harbors of the Great Lakes and the channels between the Lakes, as estimated by the International Waterways Commission, is fixed at $10,000,000, and of restoring it in the Welland and St. Lawrence canals at $2,500,000.

AN IMPRACTICAL SCHEME.

It may well be asked here what benefits may be derived from an increased diversion of the waters of Lake Michigan into the Chicago Drainage Canal and the proposed deep-waterway connection of the Lakes and the Gulf.

The latter project has been discarded by the most eminent engineering experts of the country as being impracticable and infeasible. The depth of the Mississippi River below St. Louis was increased from an average of 5 feet to 9 feet. During the time that this depth was attained and that the sum of $100,000,000 was being expended the river trade died out.

The Illinois State legislature, at its last session, enacted legislation by which the Des Plaines River, which connects with the Chicago Drainage Canal, is declared to be a navigable stream, and other legislation by which a bond issue of $22,000,000 is to be laid before the people of the State for public vote this year for the purpose of having the State of Illinois construct a combined water power and navigation canal from Lockport to Ottawa, Ill. The necessary water to secure this water power is to be drawn from Lake Michigan.

Eminent engineers are of the opinion that the problem of sewage disposal must and will ultimately be solved by means other than through the pollution of our rivers and lakes. It is therefore reasonable to assume that the sanitary district of Chicago will eventually be compelled to discontinue the diversion of its sewage through the rivers of adjacent territory.

The immediate advantage then derived from an increased flow of water into the Chicago Drainage Canal would not consist in any increased facilities for the disposal of the Chicago sewage, but in the creation of a strong water power in the canal region available for industrial purposes. Such water power would, no doubt, yield a large revenue to the State of Illinois, but the advantage thus gained by one section of the country would be dearly paid for by other sections of the country.

The practicability of an ultimate water route connection between the Great Lakes and the Gulf is enthusiastically urged, but it is well known among those most familiar with the nature of the project that the immediate and only advantage gained from any efforts in that direction, aside from drainage facilities already secured, is the valuable water power to be created.

While the best engineering minds of the country condemn the scheme of deepening the Mississippi River, and while the experts connected with the Department of War are conscious of the futility of the whole project, it nevertheless possesses elements of popularity with the masses. Therefore it is all the more necessary that the whole truth regarding the project be brought to the attention of the general public and to the governing factors at Washington.

AN EXPERT OPINION.

Secretary Taft, after obtaining from the Judge-Advocate-General of the War Department an opinion that the requested permission could be granted by the Secretary of War upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, requested the latter officer to report upon the subject. Accordingly, on February 23, General Mackenzie reported in part as follows:

"In my opinion this abstraction will undoubtedly lower the levels of all the waters of the Great Lakes, except those of Lake Superior, and thus diminish the navigable capacity and depth of the various channels and harbors which have been deepened and improved under authority of Congress.

"Leaving out Lake Superior, there are more than 100 works of river and harbor improvements on the Great Lakes and their connecting waters, for which appropriations aggregating more than $80,000,000 have been made. The application of this vast sum has resulted in securing and maintaining specified depths and widths of channels which Congress has decided to be required for the accommodations of the traffic using these waters.

"To diminish these depths, even to a slight extent, would not only prove a serious injury to the traffic, but would practically undo the work which has been accomplished by Congressional direction, and necessitate the expenditure of further large sums of money for restoration."

tion. Any project that tends in a measure to annul or reverse the orders of Congress, as expressed in the various river and harbor acts appropriating funds for improving the harbors and channels connecting with the Great Lakes, should meet the disfavor of the Department unless it has been sanctioned by that body. In my judgment such a project is the one under consideration, and for this reason I am unwilling to recommend favorable action thereon, assuming that the Department is empowered to take such action as is held by the Judge-Advocate-General."

Secretary Taft, in his finding of March 14, said, in part:

"Unless the Chief of Engineers shall recommend the granting of the permit, the Secretary of War is without power to give the requested authority; but I may say this much, that the application is to be made the basis for the withdrawal of a large amount of water from Lake Michigan, and that all interested in the enormous lake traffic view the settlement of the question with grave apprehension."

"Added to this is the international complication which is likely to arise in the threatened lowering of the lake levels in the ports and harbors and canals of Canada. On the other hand, it is maintained with great emphasis and elaboration of detail that the change in the Calumet River is essential to the healthful sanitation of Chicago, and that the threatened injury to navigation is so small as to be negligible."

"Between two such great interests the decision must be effected more or less by large public policy and expediency, and while I agree in the construction of the Judge-Advocate-General that the issue is left by statute to the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers and the concurrent decision of the Secretary of War, it may be fortunate that circumstances now require submission of this question of capital and national importance to the Congress of the United States."

The representatives of the Chicago sanitary district will not relinquish their efforts toward securing favorable action at the hands of Congress, and it therefore becomes the duty of the lake interests to remain alert to the situation and maintain the rights of navigation which under the circumstances are primary and leading."

In view of the foregoing facts and estimates herein mentioned, which have been secured from unbiased expert authorities, we are prompted to submit the following preamble and resolutions:

PREAMBLE AND RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas the present navigable depth of the various rivers which flow into Lake Michigan and the docks and wharves connected with them, as well as the harbor entrances, are based upon past lake levels and to meet the necessities of modern lake traffic; and

Whereas any material lowering of the lake levels will result in untold damage to the harbor entrances of and to the dockage and wharves on the rivers leading into Lake Michigan and in reducing vastly the tonnage capacity of the lake fleet: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we deem the preservation of the levels of the Great Lakes as imperative; that we oppose strenuously the project of increasing the diversion of water from Lake Michigan into the Chicago Drainage Canal beyond the 4,107 cubic feet per second now granted, and that in our judgment any material and permanent lowering of our lake levels would prove an economic loss which is not compensated by any gains made or advantages derived elsewhere through such changes: And be it further

Resolved, That the substance of this report, together with the preamble and resolutions, be sent to the Secretary of War, the chairman and members of the Congressional Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and to the Wisconsin Representatives in the National Congress.

Respectfully submitted,

O. F. BIRD, Chairman,
L. J. PETIT,
FRANK L. VANCE,
FRANK W. SMITH,
CARL JOYS,

Special Committee on Deep Waterways.

Wilson, administrator of the estate of Willoughby Wilson, deceased (S. 7205); and the refunding of certain moneys (S. 7207); now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the "Tucker Act." And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

Mr. FULTON. From the Committee on Claims I report a resolution, and I ask for its adoption. I will explain that it is simply a rereference of a number of bills heretofore referred, but which were not in proper form to be considered by the Court of Claims and were reintroduced in proper form. The resolution provides for a rereference of them.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the claims of the State of Oregon (S. 2951); the legal representatives of the late Charles Green, of Connecticut (S. 3200); James M. Schilling (S. 5266); certain owners of cotton taken by the United States military authorities in Adams County, Miss., in 1863 (S. 5552); legal representatives of the estate of Henry S. Shibley, deceased (S. 5942); the estate of Emily R. Hathorn, deceased (S. 6448); the legal representatives of John P. Lamar, deceased (S. 6449); the estate of Alfred Austell, deceased (S. 6949), and the estate of Edward W. Munday, deceased (S. 6950), now pending in the Senate, together with all accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the "Tucker Act." And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith. And if any testimony shall have been heretofore taken before said court, either in support of or against any of said claims, the court is authorized to consider the same at the hearing of such claim pursuant to this reference.

OMNIBUS PUBLIC BUILDINGS BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21897) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. SCOTT, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. CULBERSON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. OWEN introduced a bill (S. 7208) providing for a modern system whereby the voters of the United States may instruct their national representatives, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HOPKINS introduced a bill (S. 7210) to authorize an exchange of the present site of the light-house at the mouth of the Kalamazoo River, in Michigan, for a new site thereon for the new channel, now being the outlet of said river into Lake Michigan, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7211) granting an increase of pension to John H. Hamlin, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CLAPP introduced a bill (S. 7212) granting a pension to Adelbert Gardner, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GORE introduced a bill (S. 7213) to provide for the reimbursement of William F. Gilluly for actual expenses incurred by him as a United States commissioner of the northern district of the Indian Territory while absent from his official headquarters on official business, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BAILEY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 7214) for the relief of the heirs or estate of William B. Miller, deceased, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE introduced a bill (S. 7215) granting a pension to Harriet L. Curtis, which was read twice by its title and, with an accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 7216) for the relief of Henry S. Hannis & Co. and others, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 7217) granting a pension to Maggie J. Carman, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. OWEN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 94) inviting the cooperation of the States in the establishment of a national initiative and referendum, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

ANACOSTIA FLATS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been furnished with a copy of the report of the committee of the Anacostia Citizens' Association on the Anacostia Flats, with the request that it be published as a document. I therefore move that it be printed as a Senate document.

The motion was agreed to.

THE UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. HALE. I present certain papers relative to alleged structural defects in battle ships. I move that the papers be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON IRRIGATION.

Mr. FLINT. I present certain hearings before the Committee on Irrigation of the Senate, containing the testimony of the Secretary of the Interior and the Director of the Reclamation Service in reference to the issuance of certificates by the Water Users' Association. I move that the hearings be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

QUAPAW AGENCY, OKLA.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate House bill 16743.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 16743) for the removal of the restrictions on alienation of lands of allottees of the Quapaw Agency, Okla., and the sale of all tribal lands, schools, agency, or other buildings on any of the reservations within the jurisdiction of such agency, and for other purposes, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed. Then I shall move an amendment to section 1 of the bill.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I move to strike out section 1 and to substitute the amendment I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all of section 1 and in lieu thereof insert:

That from and after the 1st day of January, 1909, all restrictions as to sale, incumbrance, or taxation shall be removed as to one-half of all lands allotted to adult members of the various tribes of the Quapaw Indian Agency, Okla., except the Modoc tribe; and such restrictions shall in like manner and to the same extent be removed as to one-half of all lands allotted to members of said tribe, except the Modoc tribe, who were minors at the date of allotment, but who have since become, or as they may hereafter become, adults.

That part of allotted lands as to which restrictions are hereby removed shall be designated as surplus lands, and that part of such lands as to which the existing restrictions are not removed shall be designated as homestead lands, and said homestead lands shall be selected as hereinafter provided, and as to the said homestead lands all existing restrictions shall be retained.

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, upon application of any adult member of either of said tribes, except the Modoc tribe, in his discretion, and he is authorized whenever he shall be satisfied that any allottee of said agency is competent and capable of managing his or her affairs at any time, to cause to be issued to such allottee a patent in fee simple for such portion of his or her allotment hereby reserved from sale, incumbrance, or taxation, and thereafter all restrictions as to sale, incumbrance, or taxation of such lands covered by such fee-simple patent shall be removed.

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to sell the surplus lands, or any part thereof, of any minor, after the same shall have been set aside under the provisions of this act, on written request from the natural or legal guardian of said minor, and the said Secretary, on such sale, shall pay the proceeds of such sale to the duly qualified guardian or curator of the estate of said minor; and if there be no such guardian or curator of such estate, the said Secretary shall withhold said proceeds of said sale and may use the same for the education and support of said minor until the said minor shall have attained his or her majority, whereupon the remaining proceeds of said sale shall be paid to him or her.

Provided further, That any sale, incumbrance, or contract for sale or incumbrance made or entered into by or on behalf of any allottee for any part of his surplus lands prior to January 1, 1909, or prior to the issuance of such fee-simple patent, shall be absolutely null and void: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue patents in fee to the duly organized missionary boards of the religious societies and organizations, severally, for the lands occupied by them within any of said reservations and heretofore reserved to such societies as shown on approved schedules of allotments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. M. C. LATTA, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

On May 20, 1908:

S. 5617. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept and care for gifts presented to vessels of the Navy of the United States.

On May 22, 1908:

S. R. 90. Joint resolution to amend an act authorizing the construction of bridges across navigable rivers, and so forth.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 22009. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to remove certain obstructions to navigation from the main ship channel, Key West Harbor, Florida, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18347) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, agree to the further conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the conferees be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice-President appointed Mr. PENROSE, Mr. BURROWS, and Mr. CLAY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ELECTRIC SIGNAL AND AUTOMATIC BRAKE DEVICES.

Mr. MONEY. I submit a resolution. I ask to have it referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and I will ask that committee, if they can, to report it as promptly as possible, as I should like to have it finished at this session of Congress. It is concerning a very practical and excellent device, which absolutely prevents the collision of cars either head on or end on. It prevents going into open switches, obstacles, or obstructions on the road. It is an electrical apparatus that entirely does away with any danger in railroad travel. It is extremely important, and is now on exhibit here inside of the District. I should like to have the committee act upon it as promptly as they can. I ask that the resolution be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas there is now on public exhibition on the Chesapeake Beach Railroad, within the corporate limits of the District of Columbia, a device called the "Born electric signal and automatic brake" device to prevent "head on" and "rear end" collisions of railroad trains on the same track, open switches, open drawbridges, broken rails, etc., and inasmuch as this device "eliminates human agency" and acts "automatically" in the control of railroad trains with such accuracy that it seems to be almost human in its intelligence and excites the wonder and admiration of the best scientists and electricians in the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be requested to investigate its workings, and, if based on sound principles for a mechanical application to all railroads, that they so report with such other recommendations and suggestions as they see proper, to the end that the awful slaughter of lives and destruction of property may be stopped by its adoption by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. MONEY. The phraseology of the resolution ought to be corrected. Instead of "requested" let it read, "That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed." It is incorrectly phrased.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to suggest an amendment to broaden the scope of the resolution by authorizing the Commission to inquire into any and all devices for the same purpose. There are others, and they should bring in as full information as possible.

Mr. MONEY. I have no objection in the world to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "workings" in the resolution insert "as well as the workings of any device for a similar purpose."

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not propose to address myself to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho, but the preamble of the resolution makes a number of statements which may be true and may not. I suppose this is a patented invention?

Mr. MONEY. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. It might be of great service to the inventor to have the Senate of the United States state that it is a remarkable invention, will work automatically, and all that sort of thing. I suggest to the Senator that he strike out the preamble, and that we pass the resolution.

Mr. MONEY. Very well, I will do that. I do not care, so that it gets before the Commission. I ask unanimous consent to put the resolution on its passage, with the preamble off.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho is agreed to. The Senator from Mississippi proposes to modify the resolution by striking out the preamble. The preamble is stricken out.

Mr. MONEY. That being agreed to, Mr. President, I will ask that the Senate pass the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest that probably a further modification of the text of the resolution will be required to make it harmonize.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to hear the resolution read as modified.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution as modified.

The Secretary read the resolution as modified.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi to say, "and all other apparatus intended for the same purpose."

Mr. MONEY. Very well; "all kinds of electrical apparatus."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be so modified.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to have the resolution read as it has been amended, so that we may know what has been done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution as it now stands.

The Secretary read the resolution as modified.

Mr. MONEY. The preamble having been taken out, I ask the Senate to consider and pass the resolution now. It is very important, I think, to the country. I ask unanimous consent for its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

Mr. CARTER. Let the resolution be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution as modified.

The Secretary again read the resolution as modified.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the Senator who has charge of this matter to whom the Commission is to report. It seems that some provision has been stricken out there. I call the attention of the Senator to it. It says that they shall make a report, but it does not say to whom they shall report or anything very particular in reference to it.

Mr. MONEY. They can only report to Congress, of course.

Mr. BURKETT. That is what I suggest. It seems to me that that ought to be in the resolution, because it simply says that they shall report.

Mr. MONEY. That they shall report to Congress. Let it be so modified. I did not write the resolution. It was handed to me a little while ago, and I saw there were imperfections in it when it was read. I want to get it in some shape, however, and to have it acted on.

Mr. LODGE. I am not sure that I know the full purport of the resolution, but I understand it is to investigate an automatic-signal device. I think I am correct.

Mr. MONEY. Yes; that is it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. LODGE. In the sundry civil appropriation bill there is the following provision:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation to enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate in regard to the use and necessity for block-signal systems and appliances for the automatic control of railway trains, including experimental tests, at the discretion of the Commission, of such of said signal systems and appliances only as may be furnished in connection with such investigation, free of cost to the Government, in accordance with the provisions of the joint resolution approved June 30, 1906, is hereby reappropriated and made available for expenditure during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, for the purposes named in this and the preceding paragraph.

That seems to me to cover it and to give them money to investigate all devices.

Mr. CARTER. I move to amend the resolution by striking out the words "awful slaughter," preceding the words "of lives," and inserting the word "loss" in lieu thereof.

Mr. MONEY. I accept that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS. How will the resolution read now?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution as amended.

The Secretary read the resolution as amended.

Mr. HOPKINS. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that it ill becomes the Senate of the United States to attempt to exploit any inventor, and that the resolution, if it is to be adopted at all, should eliminate the name of any inventor or any special invention. I move to strike out the name of the invention.

Mr. LODGE. If that is stricken out—

Mr. MONEY. I do not admit that there is anything ill about it. I believe it is perfectly proper.

Mr. LODGE. I believe I have the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. LODGE. If the name of the special inventor is stricken out, it reduces it to the provision of the sundry civil appropriation bill. I did not read the whole provision. The preceding paragraph, referred to in what I read, is as follows:

Hereafter the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be, and is hereby, authorized, at its discretion, to investigate, test experimentally, and report on the use and need of any appliances or systems intended to promote the safety of railway operation which may be furnished in completed shape to such Commission for such investigation and test entirely free of cost to the Government. For this purpose the Commission is authorized to employ persons familiar with the subject to be investigated and tested, and may also make use of its regular employees for such purposes.

Then follows the appropriation of the money for that precise purpose. The resolution without the name of the inventor is simply repeating what has already passed both Houses and is to be the law, and I do not see why we should single out one inventor.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have an amendment pending to strike out the name of the inventor.

Mr. MONEY. I want to say that I can not see any impropriety whatever in naming a device. That is the name of the device, and I want to have a special investigation made of this particular device. I introduced the resolution without reading it, just as it was handed to me, and it was imperfectly drawn.

Mr. HOPKINS. If it is amended as I propose, the investigation will go on; but if it is left as it stands, it simply means that the Senate of the United States is advertising one particular invention.

Mr. MONEY. It is not an advertisement. It is simply a direction to the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate the apparatus.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The whole thing is covered.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I withdraw the whole business. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi withdraws the resolution.

STEPHEN FEATHER.

Mr. BURKETT. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 7114) to correct the military record of Stephen Feather, deceased.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the bill be read, subject to objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a report.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the report may be read, subject to objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report in the absence of objection, as requested by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. WARNER on the 21st instant, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 7114) to correct the military record of Stephen Feather, deceased, favorably reports the same to the Senate and recommends that it be passed with the following amendments:

In line 6 strike out "Eighth" and insert "Eighteenth."

In line 9 strike out "said organizations" and insert "the latter organization: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue or become payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Your committee believes that its favorable action is fully justified by the following report of the War Department:

Case of Stephen Feather, late of Company F, Eighth Ohio Infantry, and Company M, Fourth United States Cavalry.

The name Stephen Feather has not been found on the rolls, as file in this Office, of the Eighth Ohio Infantry.

It is shown by the records, however, that Stephen Feather was enrolled August 15, 1861, and was mustered into service September 1, 1861, as a private in Company F, Eighteenth Ohio Infantry, to serve three years. He was discharged November 28, 1862, by reason of his reenlistment in Company M, Fourth United States Cavalry, under the provisions of General Orders, 154, Adjutant-General's Office, of 1862. He enlisted November 28, 1862, in Company M, Fourth United States Cavalry, for three years, and served faithfully with that organization until August 25, 1865, when he deserted at Macon, Ga.

Applying for removal of the charge of desertion standing against him on the records of Company M, Fourth United States Cavalry, Stephen Feather, under date of March 25, 1897, testified as follows:

"That he is the identical Stephen Feather who was a private in Company M, in the Fourth Regiment of United States Cavalry; that he served faithfully until on or about the 20th day of August, 1865, when, without any intention of deserting, he left the regiment under the following circumstances: About the last days of February or first of March, 1865, I was detailed on detached duty as blacksmith until about the 20th day of August, at which time the headquarters were broken up. The volunteer State soldiers were discharged and went home. I received no orders from any officer of my regiment or any other person to report to my company or regiment. I did not know at the time where my company was located, and, knowing that the war was over, I did not think that my services were necessary or would be required, never thinking that I was bringing upon my record the charge of desertion. Previous to my service in the Fourth United States Cavalry I had served one year in Company F, Eighteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and was discharged upon my enlistment, as shown. Altogether I served over four years faithfully, and until the war was ended, before committing the mistake which I have always regretted."

The application for removal of the charge of desertion and for an honorable discharge in this case has been denied, and now stands denied, on the ground that it does not appear that at the time this soldier absented himself from his command he was suffering from wounds, injuries, or disease received or contracted in the line of duty, or that he was prevented from returning to his command by reason of such wounds, injuries, or disease before the expiration of his term of enlistment, and because the case does not come within any of the other provisions of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, which is the only law now in force governing the subject of removal of charges of desertion.

Respectfully submitted.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
The Adjutant-General.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
The Adjutant-General's Office, May 16, 1908.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Morning business is not concluded?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is not concluded.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I shall not object to the consideration of this bill, but give notice that hereafter I shall object to the consideration by unanimous consent of any bills until the morning business has been completed. I do not object to this one. It has already been called up and we had better dispose of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BACON. Is what the Secretary has read the only report accompanying the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is the only report.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not like to object to a matter of this kind. I listened very carefully to the reading of the report and I would not assume to take issue with the Committee on Military Affairs, but I do think this is one of the classes of cases that ought to be carefully scrutinized, as it involves the restoration of a man who is a confessed deserter to a position where he can come and claim a pension.

I happen to know something about the particular dates the applicant speaks of in his statement. If I understood it correctly, he states that he was detailed in February or March, 1865, in Macon, Ga., by General Wilson. I know that that is not correct, because I know from personal presence on the ground that General Wilson never came to Macon until April. In view of the fact that there is this discrepancy in this statement, I think the committee ought to look into it.

Then, as I understand the statement by this soldier, he went on to say that he was detailed in Macon, and that he left without knowing that he did not have a right to do so. Mr. President, that is a very loose statement to be made. Of course, if he belonged to a military command there, his command was there. I know that General Wilson was in Macon during the summer of that year, and it is not to be credited that this soldier was in a condition where he did not know that he was still a member of a military organization.

Mr. President, I am not going to take any issue, but I think the matter ought to be looked into by the Military Committee in view of the fact of the discrepancy which I myself know as to dates. Therefore I shall object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to say a word about this matter. This is the case of a soldier who served almost five years in the Army, until August 25, 1865. General Ainsworth says in his report that if this soldier had been one of those suffering from wounds, he would have been entitled to an honorable discharge and had his military record corrected. He enlisted back in the early part of 1861 and served, as I have said, until 1865. At the time he left the service he had been detailed for blacksmith duty. The camp was broken up in August, 1865. He did not know where his command was; he had no orders to go anywhere, and he simply went home. That is what the record shows. The record is entirely clear, and it is a good record for the soldier, until that time in August, after the war was over, when he went home, as a good many other soldiers did, and a good many of them have had their records corrected. He could not have his record corrected, because he did not have any wounds or disability which had been incurred in the service. That is the reason General Ainsworth says the Department can not correct his record.

I will say to the Senator from Georgia that the Committee on Military Affairs did give this bill consideration. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], himself an old veteran of that war, had the matter in charge as a subcommittee. He went over this case carefully and has reported it; and I am always of the opinion that when an old soldier is willing to report favorably upon the record of a man who is charged with desertion, the rest of us can afford to rely on his report, because I know how well the old veterans guard the military roll of that war.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, for reasons which will readily occur, I very seldom say anything about the matter of the correction of the record of a Union soldier or the question of pensions or anything else of that nature; but my attention was—

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BACON. Permit me to finish the sentence, and then I will yield with pleasure.

Mr. President, my attention happened to be called, in hearing the reading of the statement by this soldier, to what was a misstatement, if I understood it correctly. I understood his statement to be that he was detailed at Macon in February or March, 1865, by General Wilson to do certain work, and I personally happen to know the fact that General Wilson did not come to Macon until the middle of April, 1865.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that the report reads as follows:

About the last days of February or 1st of March, 1865, I was detailed on detached duty as blacksmith at General Wilson's headquarters, and served as headquarter blacksmith until about the 20th day of August, at which time the headquarters were broken up. The volunteer State soldiers were discharged and went home. I received no orders from any officer of my regiment or any other person to report to my company or regiment. I did not know at the time where my company was located, and knowing that the war was over I did not think that my services were needed, and went home not knowing that a formal discharge was necessary or would be required.

General Ainsworth adds further down in the report:

The application for removal of the charge of desertion and for an honorable discharge in this case has been denied, and now stands denied, on the ground that it does not appear that at the time this soldier absented himself from his command he was suffering from wounds, injuries, or disease received or contracted in the line of duty, or that he was prevented from returning to his command by reason of such wounds.

I do not find anything in the report involving the objection the Senator from Georgia raises, I will say.

Mr. BACON. The statement is distinctly made that this occurred at Macon, Ga., if I understood it correctly. Of course, the Military Committee can do as they please; I shall not undertake to take issue with them, but I call attention to the fact that there is a glaring misstatement of fact, if I understood the reading of the report correctly.

Mr. BURKETT. I do not find anything like that in the report, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. BACON. The report states that this occurred in Macon—that is what I understood to be read—and that it was in February or March, 1865, that General Wilson—

Mr. BURKETT. No; the report says the soldier deserted on August 25, 1865, at Macon, Ga.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. BURKETT. It does not say anything about where he went.

Mr. BACON. There was the place where he was detailed for blacksmith work.

Mr. BURKETT. He was detailed at headquarters, but it does not say when he went there. The record and the testimony show—

Mr. BACON. I know when he went there. He does not state when he went there, but I know when he went there.

Mr. BURKETT. There is no dispute, then, because he does not deny when he went there. The record shows when he left there, and he left there on the 25th of August.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am going to object to the consideration of the bill, in order that the Military Committee may examine this matter. If they are satisfied, after an examination of the facts to which I have called attention, I shall make no further objection to the bill; but I do think, in view of the knowledge which I have of the discrepancy which I have stated, that the Military Committee ought to have the advantage of the opportunity for further investigation.

Mr. BURKETT. I submit that there is no discrepancy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will go over without prejudice.

Mr. ALDRICH. Did the Senator from Georgia object to the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia objected to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. BACON. I did upon the ground that it was, as I understood—

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator from Georgia will listen to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], who reported the bill, before he interposes an objection.

Mr. BACON. I will.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I have no further explanation to make of the bill than that which appears in the report. From the report coming from the Adjutant-General, it seems that this soldier, according to the records, served honorably some four years; that he served until about the 20th of August, 1865, some months after the war closed. His case comes within, as I understand it, the rule of the Military Committee as to soldiers who went home, as many did, not knowing really where their commands were. That is the explanation as to the question of fact.

As to the date referred to by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], of course I have no information further than that contained in the report.

Mr. ALDRICH. Was not this soldier in the Regular Army—not in the Volunteer Army?

Mr. WARNER. He was in the volunteers.

Mr. BACON. I could not hear what the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] said, but I do not want to detain the Senate about a matter of this kind. If, after the statement I have made, the Military Committee desires to proceed with the bill, I shall not object and will let it go.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 6, before the word "Regiment," to strike out "Eighth" and to insert "Eighteenth," so as to read:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing on the records of the War Department against the name of Stephen Feather, deceased, late of Company F, Eighteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I certainly do not want to interfere in a case that has merit, but I understand from other Senators that this man was in the Regular Army and that he was not in the volunteer service at the time of the desertion. I think that ought to be cleared up. Probably the report does clear it up. As to that I do not know, as I did not hear the report read. If he was in the Regular Army, of course his plea that he did not know the war had closed, or something to that effect, would not hold.

Mr. BURKETT. He was not in the Regular Army, I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] has just stated that he was a volunteer soldier.

Mr. ALDRICH. Members of the Military Committee about me say that this soldier was a volunteer originally, but was at the time of the desertion in the Fourth Cavalry of the Regular Army.

Mr. GALLINGER. The report states:

That he is the identical Stephen Feather who was a private in Company M, in the Fourth Regiment of United States Cavalry; that he served faithfully until on or about the 20th day of August, 1865, when, without any intention of deserting, he left the regiment under the following circumstances.

Mr. President, as the man was in the Regular Army, I must object to the further consideration of the bill to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the further consideration of the bill. The bill will go over without prejudice.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21875) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PARKER of New Jersey, Mr. CAPRON, and Mr. SLAYDEN, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21946) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for prior years, and for other purposes; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. TAWNEY, Mr. VREELAND, and Mr. BRUNDIDGE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21946) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for, and that the conferees be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice-President appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. TELLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21875) making appropriation for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the conferees be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. SCOTT, Mr. HEMENWAY, and Mr. FRAZIER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DATE ON CANNED MEAT, ETC.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], coming over from a former day.

The Secretary read the resolution yesterday submitted by Mr. BEVERIDGE, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 912) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908," approved March 4, 1907; and to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907," approved June 30, 1906.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, this is a bill about which there was some discussion on yesterday. It is a bill requiring the date to be put upon cans of meat or meat-food products. It was a part of the original meat-inspection measure. In this bill also is a provision putting the cost upon the packers, but, in view of my knowledge of the sentiment of many Senators upon the latter subject, I will say that I do not intend to press that portion of it at this time at all. The object of this motion is merely that the Senate may have an opportunity to act upon the bill requiring the date of canning to be put upon cans of meat and meat-food products.

I will say only one word with reference to that, because the facts are all familiar to the Senate and do not need any elaboration. This measure has passed the Senate twice without a dissenting vote. Everybody knew about it when it was passed. It has been before the Committee on Agriculture, all told, for practically two years. The facts involved in this proposition, the arguments that may exist against it—which were found to be very, very few—were all set out at great length when the meat-inspection bill was originally up in the hearings before the House committee. Those hearings were printed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator kindly indicate where I may get a copy or copies of those hearings? I have spent some time since yesterday trying to get material on this subject, and I have before me all that I can find, and it is very, very little. I will be glad—and that is why I interrupt the Senator now—if he can tell me where the information is, in order that I may get whatever printed matter he may have or know of that bears upon this question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator has the House hearings, then he has all, I suppose, that he can get, for there is very little against the provision. If there is little against this provision, it is because there was little to be said against it. I read with great interest and with some astonishment at the time and heard statements made which at that time were chiefly directed to the fact, as I remember, that a large amount of old canned goods was on hand, and this would prevent the sale of it. I think if the Senator has it there, although I have not looked at it for two years, he will find that it was said by representatives of the packers that they would bring in the old canned meat upon which the label had become impaired so that it would look old, boil the label off, and put on a new label, so that the customer, the man who bought the meat and gave it to his wife and children to eat, would suppose that they were eating fresh meat, when, as a matter of fact, they might be eating meat eight years or ten years old, or even older than that.

This is a matter of tremendous human interest. I suppose there is not a single physician in this country who does not know that the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], made on this floor with great feeling when this matter was up before, is true, that most of the cases of ptomaine poisoning among men, women, and children in this country come from the eating of old meat and meat-food products that have been canned. I have never yet heard one single objection to this measure of human safety to the health and life of the people. It has passed the Senate twice. It was rejected by the House conferees in conference. No objection has ever been made in this body or in any committee of this body to it. The people have been asking for it for two years. As I explained yesterday, it is no reflection whatever on the committee, for I personally know that to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the bill will not be offensive at all or will not be so regarded, at least by some members of the committee, and I think by a majority of that committee, and therefore, Mr. President, I make the motion.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I do not wish to antagonize the efforts of the Senator from Indiana to bring this matter up and to secure consideration for his bill, but I can see that it is going to lead to very much discussion, and there is an important measure here that has been a long time reported from the committee—the omnibus claims bill. I have waited to secure consideration of that bill until the general appropriation bills and special appropriation bills were out of the way. A great many Senators are especially interested in the bill, because citizens of their States are widely interested. I can not, in justice to them and without a dereliction of my duty, refrain longer from moving to take it up. Therefore I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bill 15372, being the omnibus claims bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 15372) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker acts.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, there are—

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that this motion is not debatable.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The motion to discharge the committee is debatable. This is not a motion to proceed to the consideration—

Mr. LODGE. It is a motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill, and that motion is not debatable.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then I ask the Senator from Oregon to withhold his motion for a moment, until I can make my statement. I should certainly do so, if he desired, and I think any Senator would.

Mr. FULTON. Very well; I will withhold the motion so as to give the Senator from Indiana an opportunity to make the statement he desires, but will reserve the right to renew the motion afterwards.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly. Mr. President, the first reason given by the Senator from Oregon for asking for the consideration of the omnibus claims bill is that the measure that I am taking steps to have considered will cause some discussion. I do not think it will cause twenty minutes' discussion; but if it caused all that the Senator from Oregon apprehends, it would not cause one one-hundredth part of the discussion that the omnibus claims bill will cause. Yesterday the Senator from Oregon referred to the fact that we are in the closing days of the session, and the Senator and myself had a short colloquy upon that. If he is right, if we are in the closing days of the session, then the Senator, from his wide and accurate and careful experience, knows that the bill which he has moved to take up now can not possibly pass. Not only that, Mr. President, but we had before the Senate yesterday, and expect to have again to-day, a measure of very great importance concerning the compensation of Government employees injured in the course of their work. Proceeding to the consideration of the omnibus claims bill would mean, if we stood by our action in that particular, not only that we would not take up the bill to put dates upon cans of meat, not only that we could not take action with reference to the bill providing for the compensation of Government employees disabled or killed, but that we could do nothing at all except to discuss the omnibus claims bill, which, if the Senator is right in saying that we are in the closing days of the session, can not pass anyhow.

The other consideration, and a consideration which, in view of the motion which has been made, I think the Senate should observe is this, that this bill, which the Senator now moves, as he says in the closing days of the session, and which we know will take so much discussion that it can not pass if we are in the closing days of the session, has been before the Senate on the report of the Senator's committee since the latter part of March. I am usually in hearty sympathy with the Senator from Oregon when he wants to take up a measure, but here this bill, in which he says so many Senators are interested, has lain, and when I moved to discharge the Committee on Agriculture that we may take up a measure which has passed the Senate twice, and which will probably not take any discussion, the Senator from Oregon, after the bill has been here before us since last March, moves for the first time or perhaps for the second time to proceed to its consideration.

The Senator said, and perhaps rightly, that many Senators are interested in this omnibus claims bill. Well, Mr. President, suppose that every one of them had some constituent who was interested in some one claim in this omnibus claims bill. The whole people of the United States are interested in the measure for putting the date upon cans, thus making the meat and meat food products contained in these receptacles not dangerous to health and life. Is the fact that some Senator here has an interest in a claim contained in the omnibus claims bill, which is now urged all of a sudden, at the closing days of the session, although it has lain here four months, of greater public interest than the health, the life, and the safety of the people? Is not the interest of 90,000,000 people as much public consideration as the interest of some Senators who want some claims considered in the omnibus claims bill, and of other Senators, no doubt, who do not want those claims considered, because we all know what occurs when an omnibus claims bill comes up here. It is always one of the most vexed subjects before the Senate.

No person knows better than I do the laborious, tedious, accurate, painful, and extended labor that the Senator from Oregon, as chairman of the Committee on Claims, has given to those measures, and he knows better than any other man in this Chamber that as a result of the adoption of his motion, if we stand by it afterwards, if it is not made merely for the purpose of preventing this bill of mine being taken up, not one other measure can be considered, much less passed, during the remaining days of this session.

Mr. President, even if the measure which I am now urging upon the attention of the Senate were not before us, even if we had to consider only those other large questions, one of which we were considering yesterday, and some other large ones that many Senators have before us, and even if I were not interested in the present bill which I have called before the attention of the Senate, I do not think, if it be true, as the Senator from Oregon says, we are in the closing hours of the session, that the omnibus claims bill should be considered before other great, urgent, human measures are considered.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator will not take much time.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to make a brief statement. I have no speech to make. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] has made a statement here of the facts as he understands them, which is entirely erroneous so far as the proposition to put the dates on cans of meat and meat-food products is concerned. The matter has had no consideration whatever before any Senate committee, nor has the Senate yet granted any hearings on the subject. As a matter of fact, the original subject-matter passed this Senate, together with the meat-inspection bill, as an amendment offered on this floor and unanimously adopted without due consideration or debate during the season of hysteria that followed the publication of the book called "The Jungle," by some fellow whose name I do not happen to remember now. It went to conference. The House would not agree to it. It came back here, and the canning part of the business was cut out on the Senate floor or in conference.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Since the Senator recalls the history of that great contest, I will say to the Senator that the bill passed the Senate, went to the House, and came back first from the House committee with nearly everything cut out. It was, as it was first reported to the House, practically an innocuous measure. It was only after a desperate battle, which aroused the interest and the indignation of the whole American people, that every feature of the original Senate bill, except two, was put back; and the two that were not put back were the provision in regard to the date on the cans and the one placing the cost of the inspection on the packers.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator will simply state facts, and not argue the case, because I intend to be brief.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is precisely what I am doing. Those are the facts about that matter.

Mr. WARREN. I have some facts here, and, with the consent of the Senate, I want to make this statement.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is the statement.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator ought to defer further interruption when I am occupying the floor by courtesy of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON]. The Senator says that it passed the Senate a second time. That is true, because it was well known when it passed here that it would be thrown out in conference. Perhaps the Senator did not know it, but every other Senator on this floor who had made any inquiry knew it. Now, if it had been reported from the Agricultural Committee the other day when it was requested, it would have been reported adversely. The Senator is informed, so he says, that they have had hearings over in the House committee. Certainly he will not claim that one of these parties has had any hearing before the committee of the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I never did say so.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator said yesterday that they had had hearings before the House. I hold here in my hand a volume of the 1908 hearings of the House containing something like 1,000 pages, and I will read all that was said on this question before the committee of the House.

Mr. COLE, of that committee, said:

Mr. Chairman, I was not here yesterday, and I would like to ask one question. How is the meat inspection coming on; is it satisfactory?

Doctor MELVIN said—and, by the way, he is head of the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Agricultural Department:

Doctor MELVIN. Very satisfactory.

Mr. COLE. Are you asking for any amendments of the law?

Doctor MELVIN. No, sir; we have not asked for any this year. We considered it advisable to work under the present law for two or more years and ascertain very definitely whether any essential changes were necessary before suggesting any. There have been several of minor importance that have occurred to me, and probably next year we may come in with a recommendation for these minor changes.

That is all there is in the hearings of the House this year.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Wyoming permit me?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Could the Senator in a few words tell the Senate why the date should not be put on the can?

Mr. WARREN. I am not permitted, as I view it, under the unanimous consent of the Senate to debate this question just now, as there is a motion before the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the omnibus claims bill. I will do that at the proper time.

In the hearings of the House for last year there is less than half of a page, and that only indirectly refers to this can-dating matter. If the Senator wishes, I will have it read at the desk. Does the Senator wish to have it read? There is less than a half page in the entire book of hearings. These two short unimportant items represent everything that has been done and said as to affording hearings to the outside world and those vitally interested. If the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate has a chairman who favors this measure, as the Senator assures us it has—and I have no reason to doubt it—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have his letter.

Mr. WARREN. He is certainly as safe with this subject in the hands of that committee as any other. The committee has not yet properly considered this question. On the other hand, here I have requests without number, letters and telegrams, sent me by great associations, great industries, asking to be heard.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not without number.

Mr. WARREN. Retail grocers' associations, the wholesale grocers' association, the packers' association, and others without number.

Mr. PERKINS. I will ask the acting chairman of the Committee on Agriculture if the author of the bill or any friends of the measure have asked for a hearing before the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. WARREN. Not, that I know of. It seems to be an individual matter resting alone with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE].

The members of the Committee on Agriculture, so far as I know their feeling, are ready to take up this question, are ready to have hearings, and are ready to consider whether the cans shall be labeled with the date, as to meats, and whether they shall label the cans which contain vegetables, such as corn and tomatoes, and fruit, and so forth.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is not included in this bill.

Mr. WARREN. True, but it is well known to those who have studied the question—it is well known to those who have used corn, tomatoes, and other vegetables from cans, that ptomaine poisoning exists in far more instances in them than in tinned meat, and occurs there in the ratio of 3 to 1, as compared with canned meats.

Mr. FULTON obtained the floor.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Oregon withhold his motion until I can answer the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FULTON. I hope the Senator from Indiana will not insist upon that request.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Wyoming has made certain statements of fact.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator can see it is going to lead to interminable debate. The Senate understands the situation very well. If it is opposed to taking up the bill which I have brought forward, it will say so. Then the Senator from Indiana can proceed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I desire to correct one or two misstatements unintentionally made by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. FULTON. One or two corrections will lead to a half hour's debate. I must insist on proceeding with the motion. I trust the Senator from Indiana will not consider it discourteous; but I have given way now to one on each side.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Oregon yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FULTON. What is it the Senator wants?

Mr. NELSON. I desire to report a bill from the Committee on Commerce and to ask for its present consideration. It is a very short bill.

Mr. FULTON. I will yield with the understanding that it leads to no discussion.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. NELSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 22009) authorizing the Secretary of War to remove certain obstructions to navigation from the main ship channel, Key West Harbor, Florida, and for other purposes, to report it favorably without amendment. At the instance of the chairman of the committee, who is absent, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I desire to state that it is simply a modification in a few instances of river and harbor appropriations of last session. It makes no new appropriations. It simply allows a modification and diversion in a few instances. That is all.

The bill was read the first time by its title.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to remove, or cause to be removed, certain reefs from the main ship channel, Key West Harbor, Florida, mentioned in a report made by Lieut. L. H. Beach to the Secretary of War on February 1, 1908, and the sum of $5,000 of the amount heretofore appropriated for improving the harbor at Key West and entrance thereto under the river and harbor act approved March 2, 1907, or so much of said sum of $5,000 as may be necessary, is hereby made available for such purpose.

Sec. 2. That the unexpended balance of the amount heretofore appropriated for the improvement of Chicago Harbor, or so much thereof as may be deemed advisable, be, and the same is hereby, made available, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, for expenditure on the existing project for the Chicago River.

Sec. 3. That so much as may be necessary of the amount heretofore appropriated, or authorized to be appropriated, for the maintenance of the South Pass of the Mississippi River, or for examinations and surveys of the South Pass of the Mississippi River, or for the improvement of the Southwest Pass of the Mississippi River, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, be used in dredging shoals in the said river between Cubits Gap and the Head of the Passes whenever it may become necessary to secure a depth of channel through said shoals of 35 feet, with a practical width.

Sec. 4. That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, apply the whole or any part of the unexpended balance of the amount heretofore appropriated for the improvement of the Duluth-Superior Harbor, Minnesota, to dredging inside the Duluth entrance thereto, as recommended in House Document No. 221, Sixtieth Congress, first session.

Sec. 5. That the provision in the river and harbor act approved March 2, 1907, relating to the construction of the Sandy Lake Reservoir Dam, Minnesota, is hereby amended by striking out the words "without a lock for steamboats."

Sec. 6. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to expend and to enter into a contract or contracts for the expenditure of so much as may be necessary of the amount heretofore appropriated or authorized to be appropriated for the improvement of the harbor at Milwaukee, Wis., for the improvement of the Kinnickinnick River or any part thereof inside the harbor, as heretofore provided by law, whenever and as soon as the city of Milwaukee shall have complied with the provisions set forth in House Document No. 120, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, and authorized by the river and harbor act approved March 3, 1905, and as amended by the act entitled "An act to amend the river and harbor act of March 3, 1905," approved June 30, 1906, so far as said provisions apply to the improvement of said Kinnickinnick River or any part thereof.

Sec. 7. That the whole or any part of the amount heretofore authorized to be appropriated for the construction of a dredge for Mobile Harbor, Alabama, with the exception of $5,000 for the preparation of plans for said dredge, may be used for dredging said harbor, and the Secretary of War, in his discretion, may enter into a contract or contracts for the performance of the work.

Sec. 8. That to make effective the provision in the river and harbor act approved March 2, 1907, for a survey of the Neversink River, New York, with a view to the removal of bars and other obstructions at and near its mouth, the scope of such survey be enlarged so as to include the Delaware River at and near the mouth of the Neversink River.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. FULTON. I now renew the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15372) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and Tucker acts.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That motion, if successful, will preclude the consideration of any other bill by the Senate unless there is a subsequent motion agreed to to take up something else.

Mr. ALDRICH. That would be true only up to 2 o'clock.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; the morning hour would be taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oregon to proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] to the amendment of the committee. It will be stated by the Secretary for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, line 14, after the word "Arkansas," it is proposed to insert "four thousand," so as to make the paragraph read:

To the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, Clarks-ville, Ark., $4,400.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not understand the procedure. Is the bill to be read through now, or are amendments to be considered as offered in the Senate?

Mr. FULTON. I could not understand the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. Has the bill been read to the Senate?

Mr. FULTON. We are now about to read the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understood the Secretary to state an amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. FULTON. The bill has been read to line 13, on page 40, I think.

Mr. OVERMAN. Have all of the Senate committee amendments been read?

Mr. ALDRICH. I would ask that the agreement under which the formal reading of the bill was dispensed with be read, in order that we may know under just what order we are proceeding.

Mr. FULTON. The former understanding—

Mr. ALDRICH. I think it had better be read at the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Record is not at hand. The Chair will have it sent for.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not understand the situation. Have all the Senate committee amendments been adopted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. FULTON. I do not understand the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to understand if the Senate committee amendments to the bill have been adopted.

Mr. ALDRICH. No. The bill has not been read through.

Mr. FULTON. The bill has not all been read.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then why should the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas be read at this time?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Amendments to committee amendments are in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. If there is no agreement and no record of any agreement, I ask that the regular order be followed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That the bill be read for committee amendments?

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the bill be read anyhow—the first formal reading of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, when the bill was up before it was requested—and I think the request was granted—that it should be read thoroughly, because there may be errors, omissions in names, amounts, and so forth, to be corrected as the reading progresses.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator from Rhode Island—

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FULTON. In one moment. I wish to make a statement. I understand that the Senator from Rhode Island requested that the agreement under which we proceeded on the prior consideration of the bill be read. I wish to inquire whether or not the Clerk has the agreement at hand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Clerk does not have it in hand. The Chair has sent for it, and as soon as it is here it will be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. FULTON. At the time the agreement was made I stated what the understanding was. As I recall it, it was that we proceed with the reading of the bill, and that the committee amendments should be first considered as they were reached, and that no other amendments should be offered until the committee amendments had been disposed of. Where a committee amendment was proposed, an amendment to it could be offered at the time. It was under that arrangement, as I recall it, that the Senator from Arkansas proposed the amendment on page 40. Pending the consideration of that amendment, the bill was laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has the Record of the date when the bill was last before the Senate.

Mr. FULTON. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg the Chair's pardon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon asked that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered; and it was so ordered by the Senate. The bill will now be read for the consideration of committee amendments.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I have not had an opportunity to examine the bill. There are certain interests in my State that had claims before the committee. I think some of them were considered in the House. I observe in the bill I have before me that thirty-five pages purport to be the bill as passed by the House, and all of those claims seem to have been disallowed by the Senate committee.

Mr. FULTON. I will explain to the Senator how that is. This bill consists, as the Senator will see, of a great many items; and they are grouped by States. In reporting amendments to the House bill there seemed to be two ways only. One was to strike out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and then report an amendment which would include the items as they came from the House, together with such additional items under each State heading as the committee determined in favor of. That obviated the necessity of reporting an amendment under each State and a separate amendment for each separate item. That, I understand, has been the course pursued always in reporting the omnibus claims bill from the Senate committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. So the bill contains all of the House provisions?

Mr. FULTON. If the Senate will allow me, I will make a little further statement. I ought to make it in order to give an understanding of the situation. The amended bill as reported by the Senate committee reinstates practically all of the House items. A few were omitted. This bill was reported once before by the Senate committee. When it was printed I discovered that through an error a number of items had been included which, under the rule that had been adopted by the committee, should have been excluded. I therefore asked to have the bill rereferred, and I sought to eliminate all such items, and reported the bill as the Senator now sees it, on the 16th day of March, 1908, with a number of House items and a number of items that had been in the previous report eliminated. That led to a great deal of dissatisfaction, because a number of Senators on the first report of the bill had notified constituents that their items were included in the bill. Realizing the embarrassing position it put them in, I said heretofore when the bill was up, and I state now that so far as I am concerned, I am willing to accept amendments reinstating all those items which appeared in the first bill that was reported by the Senate committee. I have prepared here a number of committee amendments—

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FULTON. In just a moment. I have prepared here in the shape of committee amendments to be offered these items that were excluded, and I shall offer them under the head of the respective States as they are reached in the reading of the bill. Now I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. HOPKINS. Just a moment.

Mr. McCREARY. I notice in this bill that the first thirty-five pages—

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—

Mr. FULTON. I have yielded to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McCREARY. Have been stricken out. There are lines drawn through them. Are all those claims in some other part of the bill?

Mr. FULTON. That is a phase of the matter I have just been attempting to explain.

Mr. McCREARY. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. FULTON. The committee, in considering the bill as it came from the House, pursued the course that has been followed heretofore in reporting these omnibus claims bills. The practice is to group various items under the heads of the States where the parties interested reside. There are always a great many amendments to be reported by the Senate committee. If we should report every item separately for each State, it would involve a vast number of items and a vast amount of labor and take an interminable time to dispose of them. Therefore the practice has been adopted of reporting an amendment striking out all the items in the House bill and then preparing, in the shape of one amendment, all the House items that are to be retained and the Senate items that are to be inserted.

Mr. McCREARY. I wish to ask the Senator another question. I have a number of amendments to offer to this bill, but I understand there is some agreement that we shall concur in the amendments of the committee in the first place, and that other amendments shall not be offered.

Mr. FULTON. I am not in a position to say there has been any agreement. I think there is a tentative understanding that no amendments will be proposed, at least so far as concerns the so-called "war claims" and "church claims."

I have found this to be the situation. If we include any more items in this bill, there will be no possibility of having it ultimately passed.

Mr. ALDRICH. I want to ask the Senator from Kentucky whether the agreement to which he refers is a public or private agreement?

Mr. McCREARY. I do not understand the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. I want to find out whether the agreement of which the Senator from Kentucky seems to have some knowledge is a public or private agreement.

Mr. McCREARY. I was myself endeavoring to get some information. I have some amendments to offer, but I have been told that there was such an agreement, and I was endeavoring to get some information from the chairman of the committee as to the agreement to which the Senator from Rhode Island refers. I am willing, if no other individual amendments are to be offered—so anxious am I to get the bill through as it is—to refrain from offering amendments.

Mr. FULTON. Whatever agreement exists is purely of a private nature, and is simply an understanding that has grown out of numerous conversations I have had with Senators representing those States whence come the great body of the items in the bill commonly called "war claims"—claims growing out of the civil war. I have said to them that I could not consent to urge the passage of this bill if more of those claims were going to be attached than those which I proposed to the bill by reinstating the items which I have explained were stricken out, because I know it would be utterly useless to present the bill in that shape—that is, with many more items added—and hope to secure its passage.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. What I desire information upon is the interest that Illinois has in this bill. I find on pages 8 and 9 of the House bill that there are sixteen or more different claims that were regarded as meritorious by the House committee and by the House, and received favorable consideration in that body. All of those claims have been stricken out by the Senate committee, and on pages 111 and 112 I find five or six claims allowed to persons in Illinois which seem to be in favor of entirely different parties than those represented in the bill as it passed the House. I should like to know from the Senator in charge of the bill why this wholesale rejection of House items has been made.

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator will allow me, I think on further investigation he will find that these items are all there.

Mr. HOPKINS. That can not be possible.

Mr. FULTON. Those are what are known as the difference between shore and sea pay claims. We have added a great many such items, but we collected them all together under one head.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I call the attention of the Senator to page 47 of the bill he has in his hand, and he will find there the items, commencing with "Martha J. Bowen," that were on pages 8 and 9 of the bill, which were there stricken out.

Mr. HOPKINS. I find that the Senator from Utah is correct as to some of the items. I thank him very much for calling my attention to that part of the bill.

The reason why I raised this question was because I had understood from the chairman of the committee that these claims were classed under the States, and finding "Illinois" on page 111 I supposed that the items for Illinois in the bill were under that heading.

Mr. FULTON. That applies to a certain class of items. There are certain classes of items, as the difference between shore and sea pay and the French spoliation claims, that are grouped under their respective headings.

Mr. HOPKINS. Without taking any further time of the chairman of the committee, I should like to ask him if all the claims from Illinois that were favorably passed upon in the House are in the bill?

Mr. FULTON. They are not all in the printed bill, but I have arranged to offer amendments under the head of each State, reinstating every one.

Mr. HOPKINS. So the claims that were favorably passed upon in the House will receive favorable consideration here?

Mr. FULTON. Such as do not appear in the printed bill I expect to propose amendments to reinstate.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNTER. I understood the Senator from Oregon to state that there was no agreement with reference to offering amendments to the bill.

Mr. FULTON. I said no public agreement.

Mr. PAYNTER. I mean public agreement. But I understood the Senator to say that there was a private agreement, or arrangement, or tacit understanding in regard to proposed amendments, and I wish to know if that has reference alone to war claims.

Mr. FULTON. I do not say it precludes them.

Mr. PAYNTER. What I am trying to get at is this: If a Senator has what he considers a meritorious claim—other than a war claim—to present by an amendment should the private arrangement mentioned by the Senator from Oregon stand in the way of his doing so? In other words, does the agreement relate only to war claims?

Mr. FULTON. The only request, so far as I was concerned, applied to war claims. I say I have no understanding, but I have talked with certain members. I will say to the Senator that I expect to oppose as earnestly as I can every character of amendment except those the committee have prepared and will report, and if more go on—and of course if some go on, others will—the bill may as well be dropped, and the probability is that I shall drop it.

Mr. PAYNTER. I understand that the Senator from Oregon will offer amendments to the bill, which will embrace all claims omitted in this bill which were embraced by the House bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say, Mr. President, if this bill is to pass at all, it is to pass as it is now, and there are no claims to be offered and accepted by the committee other than those which are in the original bill and those which will be offered by the chairman of the committee. Any further claim than those offered by the committee is going to be opposed.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have no special interest in the bill; I am not on the committee; but there is one thing I want to suggest to the Senator from Oregon. No private arrangement can bind the Senate. No understanding between himself and members of the body can bind the Senate or any Senator in moving any amendment he may see fit.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I hope the Senator did not understand me as contending otherwise. I could not bind the Senate, and I do not undertake to bind the Senate. I said there was no public agreement, but we had this understanding. Otherwise, I knew it would be utterly useless to attempt to bring up the bill.

Mr. TELLER. What I want to say is that the committee can not come here with any private arrangement that will bind anybody.

Mr. FULTON. I have yet to hear of anyone who contends that such an agreement could bind anyone.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon what proportion of the bill in items and in amounts provides for the payment for the use or destruction of property during the civil war.

Mr. FULTON. I have it here in the report. There are miscellaneous Court of Claims findings under the Bowman Act provided for in the bill, and they are nearly all of the character the Senator mentions.

Mr. McLAURIN. I did not catch what the Senator from Oregon said.

Mr. FULTON. I was about to state that the bill carries, as presented here, $2,200,001.82.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FULTON. In just a second, if the Senator will bear with me. The amendments I propose to add will carry it up, as I recall it, to something like $150,000, or more, in addition.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FULTON. In just a moment. I wish to answer the Senator from Rhode Island.

Of this amount $985,747 are Court of Claims findings, almost entirely confined to the class of claims known as war claims. Miscellaneous claims which have heretofore been approved by committee or committees and passed one or both Houses amount to $533,453. These are very largely—I suppose I may safely say 80 or 85 per cent—claims of this character. So I think it is easy to say that two-thirds, and then I am on perfectly safe ground, are of the character of claims known as war claims.

Mr. OVERMAN. What proportion of those are church claims?

Mr. FULTON. A very large proportion. I would not undertake to state without having made some investigation, so as to arrive at a conclusion, but a very large proportion of them are of that character.

Mr. OVERMAN. About three-fourths.

Mr. FULTON. No; I should not say three-fourths, but I should say nearly half.

Mr. OVERMAN. Half are for churches?

Mr. FULTON. I should think so.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the civil war closed forty-three years ago. There have been each year during that period appropriations made for property used and destroyed during the civil war. Those appropriations unfortunately are increasing in amount. There should be some limitation placed upon this kind of appropriations. Congress has erected machinery; I will not undertake to say but that the machinery is used properly, but it is turning out claims forty-three years after they arose and when there can be no witnesses or testimony on the part of the Government, or very few witnesses in any event, as to the character of the claims or their validity.

It seems to me that there ought to be an end to this somewhere. I think Senators upon the other side and upon this side ought to agree that there should be some legislation looking to a suspension of this work of paying claims nearly half a century after they arose. I am quite sure the Senators from the Southern States, the States where most of these claims arise, would be very glad to be relieved of the responsibility of this continuous performance of taking up and considering claims of which they themselves can have but very little knowledge. I hope this committee or some committee will at a very early day bring in here some legislation that will bring this matter to a close.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FULTON. In just a moment. I wish to make a suggestion in response to the observations of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The only way I can see by which we can approximate the desired end suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island—for it is an end very much desired—is to repeal section 14 of what is known as the "Tucker Act." I have prepared an amendment which I propose to offer to this bill repealing section 14 of the Tucker Act, under which, and only under which, can claims of the character the Senator mentions be referred to the Court of Claims. We have on the statute books to-day legislation which bars all of those claims.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FULTON. I will yield in a moment, if the Senator will kindly wait. I have his request in mind, but I want to explain this matter while I am upon the subject.

We have in the statutes now laws which bar by limitation all of these claims, but Congress refers them to the Court of Claims, parties go before the court and prove their claims, and, as the Senator from Rhode Island says, the Government is absolutely helpless and at their mercy. They go down and they dig up an old servant, who testifies that he was alive at the time, that he remembers the situation forty-five or fifty years ago, and that he knows at that time they had exactly so many yellow hens, so many turkeys, so many spotted calves, so many heifers, and so forth, and makes a complete inventory. Nobody can say that he does not know it, because nobody else knows anything about it; the Government is barred; and the result is that the court is of necessity compelled to return findings in favor of the claimant.

Now, the only way I can see to bring the consideration of these claims to a close is to repeal section 14 of the Tucker Act, under which this class of claims is referred to the Court of Claims. That would not do away with referring to the Court of Claims matters arising out of contract or any other just claim against the Government, because they can all be referred under the Bowman Act. The Bowman Act, however, expressly excludes the reference of this character of claims, and they are provided for under section 14 of the Tucker Act.

I intend, when we reach that point, to propose an amendment which will repeal section 14 of the Tucker Act.

Now I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I do not suppose there is any Senator more anxious to get final adjudication of all the questions of claims that can be propounded than I am. I take it that every Senator is anxious to get that done, and it can be done by the repeal of both the Bowman and the Tucker acts. But when that is done there ought to be some provision within a certain limited period of time when those who have claims which they want to assert against the Government for the destruction—or if not for the destruction, then for the use—of their property by the Federal Government to present those claims and have them adjudicated.

Mr. FULTON. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that that has been done in previous statutes, and that the time limit has long since expired. But these claims are referred to the Court of Claims, and we tell the court to find whether or not there is any reason advanced or excuse offered whereby the bar of the statute should be waived. Of course the claimants can always offer something. They will say they were sick—

Mr. McLAURIN. Will the Senator allow me to continue, and not take me off the floor?

Mr. FULTON. I was merely answering the Senator's remark.

Mr. McLAURIN. There was what was known as the "Southern Claims Commission," which, as I understand, lasted about two years. It was established shortly after the war. Nobody who did not go through that period in the South has any conception of the confusion that existed there.

COMMODITY CLAUSE OF INTERSTATE-COMMERCE LAW.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law.

Mr. KEAN. If no one desires to speak on the joint resolution, I should like to have a vote.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I can not say that I especially desire to speak, but I do desire to express my appreciation of the indulgence Senators have shown me in from day to day continuing this matter until I could be present. I appreciate that consideration very much, indeed.

Inasmuch as the matter is before the Senate, this is probably an opportune time to call attention to a report that has been sent here by the Interstate Commerce Commission since we last had the joint resolution under consideration.

Mr. FULTON rose.

Mr. FORAKER. Before I proceed, let me ask the Senator from Oregon if I am interfering with him.

Mr. FULTON. I only wanted to inquire of the Senator about how much time he will take up with the consideration of the pending joint resolution, because I wish to give notice that immediately on the conclusion of the consideration of the matter the Senator has in hand for the present I shall move to proceed with the consideration of the omnibus claims bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I would be glad to give the Senator an intelligent and satisfactory answer, but that is impossible. I do not know whether any other Senator wants to speak on the pending joint resolution or not. I want to speak very briefly, and not exactly in opposition to it. I think it is perhaps true, as some Senators are insisting, that some kind of action ought to be taken. Yet I do not feel so much impressed with the necessity for action as I was before we had laid before us the reports to which I am about to call attention.

I was proceeding to say when the colloquy occurred between the Senator from Oregon and myself, that when I was last addressing the Senate on this subject, a week or more ago, I called attention to the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission, in answering the resolution which the Senate had passed calling for information on this general subject, had made, with respect to the information called for in regard to the Western Maryland Railroad, the following statement. I read the third paragraph of this first answer just as it was sent to the Senate:

Third. Since the Senate resolution was received we have communicated by telephone with the receiver of the Western Maryland Railroad, and are informed by him that he is not complying with the provision in question. He further states that his reasons for such non-compliance will be furnished to the Commission at an early day. When those reasons are received they will be transmitted to the Senate.

The remarks I made on the occasion referred to were influenced somewhat by that character of report on that particular point. I expressed the hope at that time that the Senate would not be required to take action on the joint resolution until we had this supplemental report from the Interstate Commerce Commission, communicating to us what in fact were the reasons why the receiver, according to their report, of the Western Maryland Railroad was not complying with the law.

A day or two later, and while I was confined at my house with illness, the Interstate Commerce Commission sent to the Senate what has been printed as Senate Document No. 478. It is a communication dated May 13, 1908, but it was not received by the Senate, I believe, until two or three days after that date. It is a mere submission of a communication which the Interstate Commerce Commission has received from the receiver of the Western Maryland Railroad Company. The communication is dated May 11, 1908. The Interstate Commerce Commission submitted it without any comments whatever. The second paragraph of the receiver's report, made to the Interstate Commerce Commission and by the Interstate Commerce Commission submitted to the Senate, is as follows:

The Commission is in error in its understanding, as stated to the Senate, that it is informed by me that, in the operation of the Western Maryland Railroad, I am not complying with the commodity clause of the Hepburn bill. I had no intention of so informing the Commission, and such is not the case, your telephone inquiry having been either misunderstood by me or my reply to your representative at the telephone having been misconstrued.

It makes a great deal of difference, Mr. President, if it be true, as stated by the receiver, that instead of not complying with the law he is in fact complying with the law. But whether he is in fact complying with the law is a mere deduction, as appears from what follows, and it is a deduction with respect to which I submit there may be a difference of opinion. There is certainly room for a good deal of doubt and debate.

The receiver attaches to his formal report a number of exhibits. The first is an official report made by the president of the Western Maryland Railroad Company, Mr. B. F. Bush, who is also the receiver, dated March 4, 1908, to the board of directors of that company. This report was made by him prior to the appointment of the receiver; it is a report setting forth the necessity for the appointment of a receiver. It sets forth the general financial situation of the company and its inability to meet its maturing liabilities. Speaking of the different liens upon the property of the company, he says, commencing at the bottom of page 3:

The general lien and convertible mortgage of the company is in greater degree, and the stock vitally, interested in the preservation of the coal revenues of the company from the adverse conditions of the commodity clause of the rate bill.

That clause is as follows:

I ask the Secretary to read down to the point I have indicated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

From and after May 1, 1908, it shall be unlawful for any railroad company to transport from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to any foreign country, any article or commodity, other than timber and the manufactured products thereof, manufactured, mined, or produced by it, or under its authority, or which it may own in whole, or in part, or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect, except such articles or commodities as may be necessary and intended for its use in the conduct of its business as a common carrier.

The coal properties of this company are rightfully owned and operated under charter of the State of West Virginia, and the transportation and commercial features of the company's coal business have been so conducted that no charge of improper methods or abuse of any character was forthcoming in response to the invitations for complaints extended by the Federal Commission in its protracted investigation of the methods and business of the coal producing and coal carrying roads. The coal properties are a material part of the security for the company's mortgages and the revenues from its coal business can not be sacrificed or seriously diminished without materially affecting income applicable to its junior securities. The law can not be generally observed, in the extreme construction of which it is susceptible, without either a wholesale marketing of coal lands, impracticable except at appalling loss to proprietary and mortgage interests, or a restriction of production to the fuel requirements of the roads, entailing vast loss of revenue to them and inevitable exactions from the public.

In such a possible extreme construction of the law any other course than one of these two, no matter how confidently and in what good faith adopted, may be adjudged an evasion not protecting against the extreme penalties prescribed for infractions of the law.

It is proper to state that in the opinion of counsel there is substantial ground for the view that this feature of the rate bill, if constitutional, is not applicable to this company's situation, and that even if this be not so, it is practicable to so modify this situation, without materially affecting revenues, as to meet any just purpose of the law. But to mistakenly treat the law as inapplicable or to make any mistaken change in the company's relations to its coal interests, with a view to avoid its application—in short, to make, even for a brief period, any mistaken forecasts of the judgment of the courts—involves the risk of incurring penalties in overwhelming accumulation.

I think it must be clear that the law can not be ignored until it has been declared invalid by the court; that it can not safely be treated as inapplicable except with the sanction of the court, and that, if valid, the relations of the company to its coal interests can not be safely and conclusively remoulded except with the approval of the court.

Mr. FORAKER. In accordance with the recommendations made by the president of the company in that report from which the extract has just been read, a receiver was applied for within a day or two after the date of that report. I have not the exact date before me, but that is not material. It was almost immediately thereafter. The complainant bringing the bill upon which a receiver was appointed was the Bowling Green Trust Company, which was the trustee named in the mortgage that has just been referred to. There were two or three different mortgages, but it is the general lien and convertible mortgage that I refer to. In the bill asking for the appointment of a receiver occurs the following, which I will ask the Secretary to read as indicated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

"Twelfth. Your orator further alleges and shows that the West Virginia Central and Pittsburgh Railway Company, all of whose capital stock is, as hereinabove set forth, pledged and deposited with the Mercantile Trust Company, as trustee of the first mortgage of the defendant company, and constitutes a part of the trust estate under said general lien and convertible mortgage to your orator, as trustee, is, as duly authorized by its charter, and has for a long time been, the owner of certain valuable and extensive coal lands, coal mines, mining rights and mining operations, located in the State of West Virginia, embracing a coal area of over 100,000 acres in extent, and that said coal properties form a substantial and valuable portion of the security for the bonds of the defendant company; that in and by an act of Congress entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, approved June 29, 1906," it is provided, among other things, as follows:

"From and after May 1, 1908, it shall be unlawful for any railroad company to transport from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to any foreign country, any article or commodity other than timber and the manufactured products thereof, manufactured, mined, or produced by it or under its authority, or which it may own or hold in part, or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect, except such articles or commodities as may be necessary and intended for its use in the conduct of its business as a common carrier."

Your orator alleges, on information and belief, that serious questions may be presented and asserted under the provisions of the act of Congress above recited as to the application of the same, if constitutional and valid, to the defendant company by reason of its ownership of all of the stock of the West Virginia Central and Pittsburgh Railway Company, pledged as hereinbefore mentioned, and that a determination of said questions, which can only effectively be had in the courts, is material and vital to your orator and to the holders of said general lien and convertible bonds of the defendant company. That a large part of the revenues of the defendant company applicable to the payment of the interest upon its general lien and convertible mortgage bonds is derived through the transportation by the defendant company of coal mined from the property owned by the West Virginia Central and Pittsburgh Railway Company, and that the loss of such revenues would greatly and seriously and irretrievably impair the security for the bonds issued under said general lien and convertible mortgage to your orator, as trustee.

Mr. FORAKER. I will ask the Secretary to also read paragraph 13.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOPKINS in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Thirteenth. Your orator further alleges that said general lien and convertible mortgage to your orator, as trustee, specifically pledges to your orator all the rents, issues, profits, tolls, and other income of the premises embraced in said general lien and convertible mortgage, and that the income and revenues of the premises embraced in said mortgage are an essential part of the security of your orator, and your orator is entitled to have such income and revenues forthwith, immediately and continuously appropriated to the payment of the interest upon said bonds secured by said mortgage, and that said mortgage specifically pledges to your orator the franchise to maintain and operate the railroad and property in said mortgage described.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will ask the Senator from Ohio is this a petition for a receivership or for an injunction?

Mr. FORAKER. This is a petition for the appointment of a receiver. I have had the Secretary read that part of it which sets forth what the assets of the company were, showing that, among other securities, the Western Maryland Railroad Company owned all of the capital stock of the West Virginia Central and Pittsburg Railway Company, and that the last-named railroad company was the owner of large coal-mining properties situated in the State of West Virginia which, by its charter as originally granted, it was authorized to own and to operate.

In accordance with the prayer of the bill, a receiver was appointed. He entered into possession of the property and commenced to operate it—the coal property and the railroad property jointly, as the company had been previously doing—in accordance with the orders of the court administering the receivership. Later, a few days or a few weeks, perhaps—the date is not given in this report—a supplemental petition was filed by the trustee, complainant, the Bowling Green Trust Company, in which it set forth a great many facts not necessary to be mentioned here, and with respect to all of which it asked what it regarded as appropriate relief.

I call attention to, and ask the Secretary to read, paragraphs 28, 29, 30, and 31 of this supplemental petition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Twenty-eighth. Your petitioner further alleges that heretofore and on or about the 11th day of March, 1908, the receiver appointed herein filed in this cause a petition setting forth the situation of the defendant company with reference to the coal lands and mining operations owned by the West Virginia Central and Pittsburg Railway Company, all of whose capital stock is deposited and pledged with the trustee of the first mortgage of the defendant company and is also a portion of the mortgaged and trust estate under the general lien and convertible mortgage of the defendant company; in said petition it is alleged that said coal properties and the revenues derived therefrom form a substantial and valuable portion of the security for the bonds of the defendant company issued under its said general lien and convertible mortgage, and that a large portion of the funds provided through the initial issue of said first mortgage bonds and of said general lien and convertible mortgage bonds of the defendant company was applied and used in the acquisition of said coal lands and mining operations through the purchase and acquisition of the capital stock of the West Virginia Central and Pittsburg Railway Company, the owner of said coal lands, and that the various persons and corporations, holders for value of said general lien and convertible mortgage bonds, purchased, acquired, and hold the same in consideration of the security afforded for the payment of said bonds, and the interest thereon, by said coal lands and mining operations, and the revenues to be derived therefrom.

That in and by said petition it was prayed, among other things, that said receiver be ordered and directed to continue or direct the continuance of the operation of said coal lands and mining operations, and to collect and receive the tolls, income, and earnings derived from such operation, and to pay and discharge all indebtedness necessarily contracted in connection therewith, and to hold and apply the surplus revenues resulting from such operation as a part of the mortgaged or trust estate in the possession of said receiver, subject to the further order and direction of this court.

That upon the filing of said petition an order was entered on the 11th day of March, 1908, by this court, and therein prayed, and said receiver was directed to hold and apply the surplus revenues resulting from the operation of said coal lands and mining operations as a part of the mortgaged or trust estate in the possession of said receiver, subject to the further order and direction of this court.

Twenty-ninth. Your petitioner further alleges that in its bill of complaint filed herein, reference is made to a certain act of Congress approved June 29, 1906, in which it is provided, among other things, as follows:

"From and after May 1, 1908, it shall be unlawful for any railroad company to transport from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to any foreign country, any article or commodity other than timber and the manufactured products thereof, manufactured, mined, or produced by it or under its authority, or which it may own or hold in part, or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect, except such articles or commodities as may be necessary and intended for its use in the conduct of its business as a common carrier."

Thirtieth. Your petitioner further alleges, upon information and belief, that as soon as the act of Congress above mentioned becomes effective, to wit, on the 1st day of May, 1908, the Attorney-General of the United States contemplates the institution of appropriate proceedings to test the validity, constitutionality, and applicability of said act of Congress as affecting various common carriers engaged in the business of interstate commerce, to the end that an early and speedy determination of said questions may be had by the Supreme Court of the United States, so that due compliance and observance of said act of Congress, so far as the same is ultimately held to be applicable and enforceable, may be had by all corporations affected by the same. And your petitioner further alleges that in its judgment no steps or proceedings should be instituted or taken in this cause which would conflict with or prevent the speedy and early consummation of the plans and steps to be taken by the duly constituted authorities of the United States for the above purposes, or that would embarrass said authorities in the steps and proceedings so to be instituted and which might result in a confusion of orders and decrees.

Your petitioner is informed and believes that the following official announcement has been authorized by the Attorney-General of the United States and made by the Department of Justice:

"What is generally known as the 'commodities clause' of the Hepburn bill, approved June 29, 1906, reads as follows:

"From and after May 1, 1908, it shall be unlawful for any railroad company to transport from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to any foreign country, any article or commodity, other than timber and the manufactured products thereof, manufactured, mined, or produced by it, or under its authority, or which it may own in whole or in part or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect, except such articles or commodities as may be necessary and intended for its use in the conduct of its business as a common carrier."

"It is clear that this clause, if valid, will make it impossible for many railroads which own coal mines to transport the coal to market after the date named, and it is understood that some of these railroads have been advised by their respective counsel that the above-quoted provision of law is unconstitutional. The Department of Justice contemplates the institution of proceedings as soon as possible after the date named, whereby a prompt determination of this question by the Supreme Court of the United States may be obtained. It is expected that the railroads concerned will cooperate with the Government to this end, and if they do so in good faith, and if they in good faith and immediately obey the decision of the Supreme Court when rendered, it is not the purpose of the Department of Justice to prosecute them for a failure to comply with the terms of the act pending the decision of the Supreme Court."

Thirty-first. Your petitioner is advised that in the opinion of counsel said act of Congress is unconstitutional, and that, if held to be constitutional, the same is not applicable to the situation of the defendant company as disclosed by the record in this case. And your petitioner alleges that a more orderly and proper determination of the question can be had through proceedings instituted by the United States of America, as aforesaid, than by a precipitation of the question as affecting the conditions of the defendant company by other and different proceedings taken at the instance of your petitioner or of others interested in the affairs of the defendant company; and your petitioner further alleges that, pending the final determination of said question, it is of vital importance to the holders of all mortgage bonds of the defendant company that the operation of said coal lands and mining operations and the results thereof be separated and segregated from the rest of the property of defendant company in the possession of the receiver herein, and specifically and separately set apart for the benefit of the holders of all of said mortgage bonds, and that a separate and distinct account of such operations be had and made to this court, and the net revenues resulting therefrom applied specifically for the benefit of the holders of all mortgage bonds of the defendant company and of any receiver's certificates that may be issued as hereinafter prayed through the application of said net revenues to the payment of the maturing interest upon said mortgage bonds and to the payment of any such receiver's certificates in proper order of priority. And your petitioner further alleges that, in the operation of said coal lands and mining operations, pending the final determination of the above question it is practicable and advisable that the same should be operated as if they were separate and distinct and independent properties; and that it is entirely practicable that the said coal properties be operated under separate orders of this court relating solely to their management and operation as if the same were operated under entirely different and distinct ownership and management from the operation of the railroad properties in the possession of the receiver herein, as to the operation of which railroad properties separate and distinct orders of the court may be entered and separate and distinct accounts of operation made and filed by the receiver herein; and that the revenues of said properties may be separately stated and kept and separate and distinct accounts thereof rendered to this court.

Mr. FORAKER. At what point did the Secretary stop reading?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary stopped reading at the end of paragraph 31.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask the Secretary to also read the thirty-second paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Thirty-second. Your petitioner further alleges that inasmuch as the net revenues and income derived from the operation of said coal properties are, as your petitioner has alleged, a material and valuable part of the security for all mortgage bonds of the defendant company, including its first mortgage bonds, and will also form a substantial part of the security for any receiver's certificates which may be issued under the direction of this court as prayed by this petition, it is proper and right that said net revenues, as the same are accumulated from time to time, be paid into this court by said receiver and be held and applied to the extent thereof, primarily to the payment of the accruing interest upon said first mortgage bonds of the defendant company and of the interest and principal of any receiver's certificate which may be issued, as aforesaid, for the purpose of meeting and paying interest accruing upon said first mortgage bonds, and that the surplus (if any) over and above the amount necessary to meet said requirements be held and applied under the direction of this court to the payment of interest maturing upon the general lien and convertible mortgage bonds of the defendant company; and, further, that if any surplus still remains, the same be held to be ultimately applied and disposed of pursuant to the further order and direction of this court.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, upon that supplemental petition the court, on the 27th day of March, 1908, made an order. That order is found at pages 40 and 41 of this document. I ask the Secretary to read so much of the order as relates to these coal lands and their operation. He will find that on page 41 already marked. I ask him to read as indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that, until the further order and direction of this court, the coal properties and coal business of the defendant company, as the same is described in said petition and as set forth in the record of this case, be separately operated and be and stand segregated and sequestered and be operated and carried on for and in the exclusive interest of the petitioner as mortgagee, and the net revenues thereof, as well as any net revenues arising from the operation of the Davis Coal and Coke Company, be separated and segregated from the net revenues arising from the operation of the railroads and other properties in the possession of the receiver herein; and that said net revenues of said coal properties and coal business be applied to the payment of the interest maturing upon the first mortgage bonds of the defendant company, as well as the payment of the principal and interest upon any receiver's certificates issued as herein authorized, and the surplus, if any, as this court may by further order direct; and that, to this end, said receiver keep and file separate and distinct accounts and reports of the operation of the same, and use and apply the gross revenues arising from the operation of the coal properties and coal business to the payment of all necessary expenses of operation of the same and all taxes and proper charges in respect thereof, and that the amount of said revenues be deposited from time to time in separate accounts and as this court may direct; and, further, that said net revenues accruing prior to the date of maturity of the receiver's certificate issued as by this order authorized be primarily applied to the payment and satisfaction of the principal and interest of said receiver's certificates.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, from the extracts which have been read by the Secretary from Senate Document 478, it must be manifest to all who have followed the reading that the receiver of the Western Maryland Railroad Company, when he said in his report to the Interstate Commerce Commission that he was complying with this law, meant nothing more than that, under the orders of the court of which he was the receiver, he was operating the railroad and the coal mines jointly, but that he was keeping separate accounts of the operation of the same, one account for the railroad and another account for the coal-mining properties. There is no pretense that anybody else has been called in to operate the coal mines. The receiver himself is doing it, the same receiver who is operating the railroad.

In view of that fact, it seems to me it may be very well doubted whether or not he is complying with the law. He says he is; but in view of the fact that he is operating the road and the coal properties as the officer of the court and that the court has evidently so decided and so instructed him, I have no disposition to take issue with his statement.

I simply accept the situation as we find it. I call attention to it, not for the purpose of criticising the orders, not for the purpose of complaining that this course has been entered upon, but only for the purpose of pointing out the insuperable difficulty that has been thrust upon this particular railroad, in common with many other railroads, by this commodity clause, and to show that they have been compelled to resort to this kind of an evasion, as I would call it, or rather attempted evasion, if it were not pursuant to an order of the court. They have been compelled to resort to it in order to escape the most striking kind of disasters and hardships, not only to the railroads, but to the consumers of coal, whose supply would be cut off if the railroads were to comply literally with the requirements of the statute.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he says they are keeping separate accounts of the coal being mined and sold from the other income of the road?

Mr. FORAKER. I assume that they are, because the order of the court so requires. The supplemental petition from which I had extracts read, filed by the trustee, the Bowling Green Trust Company, sets forth the requirements of this statute and the necessity of complying with it in some manner or other, and it applies to the court for leave to keep separate accounts as a way in which apparently, in the opinion of that trustee, the statute could be complied with. The court makes an order in correspondence with the petition that is presented to it, that there shall be separate accounts kept. There is no stopping of the mining operations of the company, and there is no stopping of the hauling of coal in interstate commerce. They are going on just as they did before; the sole and only difference between now and heretofore being that they are keeping separate accounts. The order expressly provides that the net income arising from the operation of the coal-mining properties as well as the net income arising from the operation of the railroads, shall be applied upon the mortgage indebtedness of the company to meet its interest and upon other demands as they from time to time arise.

Now, the remark I wanted to make in the first place is that it would not seem to be necessary to adopt this resolution if by simply keeping separate accounts this law can be complied with, for that is a very easy thing to do. The receiver apparently finds it an easy thing to do in this case, but I apprehend, Mr. President, that when this clause is put to the test it will be found that keeping separate accounts in the way provided by this order will not be held by the court to be a compliance with this statute.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But it indicates, does it not, a disposition upon the part of the company to recognize the law?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, all the way through the law is recognized. I have called attention to the fact and had extracts read to show the fact that the president of the company recommended the appointment of a receiver on the ground that this law was to take effect on the 1st day of May, 1908, and if it should be enforced against them it would be impossible for them to comply with the requirements of the statute. They wanted, for that reason, to put themselves under the shelter and the protection of the court, so that whatever they did might be by order of the court and they might be protected.

Then I pointed out that the court in all its orders has recognized the law and has recognized the necessity of complying with it; but yet, after everybody's ingenuity has been taxed, apparently there is no effort to comply with it, except only in a way which, I think, is a mere evasion, or attempted evasion, by keeping separate accounts. I do not know any other way in which they could have gone on with their operations than in some such way as that, and if they did not go on in that way it would be necessary to comply literally with the requirements of the statute, that on the 1st day of May they should stop hauling coal in interstate commerce; and that, I was about saying when the Senator from Michigan interrupted me, would have been a hardship difficult to overestimate, not only upon the properties concerned but upon the consumers whose coal supply would have been cut off.

As I said the other day in the course of the remarks I made here, take the hard-coal companies alone—the anthracite-coal companies. Last year they shipped out of the State of Pennsylvania into New Jersey and New York and New England more than 50,000,000 tons of coal. If by merely keeping separate accounts, as the judge in this case has ordered may be done, they can comply with the law, they can go on without trouble, and it is not necessary to legislate; but if in that way or in some other way they can not comply with the law, and the law should be held constitutional and should be enforced, they must stop hauling coal across the State line, and thus you will have a disaster visited upon the American people the like of which we have never known before as the result of legislation.

I call attention to all this simply to show that here is a railroad in the hands of lawyers learned in the law, and of a United States judge who is evidently undertaking to administer the law honestly and faithfully. They are all taxed to find a way to avoid the difficulties which this commodity clause has imposed upon them, and this separation of accounts is all they have been able to do.

It seems to me that it would be unwise, Mr. President, for us now simply to postpone the day for twenty months or nineteen months when the penalties prescribed shall be imposed, and that, instead of doing that, we ought here and now to make the law what it was our duty to have made it at the time when we enacted the rate bill, and that is to make it apply prospectively.

Mr. President, I will not stand here and argue that we can not interfere with vested property rights, and that an attempt to do that would be unconstitutional. The law will necessarily be held invalid whenever applied to a case of that kind. It is not necessary to make an argument about that. Neither will I stand here to make an argument now, in the light of our experience, in favor of the policy or the wisdom of the policy of preventing railroads from engaging in any other business than that of common carriers. That is right. They ought not to have any other business; but we can not shut our eyes to the fact that fifty years ago they were invited to have other business; twenty-five years ago, ten years ago—I do not think it has been more than fifteen or twenty years at the outside since the State of West Virginia granted this special charter to the West Virginia Central and Pittsburgh road, mentioned in this bill of complaint, and in that charter granted by the legislature it is specially provided that the road shall have the right to acquire coal lands and to develop them and to transport coal in commerce, interstate as well as State.

Now, we must recognize that condition of things. It is idle, it is futile, for us to disregard it, and when we do disregard it we bring to naught the good purpose which we had in undertaking to confine railroads to the business of common carriers.

What I think we ought to do is, instead of adopting the resolution offered by the Senator from West Virginia, to adopt the substitute which I offered here by way of amendment, a substitute which simply provides that after the date when we passed the rate law, the 20th day of June, 1906, this provision shall have effect. That is to say, that no railroad shall be allowed to haul any commodity of its own production or in which it has any interest, except only for its own use, which it acquired subsequent to that date.

I do not care to address the Senate at any further length on the subject. I understand the Senator from Wisconsin desires to speak. I want to surrender the floor to him or to anybody else who wants to take it, with the single remark that I think the difficulties presented by the record sent here by the Western Maryland Railroad receiver are great enough to admonish us that we ought now without any hesitation, although it is pretty nearly the last day of the session, to pass a substitute that will cure this difficulty once and for all.

Mr. STEWART. Before the Senator from Ohio takes his seat, I should like to ask him if he thinks, under the Constitution of the United States, it is within the power of Congress to inhibit the transportation from one State to another of any article innocuous in character, whether owned by a corporation or by an individual. I mark the difference between regulation, as the Senator will observe, and inhibition.

Mr. FORAKER. And prohibition. I have always been of the opinion that there is a difference between regulation and prohibition as to everything to be transported by the common carriers of this country, but of late years the Supreme Court of the United States has been making some distinctions and some discriminations. I will not take the time to go into that now, but my own opinion is that it is not competent for the Congress, in the exercise of its power to regulate interstate commerce given it by the Constitution, to prohibit transportation in commerce of any commodity of legitimate character, as commerce in coal or any other legitimate commodity.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio if he knows of any case in which the Supreme Court of the United States have held that it is within the power of Congress to prohibit the transportation from one State to another of an article useful and necessary and in no manner noxious?

Mr. FORAKER. I do not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The only case I now recall upon that subject, I will say to the Senator, is the lottery case, and of course that was a decision by a divided court.

Mr. FORAKER. I was referring to the lottery cases and to some of the statutes and decisions in respect to the transportation of liquor and commodities of that character that were thought to be obnoxious.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator know of a case decided either by the Supreme Court or any other Federal court in which a law prohibiting any article of any nature from interstate commerce was not sustained?

Mr. FORAKER. I do not recall any such case at this moment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I can say to the Senator that there has not been any.

Mr. FORAKER. But the Congress has never enacted a law that I have any recollection of at the moment whereby it undertook to prohibit, so as to make for the Supreme Court a question of the kind the Senator suggests.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I will not detain the Senator on his feet any longer, but Congress has passed upward of fifteen or twenty such laws.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator name them?

Mr. STEWART. In the interest of the public health.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Some had no relation to the public health, such as the law prohibiting the transportation of insects of certain kinds. I especially cite the law prohibiting gold and silver goods, not noxious in themselves, not injurious either to the health or morals of the people.

There is a large number of laws. I gave a list of them last year.

Mr. FORAKER. I am familiar with that legislation, and I think the Senator will find that in every instance it was put upon the ground that it was necessary to the preservation of the public health or for the promotion of the public good.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator will find, on examination, that he is not accurate there. In some of the laws the Senator has asked me about—

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator contend that it would be competent for Congress to prohibit the hauling of wheat or corn or barley or potatoes or coal in interstate commerce?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That very question was brought up in one or two decisions affecting the embargo laws at the beginning of our Government, and it was there held that we might put on an embargo if Congress thought the interests of the nation demanded it.

Mr. FORAKER. That was with respect to foreign commerce, undoubtedly. That is quite a different thing.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No. If the Senator will permit me, that was absolutely under the interstate and foreign commerce clause. The Senator mentions foreign commerce. It has been held without a single dissent from the foundation of the Government till now that our power over interstate commerce is not only equal to but the same power as our power over foreign commerce.

Mr. FORAKER. Undoubtedly, as to the power to regulate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And under our power over foreign commerce we have prohibited the entrance of convict-made goods.

Mr. FORAKER. I have not any doubt that we can. I make no question with the Senator about the accuracy of his statement that the power conferred upon Congress with respect to foreign is precisely the same as the power in respect to interstate commerce. It is all conferred in the same breath and the same sentence.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator from Ohio is mistaken in that statement. I think the courts have held in several cases that there is a difference.

Mr. FORAKER. I remember very well a number of decisions—and I do not know that there are any decisions to the contrary, but decisions come so thick and fast I do not like to speak of them with confidence unless I have examined them—I know there are a number of decisions in which the Supreme Court has held that the power of Congress with respect to foreign commerce and domestic commerce is one and the same—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is correct.

Mr. FORAKER. And conferred by the same sentence of the Constitution. I am speaking of the power to regulate conferred by the commerce clause.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I rose, merely in view of what the Senator from Rhode Island has said, to say that, as the Senator from Ohio has said, the Supreme Court in a large number of cases held in terms that the power of Congress over interstate and foreign commerce was not only equal, but the same power. There has not been one case which has held to the contrary or criticised either directly or by obiter dicta or anything else that doctrine. That has never been questioned, I will say to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. FORAKER. All I was contending for—

Mr. FULTON. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that while it is true that the court has in a few instances said, speaking of the commerce clause, that the power of Congress under the commerce clause was just the same in the regulation of interstate as foreign commerce, yet in the nature of things, by virtue of the sovereignty of the Government, it has, without the commerce clause, the power to exclude entirely foreign commerce from coming to this country.

There are some powers which this Government exercises in dealing with foreign countries that it does not derive from the commerce clause of the Constitution. When it is said simply that the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce under the commerce clause is just the same as its power to regulate foreign commerce, that confines the matter to the commerce clause of the Constitution. But I say the Government by virtue of its sovereignty, by the mere fact that it is a nation, has the power to control, without reference to the commerce clause, its dealings and relations with foreign governments.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator from Oregon a question?

Mr. FORAKER. I want to say in answer to the Senator that he is exactly right in what he says, and I did not mean to say anything that was in conflict in the slightest degree with what the Senator said. We were speaking about the commerce clause of the Constitution, which confers upon Congress the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States and with Indian tribes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Exactly so.

Mr. FORAKER. Of course this Government has, as an independent sovereignty, many powers with respect to its relations with foreign countries outside of those conferred upon it by the commerce clause. I was simply discussing the commerce clause in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator from Oregon this question, and also the Senator from Ohio: Do the Senators think that the words in the commerce clause which say "regulate commerce with foreign nations" are surplusage? Of course not. They are, therefore, put in for some purpose. The Supreme Court has said in every case, without one dissent or criticism, that the power was conferred by that section. The Senator will not maintain that it is surplusage.

Mr. FULTON. It is not surplusage, because that provision takes away from the States and excludes them from exercising any power over interstate commerce. It was necessary to have some provision in the Constitution to take away from the States the power to regulate interstate commerce. That clause did it. It was also necessary to have a clause with respect to foreign commerce. That clause did it. But the Government, by virtue of its sovereignty and its nationality over and above the commerce clause of the Constitution, can regulate our affairs with foreign nations.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Whether I agree with that or not, I would say that the answer is sufficient; that in every case, without one exception, where the Supreme Court has passed upon any law regulating foreign commerce it has based its decision expressly upon the interstate and foreign commerce clause and not at all, directly or indirectly, upon any inherent powers of sovereignty.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me, I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana a question with reference to what he has been saying.

I understand the Senator from Indiana to say that because the language providing for the regulation of interstate commerce is the same as that with reference to foreign commerce, therefore the power in reference to the two must be the same.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; the Senator is mistaken. He did not hear me accurately. What I say is this: I do not put my construction upon it at all. I quote the language of the Supreme Court of the United States, which repeatedly has declared that our power over interstate and foreign commerce is not only similar, not only equal to each other, but exactly the same power. I do not put my interpretation one way or the other. I merely quote the language of the Supreme Court, and that language has never been questioned in any case, directly or indirectly, since the foundation of the Government.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me ask the Senator from Indiana a question. Does the Senator from Indiana claim that the power of Congress over interstate commerce is as great as it is over foreign commerce?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The same?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is the same power.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And I understand that he bases his conclusion in that regard upon the identity of language—that the power is conferred in the same clause of the Constitution and the language is identical with reference to both.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not base it upon any conclusion of my own at all. I base it upon what the Supreme Court has repeatedly said is the law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator does not base it upon that, upon what does he base it?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Upon the language of the Supreme Court.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Upon what does the Supreme Court base it?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Upon reasons which they give in their decisions, which I would be glad to go into, if it would not interrupt the Senator from Ohio too long. I fear it would take all the afternoon.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to get the Senator's view.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. My view is the view of the Supreme Court—

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Based upon the identity of language?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That that language means that the power over foreign and interstate commerce is not only equal, but the same power—that is what the Supreme Court says. In one decision after another, from the foundation of the Government until now, that is what it has said.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would be glad if the Senator would give me the name of the cases? Can the Senator cite the cases?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There are several cases. The first one, if I am not mistaken, was Gibbons v. Ogden; the second, Brown v. Houston; the third, the Lottery case; the fourth, and the chiefest case, is that great case—I may accurately say that historic case—of Curtcher v. Kentucky, where the Supreme Court goes on at considerable length to reason out this matter, and quotes what the Supreme Court had theretofore said, and then says they are the same power, and then uses this language—I am quoting from memory, but think I am accurate:

No difference is perceivable between the two.

There are a large number of other cases. I will send down and get my notes on some of them and read to the Senator the exact language of the Supreme Court.

I will say to the Senator that my position is the position the Supreme Court has taken. I merely stand upon what the Supreme Court has said for a hundred years; that is all.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. The language of the Constitution is:

The Congress shall have power . . . to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes.

The Constitution puts that power on an equal footing.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. And I think the Supreme Court has said at least a hundred times that the power was derived from the Constitution and nowhere else.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is right, so far as to basing this power on the commerce clause.

Mr. TELLER. They have repeatedly declared that Congress has no inherent power. They have repeated that over and over again—no inherent power. I challenge the statement of the Senator from Oregon. Without that clause it had no such authority. You could hardly conceive of a government that would not have it, and this is where the framers of the Constitution provided we should have it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In addition to that I will say in answer to the Senator from Oregon that in every case involving the power of Congress over foreign commerce that has come before either the Federal courts or the Supreme Court, it has based its decision upon the commerce clause and not upon our inherent powers.

Mr. TELLER. That is right.

Mr. ALDRICH. On that precise point, as long as I have ventured to differ with the Senator from Indiana or the Senator from Ohio, I should like to read from a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is that the case of Buttfield v. Stranahan?

Mr. ALDRICH. It covers the exact point.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is it the Stranahan case?

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator permit me to read from the decision?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is that the case of Buttfield v. Stranahan?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is the case of Buttfield against Stranahan.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I thought it was Buttfield against Stranahan. I do not think it covers the point.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator from Rhode Island allow me before he reads from the decision? The Senator from Colorado says this Government has no inherent power; that it has nothing except what is expressly given to it by the Constitution. That is true, with certain limitations. When it comes to exercise the power of a nation, I undertake to say it does and may exercise power—national sovereign powers—that are not expressly given by the Constitution. For instance, I will be glad to have the Senator tell me how we acquired Louisiana; how we acquired any cession of territory outside of the original territory of the United States. You can find nothing in the Constitution that gave the power to acquire Louisiana. We acquired it because we had the sovereign power of every other nation. There are certain powers that every nation exercises, and we are no more limited in the exercise of sovereign power than any other nationality is limited.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like first to read this extract.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then will the Senator yield?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island declines to yield.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will yield after I have read the extract. The case I am reading from is that of Buttfield against Stranahan (192 U. S., 492), the opinion being delivered by Mr. Justice White:

The power to regulate commerce with foreign nations is expressly conferred upon Congress, and being an enumerated power is complete in itself, acknowledging no limitations other than those prescribed in the Constitution.

Mr. FORAKER. Quoting from John Marshall in Gibbons v. Ogden.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The opinion continues:

Whatever difference of opinion, if any, may have existed or does exist concerning the limitations of the power resulting from other provisions of the Constitution, so far as interstate commerce is concerned it is not to be doubted that from the beginning Congress has exercised a plenary power in respect to the exclusion of merchandise brought from foreign countries—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. It shows there is a difference—a manifest difference, an acknowledged difference—between the power over interstate commerce and the power over foreign commerce, recognized by the Supreme Court itself.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will.

Mr. ALDRICH. I want to finish the quotation.

Not alone directly by the enactment of embargo statutes, but indirectly as a necessary result of provisions contained in tariff legislation.

In all of the various decisions with respect to customs legislation the Supreme Court has held that the power of Congress was absolute and plenary, and here is a distinct recognition that there may be a difference of opinion as to the plenary power over interstate commerce.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

Mr. FORAKER. Let me say to the Senator again and to all others, there is no question but that the Government of the United States has power in respect to foreign commerce that it does not have with respect to interstate commerce; but it does not get that different power from the commerce clause of the Constitution. When it comes to the commerce clause of the Constitution, it confers precisely the same power upon Congress with respect to foreign as with respect to interstate commerce.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is true.

Mr. ALDRICH. Undoubtedly so.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President—

Mr. FORAKER. Undoubtedly so. It was so held in Gibbons v. Ogden, the court holding that the power was conferred in the same sentence and the same breath.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It was so held in this case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senators will kindly suspend. The Chair must advise Senators that they can not interrupt a Senator upon the floor without the consent of the Chair; and the Chair will enforce this rule. The Senator from Ohio is entitled to the floor. The Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] rose to interrupt him. The Chair was waiting for the Senator from Ohio to complete his sentence before asking him to yield. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. I was hoping I might be able to complete the sentence. Then I intended to yield to the Senator from Montana.

In addition to the power to regulate commerce, Congress is given power to levy imposts and to do a number of things that are enumerated in the Constitution, and growing out of these other powers so conferred there are powers of Congress which are not conferred by the commerce clause.

Now, I will listen to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], tersely put, as I understand, is that the power of the Federal Government to regulate commerce between the States, being derived from identical or substantially the same language and the same clause of the Constitution, is identical with the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations. I insist that must be an inherently infirm proposition, and for this reason, that the Federal Government as a sovereign power has no constitutional restraints in dealing with foreign nations.

The Federal Government, as between the States, must exercise this commerce power in the light and under the restraints of other clauses of the Federal Constitution in no sense applicable to foreign nations. For instance:

No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State.

No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another, nor shall vessels bound to or from one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another.

The commerce clause must be construed when regulating commerce between the States with the limitations upon the Federal power fixed by other clauses in the Constitution. These clauses have no application, directly or indirectly, to the relations of the Federal Government with foreign nations, and consequently the hand of the Federal Government in dealing with foreign commerce is unrestrained. The hand of the Federal Government in dealing with interstate commerce is restrained by every restraining clause in the Constitution, and they must all be construed together in exercising the power.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me for a moment to reply?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Supreme Court of the United States is the final tribunal which interprets the Constitution, all that has been said here to the effect that these powers are not precisely the same has already been disposed of. I ventured to say a moment ago—

Mr. CARTER. I suggest to the Senator—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am going to cite the cases. Perhaps the Senator—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. CARTER. I venture now the statement that the Supreme Court has never said that the power of the Federal Government in reference to the regulation of foreign commerce is identical with the power of the Federal Government to regulate commerce between the States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I will read the language of the Supreme Court in several cases, and can produce far more whenever it is necessary, that the power is identical.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. GORE. I desire to ask the Senator if the Supreme Court in a case in which the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company was a party did not suggest a measure of this character—this commodity clause—as a possible remedy for the evils complained of in that case?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not recall, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Oklahoma is quite right in saying that the Supreme Court referred to this as a possible remedy; but the Supreme Court was very careful in so announcing to suggest certain limitations with respect to the exercise of the power—something we utterly forgot when we enacted the commodity clause.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What the Supreme Court has said upon this precise point in several cases I will now quote from briefly, and supported by many other cases that it is not necessary to call attention to now is this: In Gibbons v. Ogden, which is the first case, the great case on the interstate commerce clause, Chief Justice Marshall said:

If this be the admitted meaning of the word (commerce) in its application to foreign nations, it must carry the same meaning throughout the sentence, and remains a unit, unless there be some plain, intelligible cause which alters it.

Now, next, the Supreme Court in Crutcher v. Kentucky (141 U. S., 57), and, if I recall correctly, the opinion was delivered by Mr. Justice Bradley, one of the ablest justices, one of the most learned justices who ever sat upon the Supreme Court bench, after discussing this at great length, used these words:

It has been frequently laid down by this court that the power of Congress over interstate commerce is as absolute as it is over foreign commerce. * * * No difference is perceivable between the two.

Next, Story, on the Constitution, says of this clause:

It (the interstate commerce power) extends to the laying of embargoes as well on domestic as on foreign voyages.

Next, in Brown v. Houston (114 U. S., 622) the Supreme Court of the United States says:

The power to regulate commerce among the several states is granted to Congress in terms as absolute as is the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations.

In Stockton v. Baltimore, etc., Railway Company (32 Fed. Rep.) the court says, and I think the justice in that case was Mr. Justice Bradley, afterward elevated to the Supreme Court of the United States:

We think that the power of Congress is supreme over the whole subject (interstate commerce), unimpeded and unembarrassed by State lines or State laws; that in this matter the country is one, and the work to be accomplished is national, and that State interests, State jealousies, and State prejudices do not require to be consulted. In matters of foreign and interstate commerce there are no States.

So I have cited here several decisions from the Supreme Court of the United States. Many more can be added. It is not necessary for me to argue the question. It is not necessary for me to put my unauthoritative interpretation upon this clause of the Constitution. The Supreme Court has done it for a hundred years and not in a single case has it ever questioned that language.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator having made a very positive declaration on that point, I still adhere to what I said in the beginning, that at no point where the matter was applicable has the Supreme Court ever decided as the Senator asserts. The Senator refers to these decisions. The lottery case turned, as the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] suggests, upon the obnoxious character, the immoral tendency, of the traffic.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have not cited the lottery case at all. All these opinions were outside the lottery case.

Mr. CARTER. Before suggesting the lottery case I desire to propound just four questions to the Senator, and I will do it very briefly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. One at a time?

Mr. CARTER. One at a time.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. All right.

Mr. CARTER. I ask the Senator from Indiana if it is true that the Federal Government has the right to levy duties on articles entering our ports from foreign countries? To that of course he will answer yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; but I will answer it in my own way. Is that the first question?

Mr. CARTER. I asked the question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, let me answer, please, and I hope I will have the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island.

We have the power to levy duties on articles imported to this nation under two powers of the Constitution. The first one is to raise revenue, and that comes solely under the taxing power. The second one is through taxation, to do something more than to raise revenue—for protection for example. No duty for any other purpose, excepting only the purpose of raising revenue, was ever laid or could be laid under anything but the taxing power. But wherever the duty embraces the element of protection, that tax is laid exclusively under the interstate and foreign-commerce clause of the Constitution.

The Senator will find that the first chapter of the second volume of Story on the Constitution is devoted almost exclusively to an argument, first, showing that the levying of protective duties is justifiable as a matter of policy and, second, that the levying of protective duties is constitutional; and that such protective duties are constitutional exclusively under the commerce clause and not under the taxing power.

Now, the Senator from Rhode Island—

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, let me remind the Senator that I should like to have a word in my own time. The floor belongs to me, I believe.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is true.

Mr. FORAKER. On what ground does Story hold that it is constitutional?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Story holds that it is constitutional—

Mr. FORAKER. I agree with him that it is constitutional.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator means the protective duty?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Story holds that the protective part of duty is constitutional solely and exclusively under our power under the commerce clause of the Constitution, and not otherwise; and that is held for an entire chapter in Story on the Constitution and has been decided several times by the Supreme Court.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator, then, admits the power of the Government to levy duties under the commerce clause of the Constitution on articles of foreign import?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I not only admit it; I assert it.

Mr. CARTER. That makes it stronger still. Now, Mr. President, I ask this question of the Senator. Has the United States Government any power to levy duty on articles passing from one State to another?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly not. Now, pardon me. You ask me the question. Let me answer it. It is because it is expressly and in terms prohibited, and where not expressly excepted the power is identical, the Supreme Court says.

Mr. CARTER. Then we have one difference between the Federal Government in its relations to interstate commerce and foreign commerce.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not in the regulation of it; not at all.

Mr. CARTER. We are speaking of power.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am speaking of the power to regulate.

Mr. CARTER. The power to regulate involves the right to regulate, and when the power exists it may be exercised, of course.

Now, Mr. President, I propound another interrogatory.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is the third.

Mr. CARTER. Can the Federal Government under the Constitution show any preference—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. To the ports of one State over those of another?

Mr. CARTER. By any regulation of commerce or revenue to the port of any foreign country?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Can it show any preference to a foreign country?

Mr. CARTER. I ask that question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I want to get it clearly, because the answer is quick and clear. Can we pass a law which will show a preference for France over England? Certainly. But we can not pass a law which will show a preference to one port of a State over ports of another State.

Mr. CARTER. Can Congress pass a law showing a preference to Ohio over Indiana?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly not.

Mr. CARTER. Then, there is another difference between our right to regulate commerce between States and foreign countries.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. As to any regulation of commerce, it is expressly provided in terms in the Constitution.

Now, will the Senator from Ohio please allow me? I have been asked many questions. I am imposing on the Senator from Ohio, but I will not take five minutes longer.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me, I think it is established that Congress may levy duties on foreign imports under the commerce clause of the Constitution.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. And it can not levy duties on articles passing between the States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Because it is expressly prohibited.

Mr. CARTER. It is prohibited; certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is expressly prohibited; not by implication.

Mr. CARTER. Whether it be weaker because it is expressed, I know not. It is prohibited.

I desire to make one additional statement and then I will conclude, because I am imposing on the Senator from Ohio, and, I suppose, on the Senator from Indiana also. We have discerned one clear and distinct limitation on the Federal Government as to the regulation of commerce between the States. That does not apply to the Federal Government in its relation to commerce with foreign countries. Second, and quite as distinct and emphatic, we find that a preference can be given under the Constitution to the commerce of one foreign country as against another, but that no preference can be given as between one State and another. My contention is that when the question comes to the Supreme Court fairly this commerce clause as applied to interstate commerce must be construed in connection with every other restraining clause of the Constitution applicable to the subject-matter.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator need not say it will be decided when it comes before the Supreme Court, because it has been decided.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to answer the question of the Senator from Rhode Island, and I will be through in a minute or two. I have read the exact words of the Supreme Court in several cases holding that the power is the same. Of course the Supreme Court supposed, although the Senator from Montana seems to think not, that it knew the other provisions of the Constitution, so it held that the power was the same where it did not specifically provide otherwise.

As to the question of preferences among the States, where it does not specifically provide otherwise the Supreme Court has held it is precisely the same power; not similar to, not equal to, but the same power.

Now, just a word more. The Senator from Rhode Island appears to be under the impression that our power over the tariff is absolute because it comes under the taxing power. Not at all. It is partly under the taxing power, and for any other purpose except for raising revenue it is under the commerce clause.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is exactly what I undertook to say.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then the Senator does admit it?

Mr. ALDRICH. My contention is that the power of Congress over interstate and foreign commerce is not identical.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Supreme Court have held uniformly for a century, and I have read the exact words, that they are not only identical, but the same.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island produced Buttfield v. Stranahan, and he wanted to show that there had been a recent decision which negated this, and cited Buttfield v. Stranahan. But you will see on reading the very first sentence that it holds nothing of the kind, but is confirmatory of the language of the Supreme Court in Gibbons v. Ogden and places it under the interstate and foreign commerce clause, not something that is inherent, not something superior to:

The power to regulate commerce with foreign nations is expressly conferred upon Congress—

Conferred upon Congress. Not as the Senator from Oregon said, an inherent power, although I personally think it would be that, too—and being an enumerated power, is complete in itself, acknowledging no limitations other than those prescribed in the Constitution.

That brings in what the Senator from Montana was talking about. He might as well recite the Decalogue, because it has nothing to do with the case. That was the language that I quoted here. It is not original language in Buttfield v. Stranahan. It is quoted from Gibbons v. Ogden:

Whatever difference of opinion, if any, may have existed or does exist concerning the limitations of the power resulting from other provisions of the Constitution—

Mr. ALDRICH. What does the court mean in making that statement?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What the Senator from Montana pointed out, the provision in the Constitution that we shall not make preferences among the States, or the ports of the States, or things of that kind. That is what it means.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is it not a statement that there may be differences between interstate and foreign commerce?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No, sir; it is a statement that there are differences, not that there may be differences. It is expressly laid down, and where it is not expressly laid down then the Supreme Court says it is not only similar, not only equal, but it is absolutely the same power. So Buttfield v. Stranahan, with which I am somewhat familiar, did not at all uphold the Senator in his novel theory that the Supreme Court has been wrong for a hundred years and this power expressed in the same sentence is not the same power.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will yield to the Senator from Maryland, with the permission of the Senator from Ohio. I have transgressed long enough upon his time.

Mr. RAYNER. I have had occasion to examine this question, and if there is any decision of the Supreme Court of the United States where the question has ever arisen that Congress has the same power over interstate commerce that it has over foreign commerce I have never heard of it. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox], who has thoroughly considered this question, whether I am right in that assertion.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I tremble to enter this arena. However, I have been asked a question and I am very glad to make reply. There has never been such a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States that I know of, and it has been my business to inquire pretty closely into this question. I do not say there is not an opinion of the Supreme Court in which there is such language, but I say there is no decision of the Supreme Court of the United States deciding that the power of Congress over interstate commerce is the same in all respects as the power of Congress over commerce with foreign countries.

I recall very distinctly that while I was filling the office of Attorney-General of the United States the Government raised that question, argued the question, and contended for it upon the identical authorities which have been cited here by the Senator from Indiana as sustaining the proposition, namely, in the lottery cases.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have not mentioned that case yet.

Mr. KNOX. I hope the Senator from Indiana will permit me a moment. I think he has had a very fair opportunity.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I yielded to the Senator from Maryland.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. FORAKER. I thought I had the floor and I yielded expressly to the Senator from Pennsylvania when he was called upon for a reply.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator will permit me, I will make a statement later.

Mr. KNOX. The Government contended for that proposition in the lottery case, because it was the simple solution of the lottery case. What Congress did in respect to the lotteries was to pass a law prohibiting them from injuring the channels of interstate trade. There was the plain, naked proposition presented to the Supreme Court of the United States, "Had Congress the power to do that thing," and the Government contended it had the power, because it had the power to prohibit commerce between the States under the Constitution, which made its power equal to that over foreign commerce, and as there could be no doubt of the Government's power to place arbitrary limitation upon goods imported from foreign countries, the Government contended that it had a right to prohibit goods from going from one point in the United States to another.

But the Supreme Court of the United States reversed that contention and threw all those authorities into the brush heap and decided the question solely upon the ground of the obnoxious character of the lottery business and held, as I discovered in looking at a pamphlet that I happened to find in my desk here, that—

The power of Congress—

Just as the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] has said—

The power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States, although plenary, can not be deemed arbitrary since it is subject to such limitations or restrictions as are prescribed by the Constitution. This power, therefore, may not be exercised so as to infringe rights secured or protected by that instrument.

Therefore, in reply specifically to the question of the Senator from Maryland, I assert that the court has not only never decided that, but I do not find in all my research any intimation to the effect that the Congress of the United States can lay its hands upon an innocuous article and prohibit it from being transported from State to State; it can not say that cotton may not be sent from Georgia to the seaboard; it can not say that corn may not be sent from Iowa to New York. The only instance in which such an arbitrary rule or such a provision of Congress has been sustained is in respect to articles that are noxious or apt to disturb or injure the public health or the public peace, or in some way affecting the public good.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I had the floor by the courtesy of the Senator from Ohio and was speaking when the Senator from Maryland interrupted me. I yielded to him. Then the Senator from Maryland asked a question of the Senator from Pennsylvania when I was on the floor by the courtesy of the Senator from Ohio.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio has a right to resume the floor when he likes. The Senator from Utah sought the floor, and the Chair asks the Senator from Ohio whether he yields?

Mr. FORAKER. I yield to the Senator from Utah because he wanted to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question before he took his seat. I can yield to the Senator from Indiana later if he wants me to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is all right.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Pennsylvania has spoken of the lottery cases. I want to ask the Senator whether in that case, in the dissenting opinion of Chief Justice Fuller, the Chief Justice did not expressly hold that there was a very well-settled distinction between the power of Congress over interstate commerce and foreign commerce, and whether, in addition to that, any judge of the Supreme Court in that case took issue with him?

Mr. KNOX. In reply to that question, to which I will make answer in a moment, when I said the court brushed that contention aside, I meant the majority of the court, which, of course, speaks for the court; but it is true that the minority of the court, and I think four of the minority, dignified the argument of the Government to such an extent as to practically pronounce it preposterous.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FORAKER. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Before I go on, I want to say with reference to what the Senator from Pennsylvania has stated in answer to the question of the Senator from Utah, that the dissenting opinion in the lottery case was not upon the question that they did not have the power of prohibiting, but it was chiefly upon the point that lottery tickets were not articles of commerce.

I wish to make this personal statement: I had risen to speak and had the floor by the courtesy of the Senator from Ohio, who had yielded to me because of various questions that had been addressed to me by a number of Senators. While I was speaking I yielded, as I always yield to every Senator, to the Senator from Maryland. The Senator from Maryland then put a question to the Senator from Pennsylvania, to whom I also yielded in order that he might answer. Yet when I asked the Senator from Pennsylvania to permit me to interrupt him, he declined to be interrupted.

Now, Mr. President, no man, either on this floor or in this country, has a higher respect for the legal learning and the judgment of the Senator from Pennsylvania than I have; but when he undertakes to wipe away the language of the Supreme Court for a hundred years by saying that, although the language was used, yet it has no authority, because it did not directly decide a point, I must decline to follow him. Certainly the opinion even of the Senator from Pennsylvania, or of the Senate put together, upon what the Constitution means is not as impressive as the uniform language of the Supreme Court for a hundred years unquestioned by itself or by anybody else, except in this body.

I remember that when this subject was up once before for discussion I quoted the famous language in Crutcher v. Kentucky. The Senator said that was obiter dicta. I do not agree to that, but supposing it was true, it was necessary reasoning to the court's determination; and is the language of the Supreme Court itself to be set aside because some Senator thinks that it was not properly used in the solution of the question? Certainly the unbroken opinion of the Supreme Court, stated in express and similar terms for a hundred years, has greater weight than that of Senators who, while admitting that the Supreme Court has used this language for a century, maintain that the Supreme Court did not need to use it in deciding the cases where it occurs.

Now, then, as to whether this is preposterous or not, as to the interpretation that the Senator puts upon the language of the Supreme Court in the lottery case, I think all this can be settled in earlier language by the Supreme Court which never yet has been questioned; and I read from the cases of The United States v. Marigold, 9 Howard, page 550, and invite the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to it:

However, at periods of high excitement an application of the terms "to regulate commerce" such as would embrace absolute prohibition may have been questioned; yet since the passage of the embargo and nonintercourse laws and the repeated judicial sanctions those statutes received, it can scarcely at this day be open to doubt that every subject falling within the legitimate sphere of commercial regulation may be partially or wholly excluded when either measure shall be demanded by the safety or by the important interests of the entire nation. Such exclusion can not be limited to particular classes or descriptions of commercial subjects; it may embrace manufactures, bullion, coin, or any other thing. The power once conceded, it may operate on any and every subject of commerce to which the legislative discretion may apply it.

The Senator says that we have passed laws prohibiting articles from interstate commerce only when those articles are injurious in themselves—injurious either to the health or morals of the people. I call attention to the fact that two years ago we put a law on the statute book without a dissenting voice prohibiting gold and silver goods from interstate commerce, which could hurt neither the health nor the morals of the people.

Mr. KEAN. I beg the Senator's pardon, if he will allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will.

Mr. KEAN. That was to prevent a fraud.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What it was to do has nothing to do with the power. Suppose we say in a certain case that we want to exclude certain things from interstate commerce in order to prevent murder. Our motive has everything to do with our policy, but nothing whatever to do with our power. Now, I do not want to—

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield further?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Besides, there are two versions. I will say to the Senator, about why that law was passed. The Senator says it was to prevent fraud, but there is another version to the effect that it was to protect two or three manufacturers of cheap jewelry in New York and New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I know nothing about any such matter or any such object of the act. I think it was to prevent fraud, and I think that was a very laudable purpose.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator knows about it, but I do not. The Senator brings up what it was done for, which has nothing whatever to do with our power, but there are two versions as to why it was passed.

Now, just a word more, because I must not take the time of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] any longer, and I apologize to him for taking it thus far, and would not have taken so much time but for the fact that there have been so many questions asked me.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I interrupt the Senator from Indiana simply to say that I am out of the notion entirely of continuing my remarks, except only to remind him that what I was discussing when I was interrupted by this debate, which is of a purely academic character, as it seems to me, was simply the question whether or not Congress had any power by legislation to interfere with vested property rights under the pretext of regulating interstate commerce or any other pretense whatever.

Then there is another question that I wanted the Senator from Indiana to address himself to if he would. It seems to me that we are confronted with that proposition. I shall not undertake to argue here, although we might very well do so, that the mere attempt to prohibit the hauling of coal was unconstitutional. There is plenty of ground to make an argument to that effect, and Senators have been making it here very effectively. I was passing that by for the sake of the argument, and confining myself to the actual state of facts we have before us for our guidance in this matter; and I was doing that with a view to pointing out that the thing for us to do is that which will relieve these great property interests and at the same time enable them to accommodate the consumers of coal in this country.

If the proposition involved in this commodity clause be constitutional, as the Senator thinks it is, perhaps, judging from what he has said, then, if the authorities are bound to enforce it, the result will be universal hardship to the people of the country.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Before the Senator from Indiana resumes his seat I want to call his attention to the language of Chief Justice Fuller in the lottery case. I understood the Senator from Indiana to say that the Chief Justice did not undertake to pass upon the question as to the difference between the power of Congress over interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator will find from my remarks in the RECORD that what I said in answer to the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] was that the minority put the ground of their dissent from the majority in the lottery case chiefly—you will find nearly the whole opinion given up to that—on the question as to whether lottery tickets are articles of commerce. Two questions arose in that case: First, were they subject at all to the commerce clause? They would be if they were articles of commerce. Second, if they were articles of commerce, did we have the power to prohibit them? Upon the first question four judges dissented from the other five. The five judges held, first, that lottery tickets were articles of commerce; and second, that we had the power to prohibit them. The minority opinion is chiefly upon the first question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, in the lottery case the question was presented to the Supreme Court as to whether or not Congress had as great power in dealing with interstate commerce as it had in dealing with foreign commerce. That question was sharply presented to the court. The majority opinion did not undertake to deal with that question at all. As the Senator from Pennsylvania says, it was brushed aside, and the decision of the majority proceeded upon other grounds; but the Chief Justice in his opinion did deal with it, and I desire to invite the attention of the Senator from Indiana to the language of the Chief Justice in that case and at the same time to put it in the RECORD. At page 373 of volume 188, United States Supreme Court Reports, Chief Justice Fuller says:

It is argued that the power to regulate commerce among the several States is the same as the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and with the Indian tribes.

So the question was sharply presented.

But is its scope the same?

As in effect, before observed, the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and the power to regulate interstate commerce, are to be taken diversely intuitu, for the latter was intended to secure equality and freedom in commercial intercourse as between the States, not to permit the creation of impediments to such intercourse; while the former clothed Congress with that power over international commerce, pertaining to a sovereign nation in its intercourse with foreign nations, and subject, generally speaking, to no implied or reserved power in the States. The laws which would be necessary and proper in the one case would not be necessary or proper in the other.

Congress is forbidden to lay any tax or duty on articles exported from any State—

And this is the question suggested by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator from Indiana say now whether or not an express prohibition is any weaker or any stronger than an implied prohibition when the implication is clear?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. About an express prohibition there can not be any question at all. About an implied prohibition, Senators and everyone else may very well differ. The Senator might, for instance, imply something that suited his convenience to which all the rest of us would not agree.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the Senator has sought to belittle the contention because the prohibition was expressed, and presumably he would have preferred it to be implied.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me finish the reading of this opinion. It continues:

Congress is forbidden to lay any tax or duty on articles exported from any State, and while that has been applied to exports to a foreign country, it seems to me that it was plainly intended to apply to interstate exportation as well. Congress is forbidden to give preference, by any regulation of commerce or revenue, to the ports of one State over those of another; and duties, imposts, and excises must be uniform throughout the United States.

The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States. This clause of the second section of Article IV was taken from the fourth article of confederation, which provided that "the free inhabitants of each of these States shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of free citizen in the several States; and the people of each State shall have free ingress and egress to and from any other State, and shall enjoy therein all the privileges of trade and commerce," while other parts of the same article were also brought forward in Article IV of the Constitution.

The Chief Justice proceeds, and then concludes upon that subject:

Thus it is seen that the right of passage of persons and property from one State to another can not be prohibited by Congress. But that does not challenge the legislative power of a sovereign nation to exclude foreign persons or commodities or place an embargo, perhaps not permanent, upon foreign ships or manufactures.

Congress has the power, and it has exercised the power, to prohibit the importation of Chinese coolies from China. Would the Senator from Indiana therefore argue that Congress has the power to prohibit the transportation of a class of persons from one State to another? It seems to me that, in addition to paying some attention to the identity of language in this constitutional provision, we should pay some attention to the subject-matter. The language of the Constitution with reference to interstate and foreign commerce is identical, but the subject-matter is altogether different. We are dealing with two different things. If the Senator will permit me, I will put this illustration to him: Suppose I should say to the Senator from Indiana, "You have the exclusive control over your property and your children." The language would be the same with reference to both, but would the Senator from Indiana say that by virtue of that language he had the same power over his children that he had over his property? In the one case he would have the right to sell his property, but he would not have the right to sell his children. So we have to pay some attention to the subject-matter as well as to the identity of the language.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have the good fortune of being able to answer the Senator by the language of the Supreme Court itself, which says in the other quotation that I just read—and I will not again burden the Record with it—that it may apply to any subject which the Congress thinks the best interests of the nation require.

Mr. President, the language is the same; the power is the same, so completely that where the framers of the Constitution wanted to make an exception they had to provide for that exception in express terms. Wherever those express provisions exist, the Supreme Court knew it, and we are all supposed to know it. The Senator from Montana and other Senators who have raised those exceptions might just as well have read the Constitution itself. Those exceptions were in the mind of the court when it said that the power is the same. Those exceptions have nothing whatever to do with prohibiting articles from interstate and foreign commerce.

Now, Mr. President, I am not going to take the time of the Senator from Ohio any longer. When I asked him for his permission, which he has so kindly and courteously given, to answer what the Senator from Rhode Island had said, I did not suppose that I should be upon my feet three minutes, for I merely wanted to present what the Supreme Court had said, and then let the Senator from Montana or any other Senator argue with the Supreme Court all they pleased. But there came a volley of questions, which I have been fortunate enough to have been able to answer, not by my own reasoning or my own language, but by the express language the Supreme Court itself has used for a hundred years. Now, I decline to take the Senator's time further.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I rose to address the Chair in my own right.

Mr. FORAKER. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from Ohio announced to the Senate that he had finished his remarks, and took his seat.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator is mistaken about that. I announced that I was pretty nearly out of the humor of making a speech. I want to ask for a vote on this substitute before I yield the floor, if I may.

Mr. CARTER. Before the Senator proceeds—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Ohio to yield the floor. He yielded only for a question. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FORAKER. I will yield the floor in a moment, I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, after all has been said, I understand the Senator from Indiana to now announce that the things are the same with exceptions.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I can tell, Mr. President, what the Senator from Montana understands. I do say, have always said, and expect to be lucky enough to always continue to say, that I will not assume to disagree with the Supreme Court or attempt to explain away its meaning for the purposes of a particular case, in which the Senator from Montana is such a master. I say what the Supreme Court has said; I stand upon the doctrine which it lays down; and I let Senators who disagree with those propositions wrestle with them as they may.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I ask the Senate if we can not have a vote on the substitute I have offered. I see that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is in the Chamber. I do not know whether he has any objection to a vote being taken on the substitute or not. I understand he wants to speak on the joint resolution.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will ask the Senator to repeat his statement.

Mr. FORAKER. I just stated that I saw the Senator from Wisconsin was in the Chamber. I do not know whether or not he would object to a vote being taken on the substitute I have offered. I know that the Senator wants to speak on the resolution; at any rate he told me so this afternoon; and I, of course, would not press for a vote on the substitute if he had any objection, but I thought, now that we had had all this debate in regard to the substitute, if there was no objection, I should like to have a vote on it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have no objection to a vote being taken on the substitute. I do not care to speak on the substitute.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to have a vote on the substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

Mr. McLAURIN. Let the proposed substitute be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from Ohio will be read at the request of the Senator from Mississippi.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That paragraph 5 of section 1 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, be amended by adding thereto the following: "Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to any article or commodity lawfully acquired and owned prior to the 29th day of June, 1906, by any railroad company under and by virtue of any statute, franchise, or charter lawfully issued or granted by the United States or any State or Territory thereof," so that said paragraph shall read: "From and after May 1, 1908, it shall be unlawful for any railroad company to transport from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to any foreign country, any article or commodity, other than timber and the manufactured products thereof, manufactured, mined, or produced by it or under its authority, or which it may own in whole or in part, or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect, except such articles or commodities as may be necessary and intended for its use in the conduct of its business as a common carrier: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to any article or commodity lawfully acquired and owned prior to the 29th day of June, 1906, by any railroad company under and by virtue of any statute, franchise, or charter lawfully issued or granted by the United States or any State or Territory thereof."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, before the roll is called, I ask that the substitute be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the proposed substitute at the request of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Before that is done, I should like to suggest an amendment in line 5. It now reads:

Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to any article—

And so forth. I should like to move to amend by striking out the word "shall" and inserting the word "are" and adding the words "intended to," so that the paragraph will read:

Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph are not intended to apply to any article or commodity lawfully acquired and owned prior to the 29th day of June, 1906—

And so forth.

If the contention, Mr. President, of the Senator from Ohio is correct as to the legal rights, we do not want to recognize the fact that it could apply at all.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In the proposed substitute on page 1, line 5, after the word "paragraph," it is proposed to strike out the word "shall" and insert "are;" and in the same line, after the word "not," to insert the words "intended to," so as to read:

Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph are not intended to apply to any article or commodity lawfully acquired and owned prior to the 29th day of June, 1906—

And so forth.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment as amended, the amendment being in the nature of a substitute. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. As that Senator is absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. DEPEW (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McENERY], who is absent, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is detained by illness, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FOSTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay." In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FULTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

I will also say, Mr. President, that I am requested to announce that my colleague, the Senator from Florida [Mr. MITCHELL], is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLAPP. In the absence of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], with whom I am paired, I doubt whether I should vote, and therefore withhold my vote. If he were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. Inasmuch as this is a substitute for a proposition of that Senator, I felt justified in voting against the substitute. Unless I am advised that the Senator from West Virginia would vote to substitute the amendment of the Senator from Ohio for his own proposition, I believe I will allow my vote to stand, with this statement in the Record.

Mr. KEAN. On behalf of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], who is necessarily absent on account of illness, I will say that if the Senator were present, on this proposition he would vote "nay." In my opinion, the Senator from Texas is at perfect liberty to vote.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well, I will let my vote stand.

Mr. FLINT. I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. I am advised that if he were present he would vote "nay." As I voted "nay," I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. ALLISON. My colleague, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] is necessarily absent to-day. I do not know how he would vote on this proposition, if he were present, but as he voted for a favorable report on the resolution of the Senator from West Virginia, I assume that he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—23.

Aldrich	Dick	Kean	Smoot
Ankeny	Foraker	Knox	Stephenson
Brandegee	Gallinger	Lodge	Stewart
Briggs	Guggenheim	Penrose	Sutherland
Burnham	Hale	Richardson	Wetmore
Crane	Heyburn	Smith, Mich.

NAYS—32.

Allison	Clay	Johnston	Overman
Bacon	Curtis	La Follette	Paynter
Bailey	Dixon	Long	Perkins
Bankhead	Flint	McCreary	Rayner
Borah	Frazier	McLaurin	Taliaferro
Brown	Gamble	Nelson	Taylor
Burkett	Gore	Newlands	Teller
Carter	Hopkins	Owen	Warner

NOT VOTING—37.

Beveridge	Davis	Hansbrough	Platt
Bourne	Depew	Hemenway	Scott
Bulkeley	Dillingham	Kittredge	Simmons
Burrows	Dolliver	McCumber	Smith, Md.
Clapp	du Pont	McEnery	Stone
Clark, Wyo.	Elkins	Martins	Tillman
Clarke, Ark.	Foster	Milton	Warren
Culbertson	Frye	Money
Cullom	Fulton	Nixon
Daniel	Gary	Piles

So Mr. FORAKER's amendment was rejected.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, May 23, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 22, 1908.

POSTMASTERS, ARIZONA.

William F. Buckingham to be postmaster at Humboldt, Yavapai County, Ariz. Office became Presidential October 1, 1907.

William M. Newell to be postmaster at Mesa, Maricopa County, Ariz., in place of William M. Newell. Incumbent's commission expired March 2, 1908.

IOWA.

Alfonzo Z. Rawson to be postmaster at Kalona, Washington County, Iowa. Office became Presidential January 1, 1908.

LOUISIANA.

Hiram Fuseller to be postmaster at Eunice, St. Landry Parish, La. Office became Presidential January 1, 1908.

MISSOURI.

Thomas M. Allen to be postmaster at Cassville, Barry County, Mo., in place of Thomas M. Allen. Incumbent's commission expired April 27, 1908.

Frederick B. Rauch to be postmaster at Morehouse, New Madrid County, Mo., in place of Frederick B. Rauch. Incumbent's commission expired February 28, 1907.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Thomas P. Nenam to be postmaster at Madison, Rockingham County, N. C. Office became Presidential January 1, 1908.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 18347) making appropriations for the service for the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will have to object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. When we adjourned yesterday did we not have pending before the House the conference report on the child-labor bill?

The SPEAKER. No.

The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the conference report as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18347) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and nine, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 36, 43, 44, 45, 51, 52, 54, 60, 64, 65, 66, 67, 69, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 78, 79, 81, 82, 88, 89, 92, and 93.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 39, 40, 41, 42, 47, 48, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 61, 62, 70, 76, 77, 80, 84, 86, 87, 91, 94, 95, 96, 97, and 98.

And agree to the same.

JESSE OVERSTREET,

J. J. GARDNER,

JOHN A. MOON,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] moves to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] demands a second. A second is ordered under the rule.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Under this rule, I presume, all the debate that will be allowed will be twenty minutes on a side?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, the post-office appropriation bill as it passed the House carried a total amount for the next fiscal year of $222,356,692. As agreed upon by the conferees between the two Houses, this amount of appropriation has been increased by $1,708,450, making a total appropriation for the next fiscal year of $224,065,142. Of the increase of $1,708,450, $1,100,000 is for the increased appropriation due to the ocean mail service. An additional $190,000 is for the improvement deemed necessary for rent in connection with the New York post-office. An increase of $155,000 is made over the House bill for watchmen, laborers, and messengers in the post-offices of the first and second class, and $140,000 of an increase for mail messenger service. Those four items of increase account for all of the $1,708,450 except $123,450, which is made up of a number of smaller items, ranging from $5,000 to $45,000. I take it, Mr. Speaker, that there will be little controversy, if any, relative to any one of the items of increase which I have just recited, except the item of $1,100,000 for the ocean mail service. The bill carries also, by way of Senate amendments, some amendments in the way of legislation. All of the amendments relating to legislation have been considered by and thoroughly approved by the Post-Office Department.

Authority for postmasters to make deposits in State and national banks; a provision authorizing naval mail clerks, for use on our naval vessels, as well as authority changing the method of weighing the mails to once in each year instead of once in four years. That amendment, while approved by the Department and the conferees without any criticism, provides three important factors. It makes permanent law the so-called "Order 412" requiring the total number of days in the weighing period to be used as the divisor in fixing the average daily weight. It makes permanent law of the so-called "divisor order" under which the Postmaster-General is now computing the average daily weight. It requires, in the second place, that the distance between important terminals, where there are competing railway mail routes, shall be the shortest of those routes, applying for the ascertainment of mail pay the principle which now obtains in freight and passenger rates. In the third place, it fixes the period of weighing at the same time all over the country, simultaneous weighing, so as to avoid the shuttlecocking of mail, commonly known as "padding" the mails, in the weighing period. Annual weighing instead of quadrennial weighing will give a more equitable result in determining its amount.

Mr. Speaker, the ocean mail contract service is increased.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I prefer not to yield at this time.

Under existing law, known as the act of May 3, 1891, we have been carrying, and carried in the bill as it passed the House, appropriations authorizing the payment of contracts for ocean mail service. In the Senate amendment agreed to, we amend that law without change of principle, without change of method of contract, without change of notice of contract, without any change whatever in the limitations, requirements, and restrictions of the act of 1891. The sole change is to increase the rate upon the second and third class vessels under these contracts.

The rates to-day are $4 a mile, outgoing, on vessels under the restriction of the law of a speed in excess of 20 knots an hour, $2 a mile where the speed is under 20 knots an hour but in excess of 16 knots, and $1 a mile where the speed is between 14 and 16 knots. This amendment changes the rate from $2 to $4 on vessels above 16 and below 20 knots an hour, without any change of the vessels plying at a speed in excess of 20 knots. It changes the rate from $1 to $2 in the third-class vessels, whose speed is between 14 and 16 knots an hour, and then it limits those contracts under those rates to routes in excess of 4,000 miles in length, for the purpose of communicating with South America, Australasia, Hawaii, the Philippines, China, and Japan.

It is believed, Mr. Speaker, that it is important for the development of trade relations and mail communication with the people of the Orient and South America, in harmony and consistent with the policy of the American people, to establish closer relations with those people.

Now, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think it better not to. Possibly an answer may be given from some other source.

Mr. SULZER. I have been unable to get a copy of the bill, and can not determine from the report the knowledge that I desire to get.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves the balance of his time.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I regret that we have only forty minutes to dispose of a bill carrying an appropriation of $234,000,000 under this order of the House, and the half of that time belonging to us I will be compelled to divide between five members of the committee. So I will address myself to only one or two features of this report. It is a matter of regret that the Senate and House conferees could not have arranged for a slight addition to the vacation for the carriers and clerks; but while that is a matter of consideration, it is not a matter of great importance compared with the agreement made on the part of the majority of the House conferees with the Senate conferees to inject into this bill a great ship subsidy. We seriously object to that section of the bill which provides for an increase of $1,100,000 by the Senate amendment, with the agreement of the House members, for an ocean ship subsidy. The concession of this increase is based upon two grounds. One an alleged increase in mail facilities, the other that the increase accomplished by the bill in this connection would furnish an auxiliary fleet to the Navy of the United States.

Let it be remembered that to-day the Government of the United States is paying an exorbitant sum of money for this ocean service. We paid last year $3,268,000. The House bill this year proposes $3,508,862, an increase of $240,862, an increase commensurate, perhaps, with the increasing service on the ocean; but the Senate places $1,100,000 in addition to this, making the whole subsidy $4,602,862.

It is not contended by the gentlemen who urge this subsidy that it is necessary as a mail facility. The officials of the Department, in urging it, speak of it only incidentally as a benefit to the mail service. The problem which we are asked to solve on the post-office bill is the necessity of an increase in the merchant marine.

They tell us that we shall increase our foreign trade. They do not dare say that the facilities are not sufficient now under the subsidy for the carrying of such mail as we have to carry. They abandon that proposition, treat it as incidental, and say that the Government of the United States needs transports for the fleet, and that this will furnish a nucleus for that great service.

Mr. Speaker, I wish I had the time to discuss this question just a little, but the mere suggestion that the rotten old hulks that carry the mail would be of any aid to the American Navy is absolutely ridiculous. They would be of no more value in a great naval engagement than a horse pistol would be in a great artillery duel, and these gentlemen know it.

There are two pretexts for this appropriation; first, as I said, incidentally the mail service, and, second, the naval service, both untenable, both of such a character that they ought not to receive the consideration of an intelligent House of Representatives. You can not increase your commerce by any such methods. If you shall determine at last that it is wise to continue the great tariff barrier, if you are determined at last that your trade must expand while your protective theory must still exist, that the embargo on trade, the prohibition against foreign commerce must still exist in the Dingley law, and yet at the same time the trade be carried on, you must have a merchant marine that will cost you a hundred millions of money. And then it is an absurd proposition that the Post-Office Department should begin this service. If we are to have this great service for the expansion of foreign commerce along the lines contended for by the Republican party, if you are not willing (as the Democracy believe) to concede that if you lower your tariff walls the commerce of your country will come naturally upon the high seas, but that you must have a high tariff and a merchant marine, go about it in an honest, manly way, bring your ship-subsidy bill here and have it discussed, and if it be to the interest of the country, let it pass. Do not indulge in a cowardly subterfuge on this post-office bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I tell you, sir, between these two pretexts, the facilitation of the mails and the improvement of the Navy, lies this monumental plunder of the National Treasury in behalf of the shipping interests that are involved in this question. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You can not furnish a sufficient reason for this enactment upon either of these theories. You had as well ask me to discuss the question whether larceny is in accord with high moral principles, or whether public plunder is a cardinal virtue, as to ask me to accede, under the facts presented here, to the subsidy in this bill. It is unnecessary, unwise, and unjust to the people to give their money to the shipping interest, with no return. It would be a misappropriation of public funds by faithless public servants. Mr. Speaker, my part of the time has ended, I shall have to yield the floor to another gentleman, and I ask the gentleman from Indiana now to take some of his time. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee how many speeches he proposes to have in his full time.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. There are two gentlemen on this side of the House who want to speak, and there are two on that side of the House to whom I have to give some time, because you would not, and that makes four.

Mr. OVERSTREET. It is my intention to use all the time at my disposal except what I yield to one additional man, and I request the gentleman to use the time of at least two of his speakers.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Very well. I will ask the Chair to recognize the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] for five minutes. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, this is the last word of legislative control in this body. This bill carries over $200,000,000. There are twenty minutes allowed for its presentation, twenty minutes for its analysis. That is deliberation at the rate of $10,000,000 a minute as the clock ticks. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I would like to appeal to you men here on both sides as individuals to-day, for I do not believe that by long disuse of individual responsibility you have lost it. In this bill which the Senate has amended is one proposition I want to talk about in my time, and that is the proposition for annual weighing of the mails. That annual weighing gives to the railroads of this country an increase of between three and four million dollars a year for carrying the mails.

Go back a little bit and think that for thirty-four years in this country, by reason of departmental silence, by reason of Congressional blindness, by indecision of commission after commission, we have grossly overpaid the railroads, overpaid them on one miscalculation $60,000,000. That has been corrected. Last year Congress took away from the railroads some of their overpay.

Now we are to have annual weighing; at present we weigh the mail once in each section every four years for one hundred and five days. This provision put in here in the Senate, voted down in the House committee, provides for the weighing annually all over the country for thirty-five days. That is a technicality. It is difficult to see that within that change is an increase for the railroads of three or four million dollars.

Nevertheless, it does make an increase. The pay of the railroads, originally given in 1873, based on average weight, was made high pay. Why? Because the average found at the beginning of a four-year period at the end of four years was small. The high pay was intended as an offset. Moreover, the longer you weigh the mails in this country the less your average will be in certain seasons. If you weigh the mail one hundred and five days you get a lower average than you do if you weigh it for thirty-five days. How did we discover that? In 1906 the mails were weighed in the western half of the United States, beginning in February. On April 18 the earthquake occurred in San Francisco and disarranged the routing of the mails. The mails were weighed continuously, however, for one hundred and five days, and when they were all weighed, somebody discovered that the shorter weighing period—that is, up to the date of the earthquake—made a higher average than the longer weighing period. The Department appeared before the committee, explained the disarrangement of the mails by reason of the earthquake, and persuaded the committee to allow them to chop off the weighing period at fifty-seven days—that is, at the time the earthquake took place. By cutting off those other days and stopping at fifty-seven days the pay for the mail of that section was increased 7 per cent. If you reduce the number of days on which the mails are weighed from one hundred and five days to thirty-five days, you will get a like result. Why? Simply because the mails fluctuate in weight; they are high in January, not so high in February, not so high in March, higher in April, higher in May, very high in June, going down in July, lower in August, and then up again until they are very high in December, so the bigger the blanket you spread over the great weighing operation the fairer your average, and, theoretically, the only true average would be a weighing for all the year round. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire now that the remaining time on our side be divided between the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY]. And I now yield two minutes of that time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, in two minutes the time is entirely inadequate to discuss these two large propositions, subsidy and railway-mail pay, which were both rejected after deliberate consideration by the House Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. [Applause.] I stand for committee legislation in this House with its thorough consideration. We voted against reporting both of these propositions, and here we are asked to railroad through in a minute this great proposition of subsidy which should be considered for hours and which is more objectionable in its extent than the proposition we voted against last year. [Applause.] Here is the railway-mail proposition under the guise of annual weighing, that will increase the mail pay $2,700,000 each year, changing the practice that has been in vogue for thirty years upon a basis of compensation which was fixed with the idea that there should be quadrennial weighings, and in a law that at present vests with the Postmaster-General the right at any time to hold weighings more frequently than once in every four years.

Last year we cut the railway-mail pay and to a reasonable extent, and now, under the guise of having a fairer average, they are seeking to raise the rate of compensation and set aside the efforts that we accomplished last year after weeks and weeks of struggle. I call upon the Republican Members of this House to enter a dissent to this practice of the Senate in loading down an appropriation bill with more legislative amendments than have ever been known here before, asking in the brief time of twenty minutes to consider such weighty measures that carry appropriations to the extent of millions and millions of dollars. I have not time to go into the merits in two minutes, to discuss this great question of railway-mail pay and to show you from the schedules that I have in my hand, prepared by the Post-Office Department, that the amount of mail pay will annually increase $2,700,000 at least, nor have I the time to go into the question of the needlessness of the subsidy for the ocean mail to the Orient, which to-day is adequate with the facilities provided by subsidized steamers of other countries. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I now yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit in the brief time yielded to me just one proposition concerning the ocean mail subsidy, which appears in the post-office appropriation bill as a Senate amendment, and which has been agreed to by a majority of the conferees. This amendment increases just double the amount to be paid for the carrying of ocean mails in vessels of the second and third class, and will involve an additional expenditure of about $4,000,000 per annum. Although this amendment appears in a post-office appropriation bill which is presumed to provide exclusively for the postal service, there is no pretense that this increase is for the purpose of extending our mail facilities, but, on the contrary, under the guise of an amendment to this bill, it is admittedly a ship subsidy, pure and simple.

In order that no Member who has not studied this question may be deceived, I will present to you a few facts, and I challenge any Member to question their correctness. We had extended hearings upon this same proposition before a subcommittee of the Committee on Post-Offices of this House, when the Second Assistant Postmaster-General and other officials in his Department, together with several other familiar advocates of ship subsidy, were heard, and every one of these gentlemen advocated this proposition as a benefit to ocean shipping, and not for once did they contend that it was for the benefit of the ocean mail service. Likewise, in all the evidence submitted to the committee of the Senate and in all the speeches made in the other body, this legislation was favored, because, it was contended, it would aid our merchant marine and induce the building of ships in our yards.

Every article which has appeared in the newspapers favorable to this legislation has proceeded upon the idea that it was for the benefit of shipbuilders and shipowners, and not for the benefit of the mail service. Now, if we are going to subsidize our ships, let us do it in a manly, open, and candid way, and not under the guise of a postal appropriation bill. [Applause.] If you favor ship subsidies, then make this appropriation directly out of the Treasury and do not fasten it upon the Post-Office Department, and thereby increase the already large deficit.

I have here a clipping from the New York Sun of the 17th instant from its Washington correspondent, giving an interview with Francis T. Bowles, formerly an admiral in the Navy, and now at the head of a private shipbuilding company. The interview quotes Mr. Bowles as urgently advocating this legislation as an aid to our shipbuilding industry, and he further states that this mail subsidy is in danger of failing to become a law on account of the "incapacity" of a few Republican Congressmen. I suppose this eminent prospective forager upon the Treasury assumes that all Democrats are suffering under incapacity for looting the Treasury, but that such defect only applies to a few of the gentlemen upon the other side.

The amendment under consideration contains a proviso that the amount expended for ocean mail service in any year shall not exceed the estimated revenues for the current year. It is stated that such a limitation constitutes a justification for this legislation. Let us see. I wish to point out the inconsistency and the ineffectiveness of this proviso. In the first place, it is doubtful if there is any profit upon our ocean mail service as operated at the present time, upon a proper and just calculation. The alleged profit has been obtained by deducting the sum now paid for carrying the ocean mail from the gross sum received from ocean postage. This is an improper method, as can be shown. Most of the ocean mail matter originates from interior points, but the cost of that part of the service is ignored. Neither is the cost of administration of any part of the postal service taken into consideration. The aggregate of these two items added to the sum now paid for carrying ocean mail would largely reduce if not extinguish the alleged profit on the present ocean mail service.

Again, under the act of March 3, 1891, which it is sought to amend, it is provided in section 1 of the original act that ocean mail contracts shall be made for not less than five and not more than ten years. Does anyone doubt that the alleged profits would be estimated at a large sum and that contracts would be entered into for the maximum term of ten years? Therefore, is it not apparent that the proviso is not effectual even for the purpose intended and does not remove the objectionable features from this legislation? The amendment ought to be rejected, and the only way to do so is to reject the entire conference report.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the House to vote down this conference report. The conference report does not give the clerks and carriers in first and second class post-offices an annual leave. It does not give to rural carriers $100 additional salary annually. It provides for an annual weighing of the mails, and it has been stated here that the Department indorses it. The Post-Office Department states that if Congress wishes to increase the pay or compensation to railroads, then they favor this proposition. They leave it to Congress.

But the most important proposition involved in this conference report is the ocean mail subsidy. I have stated before, and I repeat now, that this is a thin subterfuge. It is an attempt to gloss over and sugar coat the infamous ship-subsidy proposition, which has agitated Congress for years, and which, up to this time, be it said to the credit of the House of Representatives, the House has never indorsed. It is claimed that it will restore the American merchant marine. How much? It is a fact that the total revenue of the ocean mail service, gross, is $6,500,000 annually, and the gross cost of the ocean mail service to-day is $2,900,000, and they claim that this provision in the conference report here limits the cost to the actual amount received from the ocean mail service. This does not include the entire cost of the service at all, and I state that it is no more reasonable to give the entire gross revenue from this service for this purpose than it is to give the gross revenues of the New York City post-office for the benefit of ship subsidy and ocean mail subsidy.

So that, Mr. Speaker, it is a subterfuge pure and simple. I have not the time to discuss it. I have discussed it heretofore at this session of Congress in a limited way, and I regret that the time is so short that it is impossible to present the question as it should be presented to the House. I ask the House to vote down the conference report. Let the bill go back to the Post-Office Committee or go back to conference with instructions, and then I am sure it will come back here at least with the infamous ship-subsidy proposition eliminated from the bill. Mr. Speaker, the proposition here is to not give postal employees more compensation, but to give to shipowners and give to the railroads millions of dollars. I ask if that is a sample of what the American Congress should do in legislating for the whole country. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Republican party is afraid to stand up here and vote for ship subsidy as a separate proposition. It is cowardly to attempt to legislate in this manner. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. How much time has the gentleman from Tennessee remaining?

The SPEAKER. His time has been exhausted.

Mr. OVERSTREET. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Thirteen minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON].

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman to say, when he insisted we should continue to use our time, that he had but one more speech.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I said one other beside myself.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Very well; I misunderstood the gentleman, likely.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I expect to vote for this measure. It is hard in three minutes to state the reasons that I believe adequate to cause me to break with so many of my colleagues, but I have been associated with the ocean since I was 14 years of age. The high seas are the common inheritance of the nations. No nation can be great that does not participate in that inheritance, for two great reasons—both depending upon transportation. Those high seas are necessary for the transportation of power upon which the nation's life depends. America has just awakened to the fact that we must create the vehicles of this power—great battle ships—upon which sea power rests. Let me tell you from my knowledge of these vehicles that in case of war we will have to provide at least one-third of their value in additional auxiliaries and at least twice their numbers in men if we would have them efficient. It is out of the question at the present time for the Government itself to build and maintain these auxiliaries during the long years of peace.

It would require at least $100,000,000 to build and over $25,000,000 per year to maintain the additional auxiliaries and crews that would be required to make our present Navy efficient in case of a serious war.

Unless an adequate merchant marine is already flying our flag, it will be impossible to make proper provision after war comes. An attempt to do so would entail stupendous expense and prove utterly futile. Witness the case of the small Spanish war, which did not entail replacing men as result of casualties in battle. We poured out millions upon the so-called "mosquito fleet" and other inefficient auxiliaries, leaving us a legacy of the ill adopted and expensive fleet of small colliers now in the Navy. Due to the lack of a merchant marine we reached the utmost limit of our possibilities of naval expansion in the small war with Spain when our Navy was in its beginning. Our possibilities to-day are no greater and our requirements would be at least four times as great as then.

As a factor of national defense, a large merchant marine is a necessity for this country.

Now, the second reason: Transportation has become the greatest problem of the world, the result of the great economic forces producing differentiation in labor and the necessity for wider exchange of products. Within our own country this widening range has caused interstate commerce to grow by leaps and bounds until it now comprises 85 per cent of our total internal commerce. The same great law is working between nations—international commerce doubled between 1750 and 1800; it nearly trebled between 1800 and 1850; it increased more than fivefold between 1850 and 1900, and it now exceeds the vast sum of $20,000,000,000 annually—and this is but a foretaste of what is to come. Before the turn of this century I expect to see China alone add more than half this amount to the world's commerce. This stupendous growth indicates the great importance of foreign markets and the vital necessity of controlling the means of transportation.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBSON. I am very sorry I must decline to yield, having only three minutes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I just want to ask what this has got to do with a ship subsidy?

Mr. HOBSON. I am coming to that. I must decline to yield.

Heretofore this necessity for controlling the means of transportation has not rested heavily upon America, because our exports have been chiefly in agricultural products that have but limited competition from the great maritime nations. Conditions must now change. A century ago 85 per cent of our population were engaged in agricultural pursuits; to-day only 33 per cent are so engaged. Already our manufactured products exceed $15,000,000,000 annually, and the necessity for foreign markets is beginning to be felt. Soon foreign markets for a large export trade of manufactured products will be an absolute necessity for a healthy condition of the industries and for the prosperity of the nation. In seeking these markets we must come in direct competition with the great maritime nations that now control our means of transportation. It is self-evident that the governments that subsidize these steamship lines will bring about regulations that will give their own shippers advantage over our shippers dependent on these lines. We are now entering upon a new era of keen competition, where vast volumes of trade will turn upon advantage or disadvantage in transportation without a merchant marine. The Panama Canal will only play into the hands of the foreigner. The nation that can not control its own means of transportation must be left behind, no matter what its other conditions of advantage may be. We are soon to revise the tariff and take our manufacturing industries out of swaddling clothes. They will then begin to run, young giants that they are. Let us give them a fair chance and they will capture the markets of the world. With a merchant marine we win, without it we lose the prize. It is vain to hope that anything but Government aid can enable American citizens to compete with foreign governments. The postal subsidies provided in this measure should bring forth between thirty-five and forty new ships of 5,000 tons and upward to fly the American flag to South America, Asia, and Australasia. This would be a good start. But so vital is the question and so keen will be the competition that other measures will doubtless be required in time, especially the revision of our navigation laws, insuring the elimination of vessels of a third power in carrying cargo to and fro between America and a second power. Ultimately I expect to see governmental ownership of transoceanic steamship lines.

I wish to warn my colleagues of the Democratic party. This is not a question of "special interest;" it is a question of national security and national prosperity, and it is a national question in all lands. I will join in fighting to the death every governmental discrimination in favor of any class or interest. If the minority leader will have me put upon the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, as I have requested him to do, I will watch like a hawk and oppose every tendency to favor special interests.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HOBSON. I ask one minute more.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. HOBSON. I wish to appeal to my colleagues. Let us not postpone the beginning of the upbuilding of our merchant marine. Every year, every month, of delay is dangerous. Great foreign nations of the world who may be our enemies in war, who are sure to be our rivals in peace, are getting their hands upon our country's heart. Let us not mistake for a raid upon the Treasury a measure that would promote one of the most vital and most urgent needs of the nation. Should war come upon us, and should we find our fleet paralyzed because we have no auxiliaries, and should this impotence of the fleet bring about the seizure of our possessions, even the invasion of our continental territory, then in its convulsions the nation would rise and smite us and consign our party to another half century of opposition, if not to annihilation. Let us not relax vigilance in our watch over the Treasury, but let us help in this great movement, which must come as surely as day follows night.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, there is no bugaboo in this proposition to which the gentleman from Kansas has made so much ado. The amendment has been carefully and thoroughly considered by the Post-Office Department, and is strongly recommended by that Department.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I decline to yield. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] has inveighed at each opportunity since he has come to Congress wherever the word "railroad" happens to occur in any law or amendment. I fear that he may suffer from the new disease of "railroaditis," which might impair the usefulness of the gentleman in his favorite custom as a true follower and as a knight of Don Quixote tendencies, tilting against ghost armies of an imaginary foe.

Mr. Speaker, the only increase which will occur by reason of either this amendment or the appropriation affecting railway mail transportation is occasioned by the increased growth and volume of that great service.

Now, just a word with reference to the ocean mail amendment. I repeat the law has not been changed except to increase the rate with respect to second and third class vessels, and to limit that increase where the contracts are for mail facilities to South American and oriental ports. We have been unable under that law thus far to develop the mail facilities with those people because of the low rates. In a great bill involving such a character of bookkeeping and calculations and statistics you can not take it up in a body of this size of membership and treat each amendment in detail. You must leave much to the Department and to the examination of witnesses in committees. We have to sacrifice some things—not sacrificing principle always—for the good of harmony between the two Houses and the Executive Departments. This great bill is now upon its final passage. A negative vote returns it to conference, with all of the complications which might arise; and an affirmative vote passes the legislation for this Congress. This legislation relative to all of these matters was indorsed and recommended by the Executive Department, including the President.

The ocean mail act was a Republican law. It has been advocated in every Republican national convention since 1888. It has been recommended this year more than once by an Executive message from the White House. This provision therefore is in keeping with the policy of the Administration to improve the mail facilities, the freight shipping facilities, the development of the relationship of a friendly character with these people with whom we are undertaking to cement a union which may last as long as we shall last. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] says the mail facilities on the Pacific are now adequate. There is no adequacy in respect to mail or shipping facilities between American and oriental ports in American bottoms. The fleet which all of us take such pride in, and which has challenged the admiration of the world in its grand parade around the Horn, and which is now on its way to the Orient, is followed by ships of foreign build, floating foreign flags, in order to transport the coal which gives life to the motion of that fleet. This amendment proposes to stimulate the construction of an auxiliary equipment in support of the Navy in order to avoid in the future the necessity of appealing to foreign vessels to aid us in making demonstrations of the ability of our own Navy. While that is in progress, under this same law, which has been upon the statute books for more than fifteen years, we make it possible for the American merchant and farmer to have communication with South American ports without first sending his letters and his freight to Liverpool and London, from there to be sent in British or German vessels, which are paid a greater allowance by way of additional pay than we authorize under this amendment. I think, Mr. Speaker, that this Congress will be in poor business to refuse this, and those gentlemen who feel that the Administration has been slighted because his policies have not been advocated should hereafter hold their peace if they vote against this amendment which is advocated by him and indorsed by him. And his disappointment will be as great as that of any individual upon this floor if this vote shall fall.

I ask for a vote. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the eyes seemed to have it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 143, nays 155, answered "present" 6, not voting 84, as follows:

For the session:

Mr. BUTLER with Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia.
Mr. COUSINS with Mr. FLOOD.
Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. ALLEN]. I voted "no" on the roll call. I desire to withdraw my vote and be marked "present."
The name of Mr. LEVER was called, and he answered "present."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I maintain a pair with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT]. I voted "aye." I desire to keep my pair, and therefore withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The name of Mr. BUTLER was called, and he answered "present."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I am not advised of the difference between the two votes. I reserve the right to ask for a recapitulation.

Mr. SULZER. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The vote as handed to the Chair by the Clerk is 147 ayes and 155 noes. [Loud applause.] The vote is so close, under the confusion that existed, the Chair will order a recapitulation of the vote.

The vote was recapitulated.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Speaker, I heard the name of my colleague [Mr. KNOWLAND] called in the recapitulation. He is not here. He has gone home.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, may I be recorded?

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I ask whether I may still be recorded—if I can vote?

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present, giving attention when his name was called?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I came in the Hall of the House after the vote.

Mr. NYE. Mr. Speaker, I am recorded on the affirmative side. I voted "no." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. STANLEY. I wish to be recorded as voting "no."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and giving attention when his name was called, and did he fail to hear it?

Mr. STANLEY. I was present before the roll call was concluded.

The SPEAKER. But was the gentleman present when his name was called, or should have been called, and giving attention?

Mr. STANLEY. There was so much confusion in the room that I can not say, Mr. Speaker, positively. I was called out of the room for a moment, and came back—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is my impression, but I can not say positively.

The SPEAKER. Well, the gentleman must be able to say positively, in order to bring himself within the rule.

Mr. STANLEY. I should love to vote "no," if I could.

The SPEAKER. Upon this question the yeas are 143, the nays are 155, "present" 6, and the conference report is not agreed to.

Mr. OVERSTREET and Mr. MOON of Tennessee rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move to suspend the rules, disagree to the Senate amendments to the post-office appropriation bill, and request a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to suspend the rules, further insist on the disagreement to the Senate amendments—

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. One moment. (Continuing) to the Senate amendments, and ask for a further conference.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman from Indiana having been defeated by the House on the vote, has he not lost control of this bill, and does not the right to make that motion go to the other side?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will reply to the gentleman that there are 50 to 100 amendments—

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish—

The SPEAKER. One moment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. There are 50 to 100 amendments, more or less—

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman has lost on all of them—

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that he ought to be privileged to reply to the question of the gentleman. [Applause on the Republican side.] The Chair does not desire to yield until he has had the opportunity of saying two sentences. From the discussion on the floor, with the many amendments, having in mind the speech of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MUMFORD] and the speeches of others, the Chair, in exercising the power of the Chair to recognize Members, does not believe that he ought to refuse to recognize the gentleman from Indiana, chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to make the motion. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That under the rules and practices of the House, which particular rules are not suspended by a motion to suspend the rules, the Chair is obliged, the gentleman from Indiana having failed to carry the motion he made, to recognize somebody upon this side of the House.

The SPEAKER. On the contrary, this being a motion to suspend the rules, and for the reasons stated by the Chair, the Speaker of the House recognizes the gentleman from Indiana. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If the Speaker will permit me, in the first place, I did not desire to interrupt the Speaker at all, and take pleasure in apologizing to him, if I interrupted him.

The SPEAKER. Oh, there was nothing of that.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. But the next inquiry I desire to make is this: Is it not the result of the action of the House, on the motion that has been taken, that the gentleman from Indiana is defeated on each and every one of the amendments, and do they not all go back to conference?

Mr. SHERMAN. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. If the rules are suspended and the House further insists, the bill will go back to conference, provided the Senate agrees to a conference. As many as favor the motion—

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I demand a second.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second. I was merely waiting until the points of order were disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules, a second is ordered. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] has twenty minutes and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] has twenty minutes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana made a motion which we should have made on this side if we had been recognized. I desire to say that we have no objection to the adoption of the motion of the gentleman from Indiana. We concur fully in that motion, and we are willing to have it done without a roll call.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Speaker announced the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. OVERSTREET, Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey, and Mr. MOON of Tennessee.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 18347) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PENROSE, Mr. BURROWS, and Mr. CLAY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4316. An act to further amend the act entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 22009. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to remove certain obstructions to navigation from the main ship channel, Key West Harbor, Florida, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 21946. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 21897) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SCOTT, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. CULBERSON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 21875) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which concurrence by the House was requested.

PUBLICITY OF CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 20112, with committee and other amendments, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the amended bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20112) providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected, prohibiting fraud in registrations and elections, and providing data for the apportionment of Representatives among the States.

Be it enacted, etc., That the term "political committee" under the provisions of this act shall include the national committees of all political parties and the national Congressional campaign committees of all political parties and all committees, associations, or organizations which shall in two or more States influence the result or attempt to influence the result of an election at which Representatives in Congress are to be elected.

SEC. 2. That every political committee as defined in this act shall have a chairman and a treasurer. It shall be the duty of the treasurer to keep a detailed and exact account of all money or its equivalent received by or promised to such committee or any member thereof, or by or to any person acting under its authority or in its behalf, and the name of every person, firm, association, or committee from whom received, and of all expenditures, disbursements, and promises of payment or disbursement made by the committee or any member thereof, or by any person acting under its authority or in its behalf, and to whom paid, distributed, or disbursed. No officer or member of such committee, or other person acting under its authority or in its behalf, shall receive any money or its equivalent, or expend or promise to expend any money on behalf of such committee until after a chairman and treasurer of such committee shall have been chosen.

SEC. 3. That every payment or disbursement made by a political committee exceeding $10 in amount be evidenced by a receipted bill stating the particulars of expense, and every such record, voucher, receipt, or account shall be preserved for fifteen months after the election to which it relates.

SEC. 4. That whoever, acting under the authority or in behalf of such political committee, whether as a member thereof or otherwise, receives any contribution, payment, loan, gift, advance, deposit, or promise of money or its equivalent, shall, on demand, and in any event within five days after the receipt of such contribution, payment, loan, gift, advance, deposit, or promise, render to the treasurer of such political committee a detailed account of the same, together with the name and address from whom received, and said treasurer shall forthwith enter the same in a ledger or record to be kept by him for that purpose.

SEC. 5. That the treasurer of such political committee shall, not more than fifteen days and not less than ten days before an election at which Representatives in Congress are to be elected in two or more States, file in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives at Washington, D. C., with said Clerk, an itemized detailed statement, sworn to by said treasurer and conforming to the requirements of the following section of this act. It shall also be the duty of said treasurer to file a similar and final statement with said Clerk within thirty days after such election, such final statement also to be sworn to by said treasurer and to conform to the requirements of the following section of this act. The statements so filed with the Clerk of the House shall be preserved by him for fifteen months, and shall be a part of the public records of his office, and shall be open to public inspection.

SEC. 6. That the statements required by the preceding section of this act shall state:

First. The name and address of each person, firm, association, or committee who or which has contributed, promised, loaned, or advanced to such political committee, or any officer, member, or agent thereof, either in one or more items, money or its equivalent of the aggregate amount or value of $100 or more.

Second. The total sum contributed, promised, loaned, or advanced to such political committee, or to any officer, member, or agent thereof, in amounts less than $100.

Third. The total sum of all contributions, promises, loans, and advances received by such political committee or any officer, member, or agent thereof.

Fourth. The name and address of each person, firm, association, or committee to whom such political committee, or any officer, member, or agent thereof, has disbursed, distributed, contributed, loaned, advanced, or promised any sum of money or its equivalent of the amount or value of $10 or more, and the purpose thereof.

Fifth. The total sum disbursed, distributed, contributed, loaned, advanced, or promised by such political committee, or any officer, member, or agent thereof, where the amount or value of such disbursement, distribution, loan, advance, or promise to any one person, firm, association, or committee in one or more items is less than $10.

Sixth. The total sum disbursed, distributed, contributed, loaned, advanced, or promised by such political committee or any officer, member, or agent thereof.

SEC. 7. That every person, firm, association, or committee, except political committees as hereinbefore defined, that shall expend or promise any sum of money or other thing of value amounting to $50 or more for the purpose of influencing or controlling, in two or more States, the result of an election at which Representatives to the Congress of the United States are elected, unless he or it shall contribute the same to a political committee as hereinbefore defined, shall file the statements of the same under oath as required by section 6 of this act in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, at Washington, D. C., which statements shall be held by said clerk in all respects as required by section 5 of this act.

SEC. 8. That any person may in connection with such election incur and pay from his own private funds for the purpose of influencing or controlling, in two or more States, the result of an election at which Representatives to the Congress of the United States are elected, all personal expenses for his traveling and for purposes incidental to traveling, for stationery and postage, and for telegraph and telephone service, without being subject to the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. That the foregoing provisions of this act shall not apply to the proprietors and publishers of publications issued at regular intervals in respect to the ordinary conduct of their business, and nothing contained in this act shall limit or affect the right of any person to spend money for proper legal expenses in maintaining or contesting the results of any election.

SEC. 10. That every person willfully violating any of the foregoing provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 11. That if, at any election for Representative or Delegate in Congress, or at any primary election for the nomination of a candidate for Representative or Delegate in Congress held in pursuance of State or Territorial law, any person knowingly personates and votes, or attempts to vote, in the name of any other person, whether living, dead, or fictitious; or votes more than once at the same election, or primary election, for any candidate for the same office; or votes at a place where he may not be lawfully entitled to vote; or votes without having a lawful right to vote; or does any unlawful act to secure an opportunity to vote for himself, or any other person; or by force, threat, intimidation, bribery, reward, or offer thereof, unlawfully prevents any qualified voter of any State or of any Territory from freely exercising the right of suffrage, or by any such means induces any voter to refuse to exercise such right, or compels or induces by any such means any officer of an election or primary election in any such State or Territory to receive a vote from a person not legally qualified or entitled to vote, or interferes in any manner with any officer of such election or primary election in the discharge of his duties, or by any such means or other unlawful means induces any officer of an election or primary election, or officer whose duty it is to ascertain, announce, or declare the result of such election or primary election, or give or make any certificate, document, or evidence in relation thereto, to violate or refuse to comply with his duty or any law regulating the same, or knowingly receives the vote of any person not entitled to vote, or refuses to receive the vote of any person entitled to vote, or aids, counsels, procures, or advises any such voter, person, or officer to do any act hereby made a crime, or omit to do any duty the omission of which is hereby made a crime, or attempts to do so, he shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment not more than three years, or by both, and shall pay the costs of the prosecution.

SEC. 12. That if at any registration of voters for an election for Representative or Delegate in Congress, or for any primary election for the nomination of a candidate for Representative or Delegate in Congress held in pursuance of State or Territorial law, any person knowingly personates and registers, or attempts to register in the name of any other person, whether living, dead, or fictitious, or fraudulently registers or fraudulently attempts to register, not having a lawful right so to do, or does any unlawful act to secure registration for him or any other person, or by force, threat, menace, intimidation, bribery, reward, or offer, or promise thereof, or other unlawful means, prevents or hinders any person having a lawful right to register from duly exercising such right, or compels or induces by any of such means, or other unlawful means, any officer of registration to admit to registration any person not legally entitled thereto, or interferes in any manner with any officer of registration in the discharge of his duties, or by any such means, or other unlawful means, induces any officer of registration to violate or refuse to comply with his duty or any law regulating the same, or if any such officer knowingly and willfully registers as a voter any person not entitled to be registered, or refuses to so register any person entitled to be registered, or if any such officer or other person who has any duty to perform in relation to such registration or election or primary election, in ascertaining, announcing, or declaring the result thereof, or in giving or making any certificate, document, or evidence in relation thereto, knowingly neglects or refuses to perform any duty required by law, or violates any duty imposed by law, or does any act unauthorized by law relating to or affecting such registration or election or primary election, or the result thereof, or any certificate, document, or evidence in relation thereto, or if any person aids, counsels, procures, or advises any such voter, person, or officer to do any act hereby made a crime, or to omit any act the omission of which is hereby made a crime, every such person shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment not more than three years, or by both, and shall pay the costs of the prosecution.

Every registration made under the laws of any State or Territory for any State or other election, or primary election at which such Representative or Delegate in Congress may be nominated or elected, shall be deemed to be a registration within the meaning of this section, notwithstanding such registration is also made for the purposes of any State, Territorial, or municipal election, or primary election.

SEC. 13. That every officer of an election at which any Representative or Delegate in Congress is voted for, or of any primary election for the nomination of a candidate for Representative or Delegate in Congress, whether such officer of election be appointed or created by or under any law or authority of the United States, or by or under any State, Territorial, district, or municipal law or authority, who neglects or refuses to perform any duty in regard to such election or primary election required of him by any law of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, or who violates any duty so imposed, or who knowingly does any acts thereby unauthorized, with intent to affect any such election or primary election or the result thereof, or who fraudulently makes any false certificate of the result of such election or primary election in regard to such Representative or Delegate, or who withholds, conceals, or destroys any certificate of record so required by law respecting the election of any such Representative or Delegate or primary election for the nomination of a candidate for such Representative or Delegate, or who neglects or refuses to make and return such certificate as required by law, or who aids, counsels, procures, or advises any voter, person, or officer to do any act by sections 11 or 12 thereof made a crime, or to omit to do any duty the omission of which is by this or any of such sections made a crime, or attempts to do so, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment not more than three years, or by both, and shall pay the costs of the prosecution.

SEC. 14. That for the purpose of enabling Congress to apportion Representatives among the several States in accordance with the plan provided in the second section of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, the Director of the Census, as soon as practicable after each decennial census of population, shall submit to Congress a report of the population by States as shown by such census, which report shall also show the number of male citizens, white and colored, respectively, in each State, 21 years of age and over, the number of such male citizens in each State found to be illiterate, the number of votes cast by male citizens in each Congressional district at the last preceding general election, the number of such male citizens in each State that had not complied with the registration and election laws therein requiring the payment of a poll or property tax as a condition precedent to the right to register or vote, and the number of such male citizens in each State to whom the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial offices of the State or members of the legislature thereof, has been denied or in any way abridged except for participation in crime.

SEC. 15. That all prosecutions under this act shall be commenced within one year after the commission of the offense, and shall be brought in the United States circuit court within the district in which such offenses occurred.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule a second is ordered, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] to twenty minutes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration is the McCall publicity bill, with certain quite important and substantial amendments. The publicity bill requires campaign committees—that is, the national committees—and Congressional committees of the parties to make reports to the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the contributions received and disbursed for the purpose of influencing elections at which the Representatives and Delegates in Congress are chosen. The reports are to be made in detail, but that bill does not reach local committees at all. It does not prevent a candidate for Congress in any district of the United States spending any amount of money, or debauching the ballot with the use of money if he sees fit. The bill does not undertake to prevent any person or any corporation or association from contributing money for campaign purposes.

We passed a law in the last Congress making it unlawful for any Federal corporation to contribute money to influence any election, and prohibiting local corporations from contributing money to influence Federal elections. I would not say that the McCall bill is a namby-pamby measure, for that would not be just. It is a salutary measure; it does deter exorbitant contributions for campaign purposes by those who may desire to receive a quid pro quo either in legislation or administration.

Our friends on the other side of the aisle, I think to a man, have announced and pledged their united support repeatedly during the session of Congress to the McCall publicity bill. The amendments I have proposed in connection with that bill go much farther. We all agree, Mr. Speaker, that the ballot is the very foundation of free institutions, and that there can be no higher assault upon the integrity of the republican government than an attack upon the ballot by corrupt and fraudulent use of money or by any other kind of fraud.

Under the law as it exists to-day Representatives to this body may be elected by the rankest fraud, by force and intimidation, and there is no law on the statute books that can reach the perpetrators of the wrongs. We are absolutely and utterly helpless to protect the ballot that elects Representatives in this body and electors that choose the President and Vice-President of the country; absolutely helpless.

Two of the sections that are contained in this amendment are substantially reenactments of sections that were contained in the Federal election law that was repealed under the last Cleveland Administration. They have been upheld by the courts; they are salutary provisions, and make it a crime for any person or association of persons to bribe or corrupt or intimidate electors. They make it a crime in the election or registration officers to commit any kind of fraud against the ballot. They surround the ballot in the selection of Members of this body with sufficient safeguards to warrant its purity, and I undertake to say that no man, no Member of this body, should object to a law the only purpose of which is to secure honest elections.

No Member of this body, it would seem to me, ought to oppose a bill that confers upon the Federal Government the power to punish crime against the ballot at elections where Federal officeholders are chosen. [Applause.] The amendments go beyond the old elections law sections, to which I have referred, by including primary elections, and I have no kind of doubt that Congress has authority to regulate and control primary elections held under State and Territorial laws where they are called for the purpose of nominating candidates for Congress and Delegates thereto.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I prefer not to yield. I hope the gentleman will excuse me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SHERLEY. But, Mr. Speaker, if the Speaker will allow me to state what I desire, I think that the gentleman will yield.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SHERLEY. I only wanted to know what sections the gentleman is referring to.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will state to the gentleman from Kentucky, if he will give me his attention, that the amendments begin with section 11. Section 11 relates to elections and primary elections, and section 12 relates to registrations, and section 14 relates to another very important amendment that is proposed, and that is a provision requiring the Director of the Census, as soon as practicable after each decennial census of the population, to collect material to enable the Congress to apportion Representatives among the various States in accordance with the plan outlined in the second section of the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution. [Applause on the Republican side.] I believe that to be perhaps the most important of all the amendments. It is the belief of a great many people, Mr. Speaker, that there are probably twenty-five Representatives in this body holding credentials, assisting in the enactment of legislation, who, if the constitutional plan of apportionment were adhered to, could not be here. I believe the Constitution should be respected.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I must decline to yield. I have not the time. The Constitution is the basis of union. It prescribes the relations between the States and it declares the manner of the apportionment of political power among the several States. The amendment to which I refer does not commit Congress to the policy of reduction, but it does require the Director of the Census to provide Congress with the necessary data, so when the time comes, if Congress should see fit to enforce the Constitution, to obey the mandate of the organic law of the country and respect the oath of office which each Member takes, it will have the necessary data and can do it intelligently. Mr. Speaker, I regard these amendments as of vital importance in safeguarding the elections of the country, in protecting the ballot.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, if anything were wanting to demonstrate to every intelligent man in the United States that the leaders and managers of the Republican party here on this floor are guilty of hypocrisy, deceit, and false pretense, we have that demonstration here to-day. [Applause on the Democratic side.] For two weeks, nay, for more than a month, the identical bill which you have reported here to-day, being the first ten sections of the pending bill, has been on the Calendar of the House, properly reported by a committee duly appointed by the Speaker of the House, and during all that time the Speaker has persistently and stubbornly refused to give recognition to any member of that committee to call it up and move its passage. Now, in order to hide behind a shabby, false pretense and to deceive the public, you hypocritically and falsely pretend that you want to enact a campaign contribution publicity law, when, in fact and in truth, your real purpose is to kill it. You have linked this wise and meritorious measure to one of the skeletons of the past, well knowing and intending that this unholy union ought to and will destroy every hope of its passage. This measure is injected into the House without consideration by any committee as a political scheme and trick, knowing that your own partisans would defeat it rather than see it become law.

We on this side will not dodge the issue. We earnestly favor publicity of campaign contributions, but we are unalterably opposed to force bills and Federal supervision of elections. Since we are compelled by your rule to vote for or against the pending measure as an entirety, without the privilege of amendment, we will vote against it. If you Republicans were in good faith, if every claim you make to political integrity were not a fraud and a sham, you would permit the House to vote on the passage of the McCall bill without attaching to it this odious and revolting proposition of Federal control and supervision over State elections. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] really wants the intelligent judgment of the House on his pet measure—a force bill—he can get it. We welcome the issue. It should be presented on its own merits, as a separate bill, duly reported by the proper committee of the House, and presented in an orderly, decent way. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I warn you, gentlemen, that you will deceive no man by your insincere, hypocritical, spectacular performance here to-day.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I will request to be notified when I have occupied five minutes of my time. This bill couples together three distinct, separate, and only remotely connected propositions; first, the McCall publicity bill, just as it was reported to the House; second, a Federal election law, and third, a proposition to provide machinery and to obtain the information upon which to base a reduction of Southern representation in this body and in the Electoral College. The patent purpose of this delectable scheme is to put the Democratic membership of this body in the apparent, but false, attitude of opposing publicity legislation [laughter on the Republican side]—that is right, and it is a sham and fraud and you know it, every one of you [renewed laughter on the Republican side]—by coupling it with other measures that we can not and will not support, and at the same time to kill the McCall bill, to which the party in power is opposed, but which it has not the courage to openly destroy.

Further comment is unnecessary. The scheme is too plain to require further exposure. So far as the Federal election law feature of this composite measure is concerned, I have simply this to say: There is no demand among the people of any section for such a measure. The people everywhere were so disgusted with our last Federal election law that they will not soon desire a new one. Each State, by fair laws, fairly enforced, can and does regulate the various elections held within its limits.

So far as this proposition to direct the Director of the Census to collect the information upon which to base a bill to reduce the representation of certain States is concerned, I have this to say: First, this is merely a sop thrown to the negro voters in the doubtful States, in the hope that their flagging zeal may be revived and renewed.

Second, it is utterly insincere, uncandid, deceitful, and intended to deceive. Four years ago the Republican party put a plank in its platform promising action of this kind. It then won one of the most sweeping victories in the history of American politics. During every instant of time that has elapsed since then the Republican party has been in power, having large majorities in each House and having the Presidency. It has not made a single attempt to redeem this pledge except this "horseplay" during the closing hours of this session, when everybody knows that the bill can not possibly pass the Senate, or even receive consideration in that body—

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I can not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HARDWICK (continuing). At a time when even a half-dead Senator from the South could easily speak it to death, and when it has no chance whatever of passage, in the face of the vigorous and able opposition that it will certainly and surely encounter from many able and vigilant Senators from the South. Third, if the Republican party is willing to deal fairly and justly with the South and abandon the fifteenth amendment, I for one—and I believe I speak for a vast majority of the white people of the South—would be willing to accept reduction of representation, if we could thereby secure for ourselves and our children the purity and integrity of our Anglo-Saxon civilization and immunity from future interference from outside and ignorant sources on this negro question.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. I have not the time. Reduction of representation has no terrors for the South. Do not deceive yourselves, my friends, on that score. Heavy as is the price, unfair and unjust as we believe it would be to exact this pound of flesh, yet if the people of America do require it, freely will the South pay it for the protection of her homes and the preservation of her civilization.

Gentlemen, this is "horseplay," pure and simple. You bring forward this measure in this House simply because your party does not dare kill the McCall bill and does not want to vote on these propositions separately and on the merits of each of them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman yield now for a question?

Mr. HARDWICK. No, I can not; my time has expired. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LASSITER].

Mr. LASSITER. With some hesitation, yet in view of the political evil of so great magnitude, notorious by the public disclosures of the corrupt use of money in recent campaigns, I felt it my duty as a member of the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress to vote favorably on the report of the bill which bears the name of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL]. The bill itself did not entirely commend itself to my judgment, yet there were evils to be remedied and there was a demand on the part of both of the political parties that they should be grappled with. Amendatory of this bill to correct an evil recognized by all, we have to-day a proposition to enter into a scheme of legislation which has been discredited for more than a generation. I prefer to believe that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] does not represent the sentiment of the leaders of the majority in attempting to revive the principles of the force bill, which an overwhelming majority of the American people buried in an unhonored grave. [Applause.]

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GILLESPIE] two minutes.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Speaker, I desire in the two minutes simply to express my protest against this way of dealing with the most delicate and the most dangerous subject that affects my people. It is thrown into this House on this occasion simply as a move on the political chessboard to avoid the demand of the people of this country for publicity of contributions to campaigns. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I warn every man looking into my face that you are not helping the condition of the negro in the South by making such plays as this. I am a friend of those people. I have defended them. They nursed me in my infancy, they protected my mother and her three infant children when my father was fighting in the Confederate armies and after his death in the war in 1862. After the war was over, when property was gone and helpless widowhood of my mother and our fatherless childhood were the portion of my family, these old slaves were our best friends. I am a friend of those people, and in their name I plead with you; do not play politics in this manner upon such a dangerous question affecting the interests of both the white and the black people of the Southern States. They are a child race. We must and will protect ourselves against their weaknesses. You and the world must understand this. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HARDWICK. I would ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] to use some of his time, unless he is going to consume it all in one speech.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, this bill is divided into three parts. The first ten sections are based on State election laws which are quite common. The law of the State of New York, which my colleague [Mr. PARSONS] and my colleague [Mr. HARRISON] and myself helped to draft, is very similar. It applies wherever the interest at elections is greater than it is at primaries. The second part applies to an equally important series of States, such as described by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] in the Congressional Directory, in which they say that in their States the primaries are much more important and better attended than the elections. Fraud at primaries is worse than fraud at elections, because it goes farther back and determines more particularly the candidates to be voted for.

The third part, those States described by my colleague [Mr. COCKRAN] the other day, when on his responsibility as a Member he notified or warned certain of his colleagues on that side of the House that they had "lynched the Constitution." One part of the Constitution is as important and as sacred as another. [Applause on the Republican side.] A free and fair election is certainly as important as an election at which some men may use some money. I take it that my colleague spoke with some knowledge when he addressed his party colleagues, and, deeming him to be correct, I assume that on his responsibility as a Member he and others, committed, as they are, to the McCall bill, will recognize, as we must, the fairness of the law and vote for this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE].

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, some of the gentlemen on the other side of this House who have discussed this bill have questioned the sincerity of the Republicans in proposing it. I want to say to the gentlemen upon the other side that I am no new convert to the provisions of this bill. The first bill that I had the honor to introduce in this body when I became a Member of Congress was a bill reenacting the substantial provisions of the Revised Statutes that are contained in sections 11 and 12 of the bill now before the House. During the last Congress I reintroduced the same bill; the bill was reported favorably from the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Members of Congress, and upon that bill I made a somewhat extended speech to the House on the 19th day of December, 1905. I also have a similar bill pending in this Congress. The features of the so-called "force bill" that gave it its name are not included in this bill. There are no provisions in this bill giving to the National Government any right to supervise or control the election of Members of the House or of electors. The sections of the bill to which I shall in the main direct the brief remarks I shall make at this time on the bill simply prescribe that if fraud be committed in the election of a Member of the House, the Federal Government, through the Federal courts, shall have the right to punish those who are guilty of such frauds. It means that the Federal Government shall not be required to depend upon any other sovereignty for the purity of its own elections. That is the entire ground covered by sections 11 and 12 of the bill, and that we have the constitutional power to enact such legislation can not be doubted. The section of the Constitution itself—

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONYNGE. I can not yield. I can not make an argument in five minutes and then submit to interruptions.

Mr. HARDY. Just one question.

Mr. BONYNGE. I can not yield, I have said to the gentleman from Texas. The Constitution provides that the Congress shall have the right to make laws regulating the election of Representatives. The United States Supreme Court has repeatedly passed upon the statutes which are reenacted in sections 11 and 12 of this bill. In the case of Ex parte Seibold (100 U. S., 387) the court declared the exact language of these sections to be constitutional. And in the case Ex parte Yarborough (110 U. S., 651) it said—and I quote a single sentence from the decision in that case:

If this Government is anything more than a mere aggregation of delegated agents of other States and governments, each of which is superior to the General Government, it must have the power to protect the elections on which its existence depends from violence and corruption.

Now, my friends upon the other side have been clamoring from the beginning of this session for a law to secure honesty in Federal elections. Here we present it to you. What can be your objection to sections 11 and 12 of this bill? Would you simply prohibit one kind of fraud, the use of money, at elections, or would you make a thorough and complete law which will prevent every kind of fraud and corruption at the elections of Members of the House? If you want the latter, you can obtain it by voting for this bill.

That is what this bill will accomplish. I will only say a few words, as my time is limited, in regard to section 14 of the bill. It, too, is prepared under constitutional authority. The necessity for such legislation, perhaps, can be better shown by comparison of the votes cast for the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], who has spoken against that provision of the bill, and the vote cast for myself. In order to be fair, let me say that under the laws of the State of Colorado women have the right to vote, and there is one Representative elected by the State at large, which, of course, makes the vote larger than it otherwise would be. Taking the Congressional Directory, I find that my friend from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] received 1,743 votes, and apparently those were all the votes cast. At the last election at which I was given my commission to serve in this body there were cast for me 47,540 votes against 31,000-odd for my Democratic opponent and some 6,000 scattering votes. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will ask the gentleman from Georgia to exhaust his time, as debate on this side will be closed in one speech.

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, the grand old party, of which you are the nominal head at this end of the Capitol, the G. O. P.—the Great Old Procrastinator—has resolved itself into a vaudeville stock company. You dare not face any great public question in a fair and straightforward way. The gentleman who has just taken his seat will not now tell us whether he will vote for the McCall bill just as it was reported from the committee, without the injection of this nongermane matter contained in the Crumpacker bill.

Mr. BONYNGE. Does the gentleman desire an answer?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. BONYNGE. I would vote for it, but I would also go further and make the bill complete, to prevent the commission of fraud. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman has not answered the question. Now, what are you trying to do, Mr. Speaker? Does the gentleman from Indiana think that he can turn the hands of the clock of time back half a century? Does he think that he can reproduce the pandemonium of reconstruction and carpetbag rule throughout the South once more? Does he think the business interests of the North, its manufacturing and its commercial interests, will stand for a reinauguration of that unprecedented saturnalia?

You have added to the McCall bill, which we Democrats want, these provisions, beginning with section 11 of the Crumpacker bill, and on through to the end of this Crumpacker bill, and you are doing it for the purpose of securing the defeat of the McCall bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You know that nobody who believes in American institutions would vote for section 11 of the Crumpacker bill. It puts the execution of State laws in the hands of the Congress and courts of the United States.

You know that nobody would vote for section 12 of that bill, which does the same thing; and which prescribes a Federal punishment for a violation of State laws. You know that if there were anybody stupid enough and foolish enough to go back to the force bill of Harrison's Administration they would not be willing to go so far as the latter part of section 12 goes, which reads that—

Every registration made under the laws of any State or Territory for any State or other election, or primary election at which such Representative or Delegate in Congress may be nominated or elected, shall be deemed to be a registration within the meaning of this section, notwithstanding such registration is also made for the purposes of any State, Territorial, or municipal election or primary election.

You know that section 13 is obnoxious to the same objection, to wit, handing over to the Federal Government the punishment of violations of State laws committed within the State. You know that section 14 of this bill is an opening wedge for the reduction of Southern representation. You do not say the reduction of representation of the States under the fourteenth amendment, because that is not your desire.

You have no idea of reducing the representation of California, Massachusetts, or Connecticut because they disfranchise illiterates. Why, the very wording of the resolution requires the Census Department not to report the number of those disfranchised, but to give the number of "whites and blacks." That indicates your purpose.

Somebody said a moment ago something about somebody having said that the South had "lynched the Constitution." She has not lynched a single jot or tittle of it. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] That statement is simply false. Southern States have passed constitutions that the Supreme Court of the United States has upheld, and you gentlemen wish to take advantage of all that, or more than some of these constitutions show. If you want to ignore the fifteenth amendment, if you want to recognize the fifteenth amendment as "obsolete," if you are willing to restore to Mississippi the power she had in the old time frankly to place her suffrage along racial lines, we are ready for it. You can do it whenever you please; and as to the reduction of our representation, in God's name take it, and welcome to it, too. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

But be honest when you do it. Do not come here and introduce a bill to gain white votes in the North under the guise of enforcing the fourteenth amendment while you are holding out to white men in the South the hope of ignoring the fifteenth amendment; catching "niggers" on one hook and white folks on the other. Are you in favor of the McCall bill to publish campaign contributions or not? Are you in favor of a law that shall publish campaign contributions or not? Are you fools enough to imagine that the American people are fools enough to be fooled by this vaudeville performance? "Whom the gods would ruin they first make mad." Why, if you dared pass this bill through both Houses, if you dared make it a law—and you dare not—it would damn the Republican party worse than the force bill defeated Harrison. [Applause.] I am not speaking now in any personal way, I am speaking to you from a parliamentary and party standpoint impersonally. You are, and you know you are, hypocrites, humbugs, false pretenses.

You are actors in a vaudeville rôle that only excels that in which my friend, Mr. KAHN, the other day resumed his former profession, in one respect, and that is that this performance is a more serious question than that for which he was then conscripted. Like children, you are playing with fire in a powder magazine. Is there one of you that is fool enough to imagine that the South is ever again going to submit to the policies to which she submitted when she was weak and helpless, during reconstruction days? She is more populous now. She is richer to-day. She has manufactures now. She has iron and steel and powder and clothing now—all manufactured at home. She had none in those old, sad times. If you want to reduce Southern representation upon the ground that the South disfranchises negroes—although it is not, as a matter of fact, true that the South has disfranchised a single man simply and purely as a negro—if you choose to take that stand, take it honestly and take it bravely. Repeat the fifteenth amendment and take away Southern representation. We will be ten thousand times better off without it than, under present conditions, with the fifteenth amendment in force, we are with it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time on this side to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, there is certainly nothing proposed in this bill that can not meet the approbation of every fair-minded citizen, and especially of every patriotic citizen who believes in the maintenance of representative institutions. [Applause on the Republican side.] The bill relates, in the first place, to providing publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are chosen. It relates, in the second place, to punishment of fraud in registrations and elections, including primary elections; in other words, putting those elections under the control of the Federal courts; and it relates, in the third place, to the restoration of the constitutional rule of representation in this House.

So far as the first subject is concerned, there is a consensus of opinion. Democrats and Republicans alike say that campaign contributions ought to be curtailed and brought within the province of the law. I do not care, therefore, to discuss that proposition.

I do not care to discuss, either, the second proposition, that the Federal courts ought to have, as they once had, control of Federal elections, so as to prevent frauds at those elections. I prefer to discuss, rather, the third proposition; and I say to you that however demoralizing campaign contributions may be, in excess of those that are honest, and however demoralizing frauds in registrations and at primary elections may be, there is a greater evil than either, and that is that gentlemen should come to this House of Representatives, not by virtue of the votes of their fellow-citizens, but by virtue of the suppression of the votes of their fellow-citizens. Better elections, even those that require safeguards against fraud, than no elections at all. Better the maintenance of representative government in accordance with the terms of the Constitution than to have men sit on the floor of this House and engage in legislation who have no letter of attorney from any citizens of the United States to represent them. It is a notorious fact that in certain States representation and population have no relation to each other. I sat down this morning, and from the Congressional Directory compiled a few figures. I took them from the State of Mississippi and compared them with figures from the State of Pennsylvania.

The Representative of the First District of Mississippi, for example, is sitting here by virtue of 2,563 votes. The Representative of the First District of Pennsylvania is sitting here by virtue of 29,870 votes. [Applause on the Republican side.] I might continue this comparison of districts throughout the whole list with the same result. There is not a Representative, an alleged Representative, from the State of Mississippi on the floor of this House who had any opposition to his election. The total vote of 19,998 that sends eight men here from the State of Mississippi is less than the number of votes in a single district in my State. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Do you call that representative government? Is it not a farce? Why, not even the effrontery of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who preceded me, dared allow him to put in the RECORD the number of votes by which he came here. He says he got all the votes that were cast. Whether he got five or fifteen, he does not tell us. Now, is there anything unfair in this proposition?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 161, nays 126, answered "present" 9, not voting 92, as follows:

Mr. WHEELER with Mr. SULZER.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill H. R. 21946, an act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CAMPBELL). The question is: Will the House disagree to the Senate amendments en bloc and ask for a conference with the Senate?

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, one of the rules of the House is that these matters ought to be printed. I have sent to the document room and can not obtain any print of the Senate amendments, and I am informed that they have not yet been printed; that they have not come from the Government Printing Office.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Senate amendments have been read by the Clerk to the House, and the Chair knows of no other rule governing the question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As a matter of fact, for the information of the House, is my information to the effect that the printed copy of the Senate amendments has never come to the House correct or incorrect?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not informed as to that matter. The Chair does know that the Senate amendments were read from the desk by the Clerk from the official copy.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Under the rule, is not this put as a suspension of the rules, and consequently is not the rule in respect to printing suspended along with the rest?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair knows of no rule that requires the printing of the bill before it is sent to the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Chair, I presume, means to say that he does not know of any rule requiring the printing of Senate amendments. Surely the Chair does not mean to say that the bill itself shall not be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is what the Chair intended to say. The question is, Will the House disagree to the Senate amendments en bloc and ask for a conference with the Senate?

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty gentlemen present; not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absentees, and the question will be taken on disagreeing to the Senate amendments en bloc and asking for a conference with the Senate. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 251, nays 1, answered "present" 6, not voting 129, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following conferees: Mr. TAWNEY, Mr. VREELAND, and Mr. BRUNDIDGE.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the Military Academy appropriation bill, with Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the title of the bill and read the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (H. R. 21875) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. Will the House disagree to said amendments en bloc and ask a conference with the Senate?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. This is not a motion to suspend the rules; this operates under a rule already adopted.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is not there a motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. No; this operates under a special rule relating to general appropriation bills. It operates automatically without debate.

Mr. SULZER. What is the motion before the House, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SLAYDEN. The ayes and noes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The motion before the House is under a special rule adopted. Will the House disagree to said amendments en bloc and ask for a conference?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I hope that will be done.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the ayes and noes were asked for.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors. The Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members. As many as favor the motion will, as their names are called, answer "aye," as many as are opposed will answer "no," and those present and not voting will answer "present," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 240, answered "present" 6, not voting 141, as follows:

Mr. CALDER with Mr. BRUNDIDGE.

Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. BRODHEAD.

Mr. AMES with Mr. BRANTLEY.

Mr. BOUTELL with Mr. GRIGGS.

The SPEAKER. Upon this vote the ayes are 240, answering "present" 6—a quorum. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The ayes have it, the Senate amendments are disagreed to.

The Chair will announce the following conferees: Mr. PARKER, Mr. CAPRON, and Mr. SLAYDEN.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 21946) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for prior years, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. TELLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4812) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report on the bill H. R. 20063, the District appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report on the District appropriation bill, and the Clerk will read the same.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the statement for the report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, to that I, of course, object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects. The Chair will state to the House, if the House will bear with the Chair, that the statement explaining the report is about of the same length as the report. Under a motion to suspend the rules and agree to a conference report, the report must be read, but the statement may not be. The Chair will again put the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER], to read the statement in this case in lieu of the report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, it is quite useless to put the request, because I will object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects, and the Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the report as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20063) "making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

On amendments Nos. 252, 253, 254, and 255, relating to the health department: Strikes out the appropriation proposed by the Senate and $900 for an assistant poundmaster; provides for personal services for maintenance of public crematory; and strikes out the appropriation of $12,500 proposed by the Senate for a stable at the smallpox hospital.

On amendments Nos. 256, 257, 258, 259, and 260, relating to the juvenile court: Strikes out the proposed increase in the salary of the judge from $3,000 to $3,600; provides for a probation officer at $1,000, as proposed by the Senate, and appropriates $1,740, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,340, as proposed by the House, for compensation of jurors.

On amendments Nos. 261, 262, and 263: Strikes out the increase of $100 in the salary of the financial clerk of the police court; increases the pay of four bailiffs from $600 to $720 each, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments Nos. 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, and 271, relating to the Washington Asylum: Increases the pay of the superintendent from $1,600 to $1,800; of the property clerk from $1,000 to $1,200; of the principal overseer from $1,400 to $1,500, as proposed by the Senate; strikes out the increase in the pay of fifteen overseers from $660 to $720 each; increases the pay of two nurses from $425 to $450 each and strikes out the provision for one additional orderly at $300, and appropriates $1,500 additional, as proposed by the Senate, for repairs to buildings.

On amendment No. 272: Strikes out the appropriation of $110,000, as proposed by the Senate, for a new wing for the workhouse, and inserts a provision for three commissioners to inquire and report as to the condition of the jail and workhouse of the District of Columbia.

On amendments Nos. 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, and 281, relating to the Home for the Aged and Infirm: Increases, as proposed by the Senate, the pay of the chief engineer from $720 to $900; provides for one additional fireman, at $300; one additional nurse, at $360, and one additional servant, at $144; appropriates $20,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $23,000, as proposed by the Senate, for provisions and miscellaneous expenses; $1,500 instead of $1,000, as proposed by the House, and $2,000, as proposed by the Senate, for repairs to buildings, and $1,500 instead of $3,000, as proposed by the Senate, for necessary fire protection.

On amendment No. 282: Appropriates $22,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $20,000, as proposed by the House, for care and maintenance of boys committed to the reform school.

On amendments Nos. 283, 284, 285, 286, and 287, relating to the Reform School for Girls: Increases the pay of the night watchman from $365 to $480, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $191, as proposed by the Senate, for a furnace, and strikes out the appropriation of $675, proposed by the Senate, for erecting a portico.

On amendments Nos. 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, and 318: Appropriates $3,000 instead of $2,000, as proposed by the House, and $4,500, as proposed by the Senate, for repairs to the Columbia Hospital; strikes out the appropriation of $5,000, proposed by the Senate, for plans for the new building for the Columbia Hospital; appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $25,000 for the National Homeopathic Hospital; $4,000 for repairs and equipment for the Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital; $6,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $4,000, as proposed by the House, for the Eastern Dispensary, and $500 instead of $750, as proposed by the Senate, for the Women's Clinic; and strikes out the provision proposed by the Senate placing the expenditure of the appropriation for the Washington Home for Incurables under the direction of the executive committee of the said home.

On amendments Nos. 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, and 303, relating to the tuberculosis hospital: Increases the pay of ten pupil nurses from $96 to $120 each, as proposed by the Senate; strikes out the increase in the pay of the chief cook and laundryman from $480 to $600 each; strikes out the appropriation of $540 for a farmer; provides for one additional orderly, at $300; authorizes the use of not exceeding $1,000 for temporary services, and strikes out the appropriation of $5,000, proposed by the Senate, for grading and making roads.

On amendments Nos. 304, 305, 306, and 307, relating to the Board of Children's Guardians: Increases the pay of one investigating clerk from $720 to $840, and of one visiting inspector from $480 to $600, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 318: Appropriates $2,000 instead of $4,250, as proposed by the Senate, for the Washington Hospital for Foundlings.

On amendments Nos. 319 and 320: Strikes out the appropriation of $150, proposed by the Senate, for a watchman for the municipal lodging house.

On amendment No. 321: Appropriates $5,500 for the Temporary Home for Ex-Union Soldiers and Sailors, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 322: Appropriates $294,800, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $280,000, as proposed by the House, for support of the indigent insane.

On amendments Nos. 323, 324, 325, and 326, relating to the militia of the District of Columbia: Includes in the expenses of camps hire of horses for officers required to be mounted; strikes out the proposed increase in the pay of the clerk in the office of the Adjutant-General and inserts a provision, as proposed by the Senate, with reference to purchase of additional rations applying to the fiscal years 1908 and 1909.

On amendments Nos. 327, 328, 329, 330, and 331, relating to the water department: Increases the salary of the water register from $1,800 to $2,100; strikes out the provision for one meter computer at $1,000; increases the pay of one clerk from $1,000 to $1,200, and authorizes the purchase of two motor trucks.

On amendment No. 332: Authorized the use of not exceeding $66,000, instead of $60,000, as proposed by the House, and $70,000, as proposed by the Senate, during the fiscal year 1909, for services of draftsmen and others in connection with sewer and other construction work.

On amendment No. 333: Provides for a market master's assistant and one laborer for the Wholesale Market Producers' Market.

On amendments Nos. 333, 334, and 335: Inserts a separate section of the bill, as proposed by the Senate, authorizing advances from the Treasury of the United States to meet any excesses of expenditures in the District of Columbia over the revenues of the District of Columbia during the fiscal year 1909.

WASHINGTON GARDNER,
MARTIN B. MADDEN,
ALBERT S. BURLISON,

Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BURLISON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule a second is ordered. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLISON] to twenty minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the estimates for the District appropriation bill as presented to the committee amounted to $13,798,126.35. The amount appropriated by the House was $9,560,499.35. To this amount the Senate added $2,015,014.50. After repeated and extended conferences the Senate receded from $1,457,845, and the House agreed to $557,169.50. Three-fifths of this and a little more pertains to the public schools. The necessity for an addition to the appropriation for public schools grew out, in part, of the fire in Cleveland, which occurred after the House had had its hearings. The bill as agreed upon unanimously by the conferees carries $10,117,668.85, as against $10,440,598.63 last year, making a difference in favor of the ensuing year of $322,929.78.

I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BURLISON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to be perfectly candid with the House. My purpose in asking for this time, and I thank my colleague for his courtesy in conceding it to me, was to address myself for a few moments to the amendments put by the Senate on to the bill for the support of the Military Academy. My remarks shall be addressed purely to matters of legislative interest at this moment. The Senate has added some very important amendments to the bill as it passed the House. The first one, and perhaps one of the greatest importance, is that on page 2, which increases the appropriation by $60,000, and provides that the corps of cadets shall consist of one from each Congressional District, as it is now; one from each Territory, as now; one from the District of Columbia, as it is at this time, and four from each State at large. The difference between the proposed law and the existing statute is that it doubles the number to come from the States at large. In other words, it will give, should it become a law, to each Senator double the number of appointments allowed to each Member of the House. It increases the total number of cadets by 92, and as the Army bill, confirmed by legislation in this bill, materially increases the pay of those cadets, it adds a considerable sum to the annual outlay for the support of the Military Academy. How the conference will result, of course, remains to be seen. But speaking for myself, and speaking what I believe to be the view of the majority of the Members of this House, inferring it from some I have had of gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber, I am inclined to believe the House will never consent to a proposition which confers double the privileges in that direction upon any other body.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, this proposition to increase the number of cadets involves new legislation. I believe the rule is well understood with conferees that where one House proposes legislation in a general appropriation bill, and the other House insists in its opposition, that the body proposing it must finally yield. I hope that rule will be invoked in this case. [Applause.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. I thank the gentleman for his suggestion, and I will guarantee that 33½ per cent of the conference power from this side of the House will insist. There are sundry amendments all involving increased expense, or nearly all, and developing the academy in a way and along lines that were not contemplated by the House.

The next amendment of considerable importance, I think, is that which is to be found on page 20 of the bill, and has reference to the rewriting of a statute that provides for the Board of Visitors. As the House thought when it passed the academy bill it would be more practical and be wiser in every respect to have the Board of Visitors come from the Members of the House and members of the Senate, it therefore repealed the act which originally provided that a certain number be appointed by the Speaker, a certain number by the President of the Senate, and a certain other number by the President of the United States, and substituted for it a provision that the Board of Visitors should be composed of the two committees having charge of the bill in this House and in the Senate, respectively. It has been amended by the Senate in this way: By reducing the number, which might or might not be wise—I have no very positive views upon that question—to four members of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate and five members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, to be appointed, and so forth, and three to be appointed by the President.

Mr. Speaker, the view of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives was that this Board of Visitors was intended to secure information for legislative purposes; that it could be better done by a committee of the two Houses than by a body made up with outsiders. It took away from that Board of Visitors the well-merited reputation of being an annual junket. That question was thrashed out on the floor of the House at some length and clearly understood when we had the academy bill before the House, and the proposition of the committee was sustained unanimously.

Another provision, and one of very great importance in this bill, is that which provides for the appointment of seven cadets from the Philippine Islands. It is legislation somewhat along the line of that which continued the Porto Rican regiment. It says that these cadets shall be educated at the Military Academy at the expense of the American people, but shall not be eligible for appointment in the Regular Army of the United States, but that they shall be commissioned to serve in the Philippine Scouts and agree to serve for eight years.

Now, Mr. Speaker, everyone who is familiar with the history of legislation knows that this is merely the nose of the camel getting under the tent, and that after a short time the animal will occupy the entire tent. Everybody knows that when these gentlemen have been educated at the expense of the public, exactly as officers in our Army will have been educated, they will claim the same privileges, and that ultimately this will lead to promotions, to welding them into the Army of the United States, to retirement, and to all the privileges of rank and pay that pertain to other graduates of the academy.

Mr. BURLISON. Mr. Speaker, it is extremely probable, if not certain, that for the first time in the history of this Government the appropriations for a single session of Congress will exceed $1,000,000,000. It is well known to us here—in fact, to every intelligent person—that the country holds the House directly responsible for all expenditures authorized by Congress. But as a matter of fact, it is only fair to the House and to the majority party of the House, to say that they are not wholly blamable or wholly responsible for the vast expenditures now being authorized by the bills we are passing or for the gross extravagance in the money bills which are now running riot in this Capitol. For the truth is it is due largely to those at the other end of this building. It is but just to say that the distinguished gentleman at the head of the Committee on Appropriations of the House day after day, week after week, since the Congress convened, has endeavored to impress upon the Members of this body, and especially the members of his own party, the importance and the necessity of cutting down and keeping down the appropriations.

If the House Committee on Appropriations and other committees controlling appropriation bills had followed the estimates transmitted by the heads of Departments to the Speaker at the beginning of this session of Congress and prepared bills in accordance therewith, there would have been a deficit at the end of the next fiscal year, accepting the estimated revenues, of not less than $118,000,000. But your committee did not accept these estimates, and after weeks of arduous labor—yes, more than arduous labor—after weeks of drudgery the House committees reported bills in which we cut below these estimates full $99,000,000. These bills, providing what was actually necessary for the conduct of the Government's affairs, were then transmitted to the other end of the Capitol. With what result, Mr. Speaker? Without any real responsibility resting upon them, as I have told you, because the country does not hold the Senate responsible, when these bills were returned they were swollen in a way that I shall now indicate.

The Army appropriation bill was returned increased by $14,000,000; the District appropriation bill was returned increased by $2,000,000; the fortification bill was returned increased by $4,000,000; the Indian appropriation bill was returned increased by $2,000,000; the naval appropriation bill was returned increased by $18,000,000; the post-office appropriation bill, carrying now upon its return, as it does, a ship-subsidy steal and a railway mail-pay graft, was increased by $7,000,000; the pension appropriation bill was returned increased by $13,000,000; the sundry civil appropriation bill was returned increased by $12,000,000; the deficiency appropriation bill was returned increased by $2,000,000; the public buildings bill was returned increased by $9,000,000. In round numbers, an aggregate increase of $83,000,000. The legislative bill, which provides for the humble and noninfluential Department clerk, was returned increased by only a small amount, while the agricultural appropriation bill, making appropriations for that great industry which bears the burden of taxation, was increased only by a paltry half million dollars.

Mr. Speaker, the Constitution declares that all bills raising revenue shall originate in the House, and as a necessary sequence thereof all bills appropriating money must also originate here. We are accountable directly to the people for our acts, returning every two years for a renewal of the trust they have reposed in us. It was for this reason that our organic law was so framed that the people could keep close hold on the strings of their money purse.

Mr. Speaker, the fathers never intended that those occupying the other end of this Capitol should exert the influence and control over appropriation bills they now exercise. The Senate has no right to meddle with the purse of the people. But, Mr. Speaker, it has encroached upon the prerogatives of the House until it has reached the point where the revenue-raising body can be compelled, because of the extravagance of the Senate to increase the burdens resting upon the people, whether it will or no. In my deliberate judgment, unless some steps are taken, and taken speedily, to scourge the other body back to the exercise of its proper functions, this Government will go, as history shows other democratic governments have gone, to its death as a direct result of extravagance, corruption, and the other companion evil, militarism.

Mr. Speaker, we should take steps, if not at this session, then at the next, to clearly and firmly indicate to the other body that they can not increase these money bills as they have done in the past. I believe that a careful perusal of the history of the making of our Constitution will bear me out in the statement that it was intended by its framers that when the Senate proposed amendments to an appropriation bill, if same were rejected by the House, it was the duty of the Senate to promptly recede.

So far as this particular bill now under consideration is concerned, I desire to congratulate the House upon the very efficient manner in which the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] has managed it. The Senate, as I have said, increased it $2,000,000, and in fairness to the Senate conferees, who were not only courteous and agreeable, but fair and reasonable, after some persuasion we were enabled to induce them to recede from about $1,500,000 of that amount.

What I say is not said with reference to this bill; but the trouble is that at the other end of the Capitol a horde of amendments are placed on an appropriation bill, and concealed amidst that vast number are a few in which Senators have special interest, and the Treasury is greatly jeopardized when the Members of the House on these conference committees enter conference, because they do not know exactly the particular things really wanted by the venerable Senators. And what is the result? The House conferees frequently are treading around in the dark, endeavoring to find out what it is, and sometimes, as a result of this state of affairs, amounts are added which do not meet with the approbation of either body.

I have said this much, Mr. Speaker, in order to invite the attention of the leaders of the dominant party to the necessity for taking some steps to correct this evil. I desire to say that the remarks I have here made with reference to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. TAWNEY] are wholly deserved.

In fact, I have not paid him the tribute to which he is justly entitled. [Applause.] If heed had been given his importunities and those of his colleagues on the committee, including the minority members, it would have been better for your party, better for the Treasury, and better for the country. Mr. Speaker, the truth compels me to state that the distinguished and able gentleman who heads the Appropriation Committee has received but little assistance from the other leaders of his party along the lines of economy in the preparation of these bills. If they had lent him their assistance when he begged and implored and importuned them repeatedly here, the country would not now be confronted with the fact that the first session of the Sixtieth Congress is to go down in history as the most extravagant session of Congress that ever assembled. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I desire, in line with the thought presented by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLISON], to call attention to one feature of making estimates that ought to be dispensed with in connection with this District bill.

The District Commissioners know what the estimated revenues are. They ought to base the expenses upon that estimate, and yet in this bill they asked for $2,000,000 more than they knew the revenues would meet. Now, that puts the Committee on Appropriations in the attitude of standing before the citizens of this District and reducing the estimates to the revenues before we begin even to consider the appropriations, or else increase beyond the possible revenues and add to an already large debt. The difficulty with this overestimating is that it leads certain individuals who want their salaries increased, certain interests that expect liberal appropriations, to anticipate a great deal more than they can possibly receive, unless the debt of the municipality is materially increased. I wish there was a law prohibiting the Commissioners from estimating expenditures beyond the estimated revenues of the District. The committee have sought in this bill not only to meet the just requirements of the city at this time, but to make a liberal payment upon the unfunded debt. We may say it has been a fight from start to finish, not only before the Committee on Appropriations, but in the conference, and it is due the committee, as well as the Senate conferees, to say that the latter have yielded, in round numbers, 75 per cent of their proposed increase. The bill as it stands will carry out the thought and intent of the Committee on Appropriations, enabling the payment of a considerable sum on the unfunded debt of the city.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 218, nays 15, answered "present" 8, not voting 146, as follows:

Until Monday:

Mr. CALDERHEAD with Mr. SHACKLEFORD.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 21875) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SCOTT, Mr. HEMENWAY, and Mr. FRAZIER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 16743) for the removal of the restrictions on alienation of lands of allottees of the Quapaw Agency, Okla., and the sale of all tribal lands, school, agency, or other buildings on any of the reservations within the jurisdiction of such agency, and for other purposes.

PATENTS TO PURCHASERS OF INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 21735, an act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents in fee to purchasers of Indian lands under any law now existing or hereafter enacted, and for other purposes. I move to suspend the rules, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McKINLEY of Illinois). Is a second demanded?

Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri demands a second. Under the rule, a second is ordered. The gentleman from New York is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Missouri to twenty minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I will say that the House passed this bill with eleven sections, each section being a separate bill; that every provision contained in the omnibus bill had been favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs—unanimously, save two—but none of these provisions made any charge upon the Treasury that they were all bills, either upon the House Calendar or on the Private Calendar. The Senate then added twenty-four amendments, covering twenty-four different propositions, nearly all of them bills, some of them being bills making a charge upon the Treasury and some of them not, but they are all of such a general nature, covering such a wide field, that it is absolutely impossible, it seems to me, to get at them and consider them properly in any way other than by a full conference, and it will not be possible to do that in any brief period, because I am quite confident the House would not be satisfied to agree to a very large number of the amendments which the Senate has added to the bill. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, as stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] this is the omnibus Indian bill, passed by the House a few days ago, consisting of a number of small items, affecting Indian affairs in the various parts of the country. This bill went to the Senate, and while it was an omnibus when it went there, it comes back as a freight car, practically, and pretty well loaded at that. It has many amendments in it that we ought not to agree to, especially in the form that they are presented to the House, and the only way that we can thrash this bill out and winnow out the things that ought not to go in, and at the same time allow to go through those just measures that ought to be enacted into law, is by sending it to conference, as suggested by the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN]. I will not undertake to analyze the various amendments put onto this bill by the Senate, for the reason that they are so lengthy it would take more than the allotted time to discuss them, but I would request that the gentlemen on this side, as well as on the other, vote in favor of the motion to send this bill to conference and let the conferees trim it down to its proper limit and bring back a bill that we can be in favor of and feel like giving our support before we vote for it.

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FULTON].

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, I want just a minute or two. It seems to me that the Members of the House would be interested in knowing just how a bank guaranty-deposit law works, and for that reason I am sending to the desk, and ask to have read in my time, a short extract that was taken from this morning's edition of the Washington Post in regard to the first failure we have had in Oklahoma under our guaranty-deposit law and the effect thereof.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE MAKES BANK GOOD—OKLAHOMA SHOWS HOW ITS GUARANTY-DEPOSIT LAW WORKS.

GUTHRIE, OKLA., May 21, 1900.

Within one hour from the time H. P. Smock, Oklahoma banking commissioner, had taken charge of the International Bank, of Colgate, he had authority to pay the depositors in full, though the bank's cash and available funds in other banks fell $23,000 short of the deposits. The commissioner was enabled to do this under the banking law, and this is the first time it has been called into use.

Commissioner Smock took charge of the bank for alleged gross violations of the banking laws. Governor Haskell, president of the banking board, immediately authorized the payment of depositors in full. The bank had $9,000 cash on hand and $7,000 deposited in other banks. When the cash was exhausted the commissioner drew checks upon the State guaranty fund.

Under the guaranty banking law in Oklahoma, a tax of 1 per cent is levied upon the average annual deposits of all State banks, and the money thus raised is used in payment of all depositors of an insolvent State bank after the funds of the bank have been exhausted.

Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from New York to use some of his time now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no desire to consume any more time. Mr. Speaker, I will ask for a vote, as I understand the gentleman from Missouri does not desire to use any more time.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, pending that I send to the Clerk's desk a concurrent resolution, and ask unanimous consent that it be adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I think the vote ought not to be interrupted with any such proposition as that. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York demands the regular order. The question is—

Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, just one moment before the question is put. Since I spoke a moment ago several other gentlemen have just come into the Hall of the House, and they have asked me about this bill. I would state again that the motion is to suspend the rules and send the bill to conference, and the minority members on the committee agree with the majority members that that ought to be done because there are so many amendments to it that we can not accept them in the form they have been presented to the House. Mr. Speaker, I shall make a demand for the yeas and nays on the vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair there is no quorum present. The point is sustained. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absentees. The question will be taken on the motion of the gentleman from New York to suspend the rules, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 235, answered "present" 11, not voting 141, as follows:

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following conferees: Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. KNAPP, and Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 19158. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909; and

H. J. Res. 176. Joint resolution providing for the printing of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 902. An act authorizing certain extensions to be made of the lines of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company, the Washington Railway and Electric Company, the City and Suburban Railway of Washington, and the Capital Traction Company, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on May 21, 1908, they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills and joint resolution:

H. R. 7653. An act to amend section 4919 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to provide additional protection for owners of patents of the United States, and for other purposes;

H. R. 15841. An act to amend section 4896 of the Revised Statutes;

H. R. 17703. An act to amend section 4885 of the Revised Statutes;

H. R. 21884. An act granting an annuity to Jennie Carroll and to Mabel H. Lazear;

H. R. 17874. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil and other wars, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 16882. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 124. Joint resolution authorizing the transfer of the statue of President Washington, now located in the Capitol grounds, to the Smithsonian Institution.

CORRECTION IN ENROLLMENT.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a concurrent resolution, and ask unanimous consent that it be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] asks unanimous consent for the adoption of the following concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk be authorized in enrolling the District of Columbia appropriation bill to transpose the word "hereafter" in the second proviso in the matter inserted by the conference report in connection with Senate amendment No. 141, so as to follow and not precede the word "teachers."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

So the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call from the Speaker's table the conference report on the bill (H. R. 15641) for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of the Five Civilized Tribes, and move to suspend the rules and adopt the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the report as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15641) for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 4, 5, 19, 27, 36, and 41.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 10, 11, 13, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 22, 23, 25, 26, 28, 29, 31, 32, 33, 34, 39, and 42; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the proposed amendment, and on page 1, line 8, after the word "whites," strike out "shall be free from all restrictions. All lands, including homesteads, of said allottees enrolled as freedmen shall be free from all restrictions. All lands, including homesteads, of said allottees enrolled as of" and insert, after the word "whites," "as freedmen, and as mixed-blood Indians having less than half;" on page 2, line 1, after the word "blood," insert the words "including minors;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the proposed amendment change the word "degree" to "degrees;" on page 2, line 4, of the bill, after the word "enrolled," strike out the word "living;" and in line 5, after the words "full bloods," insert "and enrolled mixed bloods of three-quarters or more Indian blood;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the proposed amendment change the word "degree" to "degrees;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the proposed amendment and insert in lieu thereof:

"Sec. 2. That all lands other than homesteads allotted to members of the Five Civilized Tribes from which restrictions have not been removed may be leased by the allottee if an adult, or by guardian or curator under order of the proper probate court if a minor or incompetent, for a period not to exceed five years, without the privilege of renewal: Provided, That leases of restricted lands for oil, gas, or other mining purposes, leases of restricted homesteads for more than one year, and leases of restricted lands for periods of more than five years may be made, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations provided by the Secretary of the Interior, and not otherwise: And provided further, That the jurisdiction of the probate courts of the State of Oklahoma over lands of minors and incompetents shall be subject to the foregoing provisions, and the term minor or minors, as used in this act, shall include all males under the age of twenty-one years and all females under the age of eighteen years."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the proposed amendment and insert in lieu thereof "and the enrollment records of the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes shall hereafter be conclusive evidence as to the age of said citizen or freedman;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 3, in line 6, change "and" to "or," and in the same line strike out the word "leases" and insert the word "lease;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the proposed amendment add the words "or now domiciled therein;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 11, of page 5, strike out the word "guardians" and insert the word "guardian;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the proposed amendment and insert in lieu thereof:

"Any suit brought by the authority of the Secretary of the Interior against the vendee or mortgagee of a town lot, against whom the Secretary of the Interior may find upon investigation no fraud has been established, may be dismissed and the title quieted upon payment of the full balance due on the original appraisal of such lot: Provided, That such investigation must be concluded within six months after the passage of this act."

"Nothing in this act shall be construed as a denial of the right of the United States to take such steps as may be necessary, including the bringing of any suit and the prosecution and appeal thereof, to acquire or retain possession of restricted Indian lands, or to remove cloud therefrom, or clear title to the same, in cases where deeds, leases, or contracts of any other kind or character whatsoever have been or shall be made contrary to law with respect to such lands prior to the removal therefrom of restrictions upon the alienation thereof; such suits to be brought on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, without costs or charges to the allottees, the necessary expenses incurred in so doing to be defrayed from the money appropriated by this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the proposed amendment add: "Provided further, That if any member of the Five Civilized Tribes of one-half or more Indian blood shall die leaving issue surviving, born since March fourth, nineteen hundred and six, the homestead of such deceased allottee shall remain inalienable, unless restrictions against alienation are removed therefrom by the Secretary of the Interior in the manner provided in section one hereof, for the use and support of such issue, during their life or lives, until April twenty-sixth, nineteen hundred and thirty-one; but if no such issue survive, then such allottee, if an adult, may dispose of his homestead by will free from all restrictions; if this be not done, or in the event the issue hereinbefore provided for die before April twenty-sixth, nineteen hundred and thirty-one, the land shall then descend to the heirs, according to the laws of descent and distribution of the State of Oklahoma, free from all restrictions: Provided further, That the provisions of section twenty-three of the act of April twenty-sixth, nineteen hundred and six, as amended by this act, are hereby made applicable to all wills executed under this section;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the proposed amendment and insert in lieu thereof:

"Sec. 11. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Choctaw or Chickasaw nations, respectively, any and all outstanding general and school warrants duly signed by the auditor of public accounts of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations and drawn on the national treasurers thereof prior to January first, nineteen hundred and seven, with six per cent interest per annum from the respective dates of said warrants: Provided, That said warrants be presented to the United States Indian agent at the Union Agency, Muskogee, Okla., within sixty days from the passage of this act, together with the affidavits of the respective holders of said warrants that they purchased the same in good faith for a valuable consideration and had no reason to suspect fraud in the issuance of said warrants: Provided further, That such warrants remaining in the hands of the original payee shall be paid by said Secretary when it is shown that the services for which said warrants were issued were actually performed by said payee."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the proposed amendment and insert in lieu thereof:

"Sec. 12. That all royalties arising on and after July first, nineteen hundred and eight, from mineral leases of allotted Seminole lands heretofore or hereafter made, which are subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be paid to the United States Indian agent, Union Agency, for the benefit of the Indian lessor or his proper representative, to whom such royalties shall thereafter belong; and no such lease shall be made after said date except with the allottee or owner of the land: Provided, That the interest of the Seminole Nation in leases or royalties arising thereunder on all allotted lands shall cease on June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and eight."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the proposed amendment and insert in lieu thereof:

"Sec. 14. That the second paragraph of section eleven of an act entitled 'An act to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes,' approved April twenty-sixth nineteen hundred and six, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That every officer, member, or representative of the Five Civilized Tribes, respectively, or any other person having in his possession, custody, or control any money or other property, including the books, documents, records, or any other papers of any of said tribes shall make full and true account and report thereof to the Secretary of the Interior, and shall pay all money of the tribe in his possession, custody, or control, and shall deliver all other tribal properties so held by him to the Secretary of the Interior, and if any person shall willfully and fraudulently fail to account for all such money and property so held by him, or to pay and deliver the same as herein provided, prior to July thirty-first, nineteen hundred and eight, he shall be deemed guilty of embezzlement, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by fine of not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, according to the laws of the United States relating to such offense, and shall be liable in civil proceedings to be prosecuted in behalf of and in the name of the tribe or tribes in interest for the amount or value of the money or property so withheld."

And the Senate agree to the same.

J. S. SHERMAN,
BIRD S. MCGUIRE,
JNO. H. STEPHENS,

Managers on the part of the House.

ROBT. L. OWEN,
MOSES E. CLAPP,
CHARLES CURTIS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The Senate receded from amendments Nos. 2, 4, 5, 19, 27, 36, and 41.

The House receded from amendments Nos. 10, 11, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 23, 25, 26, 28, 29, 31, 32, 33, 34, 39, and 42.

And from all other amendments the House receded with an amendment.

Amendment No. 1 is merely a change of phraseology and does not change the intent of the bill.

Amendment No. 3 in the bill, as it passed the House, provided that all lands, except homesteads, allotted to mixed bloods of more than one-half Indian blood, should be free from restrictions. The amendment, as agreed to in conference, changes this provision so that the lands that are free from restrictions are those allotted to Indians of more than one-half and less than three-fourths Indian blood.

Amendment No. 6 provides that mixed bloods of more than three-fourths Indian blood can sell their homes only after application to the Secretary of the Interior and approval by him. This provision, as it passed the House, provided that full bloods could dispose of their homestead only upon application to the Secretary of the Interior. This amendment, as agreed to in conference, provides that Indians of three-fourths or more Indian blood shall be under the same restriction as full bloods.

Amendment No. 7 includes minors of such degrees of blood within the restrictions provided in Amendment No. 6.

Amendment No. 8 provides that no restrictions on alienation shall prevent the exercise of the right of eminent domain, and in conference a provision was agreed to making it certain that the provision of the railroad right-of-way act should not be repealed by this provision.

Amendment No. 9 struck out section 2, as passed by the House, and inserted a new section 2. This change was substantially a phraseological change. The amendment, as agreed to in conference, changes the phraseology of both the Senate and the House provisions, enlarges the scope of the provision somewhat, and defines what is a "minor."

Amendment No. 12, as agreed to in conference, provides that the enrollment records made by the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes shall be conclusive evidence as to the age of the person thus enrolled.

Amendments Nos. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18 are purely phraseological changes.

Amendment No. 20 changes the territory within which the Secretary of the Interior shall exercise certain powers from a portion of the State of Oklahoma to the whole State.

Amendment No. 21 provides that only citizens or persons domiciled within the State of Oklahoma shall be employed by the Secretary to perform certain services therein.

Amendments Nos. 22, 23, 24, 25, and 26 are purely phraseological.

Amendment No. 28 is the insertion of the word "necessary," so that the appropriation therein made shall be used only for "necessary" expenses.

Amendment No. 29 provides that $10,000 of the money appropriated may be used in the prosecution of actions in the western district of Oklahoma.

Amendment No. 30 gives the authority to the Secretary of the Interior to dismiss suits brought against the vendee or mortgagee of a town lot where, after investigation, it is found that no fraud has existed, and where such vendee or mortgagee has paid the full price of the original appraisal. This amendment also provides that nothing in the act can be construed as a denial of the right of the United States to take such steps as it is thought necessary to conserve the rights of the Indians.

Amendments Nos. 31, 32, 33, and 34 are purely phraseological.

Amendment No. 35, as agreed to in conference, makes provision for the disposition of restricted lands where the original allottee dies.

Amendment No. 37 makes provision for the payment of the warrants heretofore issued by the Choctaw and Chickasaw councils.

Amendment No. 38 provides for the disposal of the moneys received as royalties under mineral leases of the lands in the Seminole Nation.

Amendment No. 39 provides that all records pertaining to the allotments of any member of the Five Civilized Tribes shall be deposited in the office of the agent at the Union Agency, and makes provision for carrying this into effect.

Amendment No. 40 amends section 11 of the second Curtis Act relating to the transfer of property, money, books, etc., in the possession of the former officers of any of these tribes, to the Secretary of the Interior.

Amendment No. 42 makes provision for the disposal of town lots in town sites heretofore established wherein mineral has been found beneath the surface of said lands.

J. S. SHERMAN,
B. S. MCGUIRE,
JOHN H. STEPHENS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] demands a second, which is ordered under the rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I will take just a moment to explain what are the changes made in the bill since it passed the House—in other words, the changes shown by this conference report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask the gentleman to permit an interruption for just one minute.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. After the gentleman is through with his explanation I want to yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], in order that he may explain to this side of the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. The main changes are as follows: Whereas in the bill as it passed the House there was a provision that full bloods could not alienate their homesteads, and could not alienate any other property except with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, as the conference report presents the proposition that limitation is extended to mixed bloods who have three-quarters or more than three-quarters of Indian blood.

Another provision makes it clear that these restrictions do not prevent the exercise of the use of the right of eminent domain. Another provision defines what is a minor, to wit, a male of the age of under 21 years and a female under 18 years. Another provision authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to discontinue suits brought to quiet title where he believes it is for the interest of Indians so to do and where all the payments which should have been made have been made. Another provides for the payment of the Choctaw and Chickasaw warrants which have been issued by authority of the councils of those two nations. Another provision provides for the disposal of the moneys arising from the rental of mineral lands in the Seminole Indian Reservation for the benefit of the Seminole Indians. Another provision, and one of very great consequence and importance, is to have all the records relating to the Five Civilized Tribes consolidated at the Union Agency, so that it will not be necessary to go to the five different points in that portion of Oklahoma which was formerly the Indian Territory in order to ascertain the questions in reference to titles.

Another provision modifies the so-called "second Curtis Act" so that the tribal property of the Indians of the various tribes can be at once disposed of. The second Curtis Act provided that it could only be disposed of after the dissolution of all the tribal relations. And the only other new provision provides for the sale of the surface of town sites which have already been platted, and which are upon lands upon which coal has been discovered. It provides for the sale of the surface, but not of the mineral.

That, Mr. Speaker, in a word covers all of the principal changes in the bill. Fifteen, twenty, or more amendments were purely phraseological and do not in any sense change the effect of the bill.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a matter of great concern to the people of Oklahoma. In all their conventions and by legislative resolutions they have asked for this legislation. Every Member of Congress, I presume, has received petitions and letters requesting us to pass this bill and to remove the restrictions from the alienation and sale of the Indian lands in Oklahoma. The entire eastern portion of the present State of Oklahoma belonged to the Five Civilized Tribes, but it has now become a part of the State of Oklahoma. So much of these Indian tribal lands was not subject to taxation that it caused the rest of the State to be unduly taxed. Hence every citizen of the State has been greatly interested in having the restrictions removed from the sale of these Indian lands, so that the lands would become taxable, and that portion of the State, by permitting the Indians to sell their surplus lands, would be greatly benefited, because the purchasers would in almost all instances be white farmers, who would soon develop these now wild, unproductive Indian lands into the finest farming, gardening, and fruit-raising region of the Southwest.

Your conference committee have agreed finally and unanimously upon this bill and removed the restrictions upon these lands as far as we were willing to go. We would not consent that the full bloods should have the restrictions removed from the sale of any of their lands except by the consent of the Secretary of the Interior. We have guarded the homesteads of certain of these Indians. We have removed the restrictions on the sale of the lands of the intermarried whites and from the colored people and half or more than one-half of Indian blood. This bill is indorsed by and has the support of all of the Members of Congress from that State. The conferees have agreed unanimously upon this bill. It is the best that we could get.

The chairman of the Indian Committee [Mr. SHERMAN] has made a careful and correct statement of the object and the purposes of the bill. I entirely agree with him, and I hope the bill will pass this House unanimously. If any gentleman desires to make any remarks upon the bill, I will now yield to him such time as he may desire.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to reiterate and emphasize what the gentleman from Texas has said in regard to this bill. It is satisfactory to every member of the Oklahoma delegation, and as it solely affects our State, it seems to me that that information would be of interest to the Members of the House. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on suspending the rules and agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 217, nays 2, answered "present" 12, not voting 156, as follows:

TOPOGRAPHICAL SURVEYS AND TESTING LABORATORIES.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk some correspondence from the Departments on the subject of topographical surveys and chemical or testing laboratories, being in answer to a letter of inquiry from the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives concerning these subjects, and I ask unanimous consent that the documents be printed as a House document—that the usual number of a House document be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the documents referred to by him be printed as a House document.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I understand the request of the gentleman from Minnesota to be that this information be furnished to the public as a House document. Am I correct about that?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is all there is to it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WILLIAM HENRY HAYDEN.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. BEALE of Pennsylvania, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of William Henry Hayden, Fifty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

RECESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I do now move that the House take a recess until to-morrow at 11 a. m.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, May 23, 1908.

Prayer by Rev. ULYSSES G. B. PIERCE, of the city of Washington.

THE JOURNAL—WAR CLAIMS.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. FORAKER (at 12 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.). I ask that the further reading of the Journal be suspended.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I object to the further reading being suspended.

Mr. FORAKER. I asked unanimous consent that it might be suspended because I am compelled to leave the Chamber, and I wanted to offer some business out of order. Then the reading may be resumed.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will not object to the Senator offering his proposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. During the reading of the Journal, can anything be done?

Mr. FORAKER. I wished to give notice that I intend, at the conclusion of the routine morning business, to call up Senate resolution 91.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will put the Senator's request. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. ALDRICH. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the Journal.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BEVERIDGE (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.). Mr. President, I ask that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. ALDRICH. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the Journal.

The Secretary resumed and (at 12 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.) concluded the reading of the Journal.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I do not object to the approval of the Journal, but I feel bound to state the reasons which have led me to ask for its reading.

I desire to emphasize to the Senate and to the public the constantly increasing number of war claims which are now being presented to Congress. The Journal contains the names of hundreds upon hundreds of claims for injury to or for use of churches and other similar claims growing out of operations in the civil war. I wish to supplement the statement I made yesterday that in some way consideration of this constantly increasing number of claims should be limited, and we ought to pass some legislation to this effect.

I do not object to the approval of the Journal.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I will not at this time detain the Senate from the transaction of morning business, but I wish at some time during the day, if I can get the floor, to make a suggestion, which I was proceeding to do yesterday when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived, that I had in mind, and which will probably, if enacted into law, dispose in a very short time of all these cases and give an opportunity to everyone who has a just claim to present it and have it adjudicated, and then at the expiration of the time a statute of limitations will prevent the presentation of any other cases.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, in harmony with the suggestion made by the Senator from Rhode Island, I desire to call to the attention of the Senate and the country the fact that immediately after the war the Southern Claims Commission was authorized by Congress. Commissioners were appointed and they took evidence touching all the claims of people who lived within the limits of the so-called "Confederate States" so as to do full justice to all those parties. That Commission was extended from time to time—

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HOPKINS. In a minute I will yield. The Commission was extended from time to time. A large volume of evidence was taken. Claims to the amount of nearly $60,000,000 were filed with the Southern Claims Commission, and of that vast amount, immediately after the war, when the witnesses were alive who knew the facts, when the evidence was such as could be received and properly analyzed by the Commission, $55,000,000 of those claims were rejected and judgments for less than $4,000,000 allowed.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I interrupt the Senator? I think the report—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HOPKINS. I have observed, Mr. President, that since that time many of the claims that were rejected by the Southern Claims Commission have found their way into Congress by separate bills either in the Senate or in the House.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. HOPKINS. In a moment I will be through. And I have observed that claims that were rejected at a time when the Commission had the evidence as to whether they were proper claims to be allowed have been allowed by Congress. I think that the suggestions made by the Senator from Rhode Island are pertinent, and should cause Senators to pause in the consideration of such claims.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that if he will investigate the record as carefully as the members of the Committee on Claims have investigated it, he will discover that we are not reporting any claims that were rejected by the Southern Claims Commission. On the other hand, we studiously and persistently exclude all claims that were presented to the Southern Claims Commission and rejected. Every claim that was presented to and rejected by the Southern Claims Commission has been rejected by the Committee on Claims. The Senator can not find a single claim in this bill or elsewhere which has been reported by that committee to the Senate which had been presented to the Southern Claims Commission and rejected.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will state, Mr. President, to the Senator from Oregon that my remarks are not intended as any criticism upon his committee. The claims which have been allowed by the committee which have been reported in this bill are claims that I have not, up to date, had time to investigate.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator will allow me to correct him in another respect. The Senator says that the Southern Claims Commission was authorized to hear and determine all of this character of claims. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that that Commission distinctly held and continuously ruled that it was without authority to entertain any claim based on the use of real estate or churches or rent for churches or of other buildings or anything of that character.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the Senator that on church claims and matters of that kind—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. HOPKINS. While I have opposed many other classes of claims, I have always voted for those; and I will say, in passing—

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, West Virginia, fortunately or unfortunately, happened to be in the very midst of the civil war. Our churches and school buildings were taken for hospitals, and the floors of our churches ran red with the best American blood. This bill only does justice to a large number of our churches and schools in West Virginia, where the army marched and countermarched and where our churches and our school buildings, I repeat, were taken for hospital purposes. I am sure that there is not a dollar in this omnibus claims bill, so far as West Virginia is concerned, that is not absolutely accurate and should be allowed; and there are many more claims not embraced in the bill which should be allowed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the approval of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT], I desire to say again that I have steadily voted for appropriations for churches and all claims of a kindred character; but I might say, in passing, that when we consider the amount that we have voted to the people of West Virginia for such purposes, they must have more churches according to population than almost any other section of this or any other country.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island, as well as the Senator from Illinois, referred to church claims. I desire to say that there are no claims in this omnibus claims bill that are more meritorious than the church claims. The State of Kentucky was occupied by Federal soldiers during the entire war. There were a number of battles there. Whenever a regiment or a brigade came near a town or a city they used churches for their hospitals. When a battle occurred, the wounded were put into the churches. The Government has not paid those claims as promptly as they should have been paid; the Government owes that money because the churches, I repeat, were occupied as hospitals; in many instances permanently damaged, and in all instances very severely damaged.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. McCREARY. In a moment.

We have now in this bill a number of church claims where the members of the respective churches have proven their claims properly. Those cases went to the Court of Claims; they have been carefully examined there; and the Court of Claims has decided in their favor.

Now I will yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. Can the Senator from Kentucky tell me what proportion of the churches in Kentucky have already been paid for?

Mr. McCREARY. No; I can not tell how many churches have been paid for.

Mr. ALDRICH. Or how many are to be paid for in the future?

Mr. McCREARY. I can tell the Senator from Rhode Island that a great many churches that to my knowledge were occupied as hospitals by Federal soldiers have not been paid. Many of these claims are in my immediate neighborhood, because the central part of Kentucky was occupied by Federal soldiers during nearly the entire war, and in nearly every county seat in central Kentucky there are claims of churches. No claims, I repeat, are more just and no claims should be paid more promptly than such church claims.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, it is now 1 o'clock. For the first time this session from the hour of 12 o'clock until the hour of 1 the time of the session has been consumed with the reading of the Journal and debating the question of its approval. What the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] stated a moment ago startlingly emphasizes what I stated yesterday when the omnibus claims bill was taken up instead of the Senate proceeding to the consideration either of the amendment to the meat-inspection law or of the bill now before us for the compensation of injured Government employees.

I pointed out, Mr. President, at that time to the Senate—and what the Senator from Rhode Island says emphasizes it so much that I am impelled to rise and call attention to it—that the omnibus claims bill, if it were taken up by the Senate, could not possibly pass unless we should prolong the session many, many days or perhaps weeks, on the one hand, and that, on the other hand, it would prevent the consideration of any other measure, no matter how much the interest of the people might demand it.

Mr. President, the Journal has been read, and even upon the discussion of the question involved in the omnibus claims bill we will now, perhaps, take up another fifteen minutes of the two precious hours of the morning business during which other seriously important bills demanded by the people might be considered. I think that no greater reason, no more powerful demonstration, could be made of the practical unwisdom, as a matter of legislation, of substituting the omnibus claims bill, the discussion of which, merely upon the reading of the Journal, will practically occupy the entire morning hour of the Senate, than what has now occurred. I think we have a demonstration before us that—since the Senator from Rhode Island said he wanted to call the attention of the Senate and the country to his reason for asking for the reading of the Journal, and that he has called the attention of the Senate and the country to the omnibus claims bill being loaded down with these matters that are bound to create much discussion—the omnibus claims bill should not longer be considered, because if we do consider it, we do it knowingly, we do it upon the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island, who has called the attention of the country to it, that we can not pass that bill without prolonging the session, on the one hand, and that we shall prevent the consideration of other great measures which are now pressing upon our attention.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, in answer to the statement of the Senator from Indiana, I call his attention to the fact that it was by a vote of the Senate that the claims bill was taken up on yesterday. It is very evident that the Senate preferred to consider that bill to the bill which the Senator himself was endeavoring to bring before the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Or any other bill.

Mr. FULTON. No; the question was between those two propositions.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. FULTON. I call the attention of the Senator from Indiana to the fact that the Senate gave preference to the omnibus claims bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me an interruption? I will put it in the form of a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Did I not, when the Senator so courteously withheld his motion, call the attention of the Senator and of the Senate to the fact that not only would it prevent the passage of the bill to which I was just asking the attention of the Senate, but also the bill which the Senate had been considering the day before, and which is now before us, to wit, the bill concerning compensation for injured Government employees, and also every other bill, because did I not say to the Senator and to the Senate what now is demonstrated—that it would take all the time of the Senate, and result not in the passage of the Senator's own bill or in anything else?

Mr. FULTON. All of which is in the form of a question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; put it in the form of a question.

Mr. FULTON. Well, Mr. President, I care nothing about all that. What I rose for was to repel the insinuation, not of the Senator from Indiana, but that which was carried by the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] on the conduct of the Committee on Claims in reporting the resolution containing bills of the character to which he referred and items in the omnibus claims bill. I do not say that the Senator from Rhode Island intended that criticism; but nevertheless his remarks in fact were capable of that construction, and therefore I think it is incumbent on me to say that the bills which we have reported in the resolution referring them to the Court of Claims constitute only a very small fraction of the bills of this character which are pending before the committee. The committee has been very earnestly endeavoring to hold down the number of bills of this character which shall be brought to the attention of Congress. Let me say, Mr. President, that just so long as the law authorizes their consideration, just so long as it is the policy of Congress to provide for their payment, just so long will Senators be compelled to introduce them at the request of their constituents and the committee will be compelled to take them into consideration.

I do not think there is a very wide difference of opinion touching the wisdom of repealing that provision of the Tucker Act which provides for the reference of this character of claims to the Court of Claims. I think that a provision to repeal that portion of the Tucker Act would be adopted, but it can only be done at the present session by taking up the omnibus claims bill, putting that bill through, and attaching an amendment of that character to it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to know from the Senator whether, as chairman of the Committee on Claims, it is his judgment that if, as he says, we are in the closing days of the session, the omnibus claims bill can by any possibility be passed?

Mr. FULTON. Yes; I think the omnibus claims bill can be passed. I think if it shall be taken up and given consideration for one day it will be disposed of. I say, in all courtesy to the Senator from Indiana, that, in my judgment, it will be passed in immeasurably less time and a long time before he will succeed in getting the Committee on Agriculture discharged from the consideration of his measure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The bill providing for the putting of dates on cans?

Mr. FULTON. Yes; the dates on cans.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am very glad to hear that statement from the Senator.

Mr. FULTON. That is my judgment, and the claims bill will lead to less discussion, not perhaps because Senators are opposed to putting the dates on cans, but the Senator will find it difficult to get the committee discharged from the consideration of his bill.

There is another thing: The discussion of the claims bill does not involve any constitutional question, and therefore I think that we can dispose of it in a day. Of course if these modern constitutional problems shall be injected into it, I admit that the debate will be unlimited and probably will not be concluded with this session. The bill has already passed the House, has been before the committee, and reported to the Senate.

Mr. President, it would be also a mistake to permit the Senate to understand that this bill is confined solely to claims of the character which Senators have been criticizing. There are a vast number of claims outside of what we term "war claims" provided for in this bill as honest and just claims against this Government as any obligation it owes. Now, the question is whether or not the Senate is going to postpone the consideration of a bill that carries just claims, just obligations, and provides for no obligation that it is not the duty of the Government, under the conditions and under the policy of the present time, to provide for.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. FRAZIER. Is it not a fact that the claims bill which is now presented to the Senate carries about $4 of other kinds of claims to $1 of claims of churches and individuals growing out of the war?

Mr. FULTON. I think the Senator is mistaken in the proportion. I think the proportion of war claims is much larger than that; but there is a vast number of other claims, and in the aggregate they make a vast amount; for instance, there are the French spoliation claims. No more just claims against this Government exists; no stronger obligation rests upon the Government than to provide for the payment of the French spoliation claims. We have withheld the money from the claimants for a century and over, and now they are compelled, session after session, to knock at the doors of Congress and implore it to provide for claims that everybody admits are just and equitable.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that part of those claims have been paid.

Mr. FULTON. Part have been paid.

Mr. LODGE. And to pay part of them and not to pay the others is gross injustice.

Mr. FULTON. It is gross injustice. A large portion of them have been paid. The rest are based absolutely on the same facts and contain absolutely the same equity; and yet the unfortunate claimants have not been successful, and are prevented from securing what is justly their due at the hands of a great and powerful and rich Government.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask the Senator what amount in the bill is represented by the French spoliation claims?

Mr. FULTON. As I recall it, speaking offhand—I gave the figures yesterday—I think it is some $700,000; but I may be mistaken. It is in the neighborhood of that amount.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to say, Mr. President, that of course these claims would not have been reported unless the chairman of the committee believed in their justice; but for nearly a hundred years there has been opposition to the payment of those claims, and some of the best men who have served in the Senate and House of Representatives during all this time have believed that there is no justice or equity in allowing claims of that kind. I remember some years ago, in the House, the late Speaker of the House, Mr. Henderson, of Iowa, presented to the House an able argument against the legality of those claims.

Mr. FULTON. Let me ask the Senator a question. Does not the Senator have in mind the claims of the insurance companies?

Mr. HOPKINS. No.

Mr. FULTON. There are two classes of French spoliation claims.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; I understand that. I understand that these claims have been before Congress time out of mind; but I simply rose to say that there is a divided sentiment on the question as to whether the French spoliation claims should be allowed.

Mr. FULTON. Does the Senator know what the character of the investigation has been to secure approval or disapproval?

Mr. HOPKINS. Volumes have been written on the subject, and many speeches have been made.

Mr. FULTON. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that none of these claims are being provided for that do not rest in judgments of the Court of Claims. Now, would the Senator, after these parties have proceeded to judgment and established their claims in the Court of Claims as just and equitable, have the Government deny them?

Mr. HOPKINS. I would say to the Senator on the question of claims that have been allowed by the Court of Claims, that some years ago when I was a Member of the other House of Congress, investigation showed that claims were allowed there that never ought to have been allowed; and that in the investigations made by that court claims had gone through and judgments been rendered where the claimants had no right in law and equity to the amounts in the judgments awarded them.

Mr. FULTON. I have before heard unfortunate suitors make that plea.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FULTON. I will in just a second.

Every one of these claims is based on a judgment of the Court of Claims. The Senator says that frequently, even when approved by the Court of Claims, he has discovered that they are baseless and inequitable. That may be true, but if it is true, it is the fault of the legal representatives of the Government. They are there. The Government is defended by attorneys from the Department of Justice.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FULTON. In just a second. It does not become the Congress of the United States to question the action of the court to which it has referred these questions for findings.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FULTON. I promised to yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. HOPKINS. In connection with that, I may say that this question was raised in Congress, many Congresses ago, and it does not stand with me alone, but investigation has shown that these claims have been passed where in justice and equity they should not have been allowed.

Mr. FULTON. That may be the judgment of the Senator from Illinois. I do not think it is or will be the judgment of Congress.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TELLER. Had we not better proceed with the regular order?

Mr. FULTON. I had supposed that the Senator from Colorado was very much interested in my remarks.

Mr. TELLER. I was.

Mr. FULTON. But I am pleased to say I am through. I felt it incumbent upon me as chairman of the Committee on Claims to make this statement.

Mr. TELLER. I indorse what the Senator from Oregon has said. I was chairman of that committee for a number of years and a member of it for a great many years.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. I simply want to suggest that until the Journal of yesterday's proceedings is approved we can not receive messages from the House involving conference matters. It seems to me we ought to approve the Journal and receive the messages so as to allow the conferees to get to work.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the Journal as read be approved. The motion was agreed to.

LANDS IN WASHINGTON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, by direction of the President and in response to a resolution of April 28, 1908, certain information concerning the tide-land claims of the Puyallup tribe of Indians in the State of Washington, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

DISBURSEMENT OF INDIAN FUNDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 18th instant, a statement of amounts in the Treasury to the credit of various Indian tribes on June 28, 1898, additions thereto and disbursements therefrom, and balances in the Treasury May 20, 1908, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20063) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19355) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1991) granting an increase of pension to Jerry Murphy.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21735) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents in fee to purchasers of Indian lands under any law now existing or hereafter enacted, and for other purposes; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. KNAPP, and Mr. STEPHENS of Texas managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 20112) providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected, prohibiting fraud in registrations and elections, and providing data for the apportionment of Representatives among the States, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to correct the enrollment of the District of Columbia appropriation bill by transposing the word "hereafter," in the second proviso of the matter inserted by the conference report in connection with Senate amendment No. 141, so as to follow and not precede the word "teachers," in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15641) for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes.

MILITARY POSTS.

Mr. KEAN. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. SCOTT, April 13, 1908, to report it favorably without amendment.

There are several amendments to the resolution reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. I report it without further amendment and as it came from the Committee on Military Affairs.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution has heretofore been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and was reported back with amendments. The amendments of the Committee on Military Affairs will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 4, after the word "military," it is proposed to insert "reservations," and in the same line, after the word "posts," to insert "and stations," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to visit, during the recess of the Senate, such military reservations, posts, and stations of the United States as in the committee's judgment should be examined, in order to ascertain existing conditions at such posts, the necessities for legislation, and any other and further information bearing upon military posts as may seem important and of value in the consideration of future proposed military legislation. And the committee is further authorized to send for persons and papers, to subpoena witnesses and administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer to take notes or testimony and to do clerical duties; the expenses incurred to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CURTIS introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 7218) granting an increase of pension to Edwin Snyder; and

A bill (S. 7219) granting an increase of pension to Jonathan Emert (with the accompanying papers).

Mr. GORE introduced a bill (S. 7220) to reimburse the Chickasaw, Choctaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Indian tribes for the lands of said tribes which were allotted to freedmen, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CARTER introduced a bill (S. 7221) punishing conspiracy to injure or intimidate any person in the exercise of a right under the Constitution or laws of the United States, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GAMBLE introduced a bill (S. 7222) granting an increase of pension to Peter Schang, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PAYNTER introduced a bill (S. 7223) granting a pension to Carlos Sharp, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ANKENY introduced a bill (S. 7224) for the relief of John Geabhart Abbott, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

PATENTS TO INDIAN LANDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21735) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents in fee to purchasers of Indian lands under any law now existing or hereafter enacted, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and accede to the request for a conference, the Chair to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. CLAPP, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. PAYNTER.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk be authorized in enrolling the District of Columbia appropriation bill to transcribe the word "hereafter" in the second proviso in the matter inserted by the conference report in connection with Senate amendment No. 141, so as to follow and not precede the word "teachers."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate agree to the resolution of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was agreed to.

JERRY MURPHY.

Mr. BURNHAM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1901) granting an increase of pension to Jerry Murphy, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the Senate amendments, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

On page 6 of the House amendment, line 23, strike out the word "thirty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

On page 7, line 24, strike out the word "fifteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

On page 11 strike out lines 10, 11, and 12.

On page 12 strike out lines 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12.

On page 13 strike out lines 8, 9, and 10.

On page 15 strike out lines 12 and 13.

HENRY E. BURNHAM,

REED SMOOT,

H. M. TELLER,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,

WM. H. DRAFER,

WILLIAM RICHARDSON,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 20112. An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected, prohibiting fraud in registrations and elections, and providing data for the apportionment of Representatives among the States was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

RIGHTS OF THE STATES.

Mr. TELLER obtained the floor.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask the Senator from Colorado whether he will yield to me for the purpose of making a motion that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of a bill which has passed the House, which has been reported with amendments from the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, namely, the bill (H. R. 21899) providing for the appointment of an Inland Waterways Commission with the view to the improvement and development of the inland waterways of the United States.

Mr. TELLER. On the 25th of April I introduced a resolution and left it to lie on the table, with the statement that I would call it up when I saw fit. I desire to call it up now and to make a few remarks on it. I can not yield for the purpose suggested by the Senator from Nevada.

I ask that the resolution submitted by me be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. TELLER April 25, 1908, as follows:

Resolved, That the maintenance of the principles promulgated in the Declaration of Independence and embodied in the Federal Constitution are essential to the preservation of our republican institutions, and that the Federal Constitution, the rights of the States, and the union of the States must be preserved.

That the maintenance inviolate of the rights of the States, and especially the right of each State to order and control its own domestic institutions according to its own judgment exclusively, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our political fabric depends.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, ordinarily in the closing hours of a session I should feel like apologizing for taking any of the time of the Senate with anything I might be able to say, but in view of what has occurred in the Senate during the last month or six weeks, and particularly in view of what occurred yesterday, I think we may profitably spend a little time in examining what our relations may be as a General Government to the States and of the States to the General Government.

Mr. President, I have quoted once before, and I want to quote again, a provision from the constitution of Massachusetts. I understand it has been in the constitution of Massachusetts since the first constitution was made, and in all of the revisions and correction they have never left this out. It was read here by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] the other day because of my making an allusion to it. The provision is as follows:

A frequent recurrence to the principles of the constitution is one of the things absolutely necessary to preserve the advantages of liberty and to maintain a free government.

Mr. President, I think I may say without any disrespect to the Senate that we have very largely ceased to discuss constitutional questions in this body, and when we did discuss one yesterday there seems to have been a contrariety of opinion and some confusion of ideas, and when we got through I am pretty sure nobody, unless he had the Record before him, could determine exactly what conclusion Senators had come to.

I do not know that I can throw any light upon the Constitution except by reference to the decisions, and that is what I desire to do. I shall not attempt to put forth my views, except as they are supported by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. In my early experience in this body, almost a generation ago, it was a common thing to discuss the Constitution of the United States. It was discussed in those days by men learned in the law, by men who had national reputations as lawyers and who were known in the communities in which they lived as great legal lights. And while there was a contrariety of opinion, as there always will be as to some provisions of the Constitution, there are some things that do not admit of controversy and do not admit of interpretation and do not admit of a question.

I think it may be said that the relation existing between the States and the General Government has been practically settled. I know that the doctrine which prevailed at one time as to the relation of the States with the Government has entirely changed, or has entirely, I may say, been abandoned. And so I come to this question with no special ideas to put forward, but simply to declare what the Constitution, I think, in express terms does declare and what the Supreme Court on many occasions has declared.

This Government, if I may be permitted to repeat an old and trite saying, is one of three departments—the legislative, the judicial, and the executive. And the greatest of all must be the legislative, because that is the body which determines what shall be the policy, what shall be the system, what shall be the laws under which we live. Of course in making these laws we have to comport to the Constitution itself, to see that we do not invade it, and, secondly, we must proceed in such a way as to meet the various views of the membership here; and when we have crystallized our views here and in the other body we run the gantlet of Executive examination.

The President of the United States, under our Constitution, has the power of veto. He can say, when the wisdom of this body has been exercised to its fullest extent, that he does not think it is wise to enact that law. Then we have the power to say that we will, in spite of his objection, create a law of that character.

It has been said, and I heard it said within a few days, that the legislative department of this Government consists of the House of Representatives, as representing the people, and this body, as representing the States, and that the President is also a part of the legislative department of the Government. This I deny. He is not a part of the legislative department of the Government, because against his veto and without his approval we may enact laws that become binding upon him, as upon all the other people of this country. So he is not a part.

The judiciary department of this Government is unique. I know of no government in the world that has such a system as we have. I do not believe there ever existed in the history of the world a government where the legislative department of the government submitted its action to the criticism and consideration of another body. But the fathers of the Republic, the men who created our Constitution, knew that the thirteen States—now forty-six—would have different views as to what their powers were, would have different views as to what the powers of the General Government were, and that there must be in the nature of things some arbitrator to whom these controversies should be sent; and finally they were sent to the judiciary of the United States. We may differ with the judiciary. We may frequently believe, when the judiciary of the United States declares that we have exceeded our constitutional power in the enactment of a law, that it is an erroneous decision, but it becomes binding upon us from the time the judgment is entered.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CLAPP. Does the Senator care to be interrupted by any question as he proceeds, or would he prefer not?

Mr. TELLER. This is a matter about which I should be glad to be interrupted, in order to receive any suggestion that may help in the determination of the question.

Mr. CLAPP. Does the Senator understand that in the inception it was ever the intention of the founders of the Government that the judiciary should exercise this authority over the legislative department of the Government? It is not my understanding. It is something that has grown up since.

Mr. TELLER. I admit that has been a controverted question. I admit there has been a good deal of controversy on that point by early writers, and that there is some reason for supposing that the fathers of the Republic did not expect it to go to the extent it has gone. But it seems to me to be a legitimate conclusion from the provisions of the Constitution itself—

Mr. CLAPP. I think Chief Justice Marshall, who perhaps did more to establish this condition than any other one man in the history of this country, declared only about a year before he took his seat as Chief Justice, that the court did not have the authority to override an act of the legislature upon the ground that the act transcended the constitutional authority of the body. I quite agree with the result. The final establishment of the tribunal was a natural outgrowth.

Mr. FULTON. I call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to the fact that of the Virginia convention for the purpose of ratifying the Constitution Marshall was a member; and on the floor, in debate, distinctly stated that the Supreme Court did, under the Constitution, have the power to declare that a law was in contravention of the Constitution. The argument was put forward that, under the Constitution, the Federal Government would encroach on the rights and powers of the States. Marshall said if any such attempt was made, it certainly was the province of the Supreme Court, and it would unquestionably exercise such power, to declare such legislation void.

Mr. TELLER. That is not pertinent to what I am saying. We all admit it is too late to question that power now. The people have accepted it. I believe that a careful examination of the debates in the Constitutional convention and of the authorities of that age will show that that was the intention; that all controversies existing between the States and the Government or between one State and another or the people and the States should be submitted to that tribunal, and it resulted that after it had been submitted there was some criticism of it and some fears expressed that they had given too much power to that body.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. TELLER. I would rather not yield for a minute or two, until I have finished this subject.

The fear was expressed also, inasmuch as the President of the United States appointed these officers, that there was danger that there would be too much Federal or too much Executive control over the court. After the court commenced its work there were severe criticisms of some of its conclusions. Jefferson and Madison and practically all of the early patriots and creators of the Constitution at times questioned the conclusions of the court. But time after time we have had the court settle these questions, until to-day it is not a question controverted by anybody that the conclusion of the Supreme Court upon a legal question is binding upon all of us. I know that General Jackson said it was not binding on him. It may not be binding on the conscience of any man, but it is binding upon his acts when he comes to act.

I am going to proceed upon the theory that that is settled, that that is admitted, in American politics by every party that ever lived or ever will live. It was the theory of the founders of the Government that the three departments of the Government should be kept absolutely distinct from each other.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understood the Senator a moment ago, in replying to the Senator from Minnesota, to say that he invited questions.

Mr. TELLER. No. I shall be glad to have any Senator interrupt me who may throw any light on the subject. I did not mean to say that I invited interruptions, because they really, except in rare cases, disturb the line of a man's thought, and especially if he is undertaking to make a legal argument. But I will hear what the Senator has to say. I will not agree to answer him.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should not have interrupted the Senator except for what I understood to be an invitation. Whilst he was discussing the power of the legislative department it struck me perhaps that he was too broad in his statement that Congress was the lawmaking power. I wish to call his attention to the provision of the Constitution which gives the President the power—

From time to time [to] give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient.

Mr. TELLER. That is not an executive power.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will take only a moment, if the Senator will permit me. I say it is not executive power.

Mr. TELLER. It is not legislative power.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is one of the powers, however, relating to legislation. In addition to that, the President has power to veto a measure.

Mr. TELLER. I have called attention to that.

Mr. NEWLANDS. So it strikes me that the Executive may well be called a part of the legislative power just as the Senate is a part of the treaty-making power.

Mr. TELLER. I think I can make a distinction between the veto power and the treaty-making power, and if I am allowed I shall try to do so before I get through. I will stop now to say that the President can not make a treaty without the consent of the Senate and the Senate can not make a treaty without the consent of the President. That, as I have said about another thing, is unique. The King of Great Britain and the king of practically every country that I know anything about can make a treaty to suit themselves. I know there has been some controversy in England as to how far a treaty could be made without the concurrence of Parliament, where appropriations had to be made; but the right of the King to make a treaty without the consent of either the House of Lords or the Commons is not questioned in these days, and I do not know whether it has ever been questioned. But I suppose it is two hundred years since the King of Great Britain ever vetoed an act of Parliament, and he would no more think of doing it than he would think of resigning his position of King.

But I have said once or twice, and I want to repeat, there is no precedent for us, and later I intend to speak of the care and wisdom with which I think the Constitution proceeded. There is no pattern in the history of the world for this Government of ours. There have been leagues and confederacies, but there never has been a combination of sovereignties such as ours in which there is one general ruling body over so many sovereign powers.

It is difficult sometimes, I know, to separate these so that there will not apparently be a necessity for interference on the part of the nation in the affairs of the State and sometimes an interference by the State in the affairs of the nation; but I think you may lay it down as a fundamental principle which has been settled by the courts that in all things appertaining to national affairs the Government of the United States is absolutely supreme. It has plenary powers, full powers, complete power to do everything that has been delegated to it or left to it.

Whenever it can do a single thing by Congress, it may do it as emphatically and perfectly and absolutely as if it was a government like Great Britain. That was settled by Marshall in Gibbons v. Ogden, a case decided very early in our history. But it has not minimized the States; it has not interfered with their rights. As was said in that case, the local affairs are still left to the States.

Mr. President, I want to say that in my judgment there is not any twilight division, either. There is a clean-cut provision what the States may do and what they can not do, and what the Government may do, and all this talk about there being a shadowy condition between the two is simply not born of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, I said I was not going to advance my own theories. I am not, and I am not going to bring a number of cases here that will sustain Gibbons v. Ogden. I am going to assume that that was the law and that it has been adhered to by the Supreme Court ever since. What I find there I assume to be the law of this land and controlling Congress and the Executive and the judiciary as well, because they are bound by the Constitution as much as any other branch of the Government.

Mr. President, it may be a little tedious to read the opinion of Judge Marshall in Gibbons v. Ogden. Yesterday, as I said, we had a controversy in the Senate, and the controversy seems to have grown out of the question how far the provision which gave Congress control over the commerce of the country extends, and whether there is a distinct difference between foreign commerce and State commerce. There were several views expressed here yesterday. Exactly what they were it was a little difficult in the conclusion to understand; but I propose to read from this authority, which settles that question beyond a doubt. I will venture to say as to the authority laid down by Marshall that, much as he has been criticised, much as has been said about his being an expansionist and wanting to extend the Constitution, and being a liberal constructionist and all that, nevertheless as he laid down the law, so has it been laid down by the Supreme Court whenever they have come to determine the identical questions that he determined there.

I have not a written speech, but I have some memoranda that I want to call attention to. Let me repeat, although it may be repeated ad nauseam, and I fear it is sometimes, that this is a Government of delegated, limited, and enumerated powers, with all that that means. Delegated by whom, Mr. President, and from whom? From the States? No, Mr. President; delegated by the people of the United States through their State agencies in part; but it is a delegation from the people, the source of all power under our form of Government. It is so declared in the Constitution, and so it has been declared a hundred times by the courts. So it has been declared by every political party that ever lived in this country. There has never been a political party which denied that power to the people. That power is provided for in the Constitution. It is provided that whenever they are displeased with it they have two different methods of amending the Constitution whenever they see fit. And until they do amend it, it is the supreme law of the land, anything in States or communities or anywhere else to the contrary.

Mr. President, it may be a little bit burdensome to the Senate for me to read it, as I am not a first-class reader, yet I prefer to read it myself rather than to let the clerks read it, who usually feel that they are performing a perfunctory service and do not enter into the spirit of it very much. I suppose everybody knows what this case was. The State of New York granted certain privileges to certain shipowners to run their ships exclusively on the Hudson River through the New York waters. That was sustained so far as it could be sustained by the legislature of New York, by the governor, and by the courts. So when this controversy came up it had back of it the State of New York, the biggest State in the Union, with the greatest men in it. The case came to the Supreme Court of the United States in the year 1824, and it was natural that Judge Marshall should take it up and examine it carefully and decide it as he had examined it. If anyone will take the case and examine it and see who were the attorneys who appeared before the court, he will realize that the brains and intellectual strength of the bar and of the country were at that trial. I have not time to go over the names, and it is not worth while. Most of them to us now are unknown, and yet the records of the State of New York and its courts will show that they were the prominent and influential lawyers of the age. The court took up the case. Let me read this part of Judge Marshall's opinion:

The State of New York maintains the constitutionality of these laws; and their legislature, their council of revision, and their judges, have repeatedly concurred in this opinion. It is supported by great names—by names which have all the titles to consideration that virtue, intelligence, and office can bestow. No tribunal can approach the decision of this question without feeling a just and real respect for that opinion which is sustained by such authority; but it is the province of this court, while it respects, not to bow to it implicitly; and the judges must exercise, in the examination of the subject, that understanding which Providence has bestowed upon them, with that independence which the people of the United States expect from this department of the Government.

That is a prelude to the decision, and there is much in it to commend itself to the people of the United States and to the world.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What is the name of the case?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Gibbons v. Ogden.

Mr. TELLER. Gibbons v. Ogden.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. To be found where?

Mr. TELLER. To be found in 9 Wheaton. In Wheaton, as published alone, it is in the first volume; and in Peters's Condensed Reports, which I happen to have here, it is published in volume 5:

As preliminary to the very able discussions of the Constitution which we have heard from the bar, and as having some influence on its construction, reference has been made to the political situation of these States anterior to its formation. It has been said that they were sovereign, were completely independent, and were connected with each other only by a league. This is true. But when these allied sovereigns converted their league into a government, when they converted their congress of ambassadors, deputed to deliberate on their common concerns and to recommend measures of general utility, into a legislature, empowered to enact laws on the most interesting subjects, the whole character in which the States appear underwent a change, the extent of which must be determined by a fair consideration of the instrument by which that change was effected.

This instrument contains an enumeration of powers expressly granted by the people to their Government. It has been said that these powers ought to be construed strictly. But why ought they to be so construed? Is there one sentence in the Constitution which gives countenance to this rule? In the last of the enumerated powers, that which grants, expressly, the means for carrying all others into execution, Congress is authorized "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper" for the purpose.

Mr. President, if I may be allowed to say a word personally, I was brought up under the theory of a strict construction of the Constitution. I still believe that the Constitution ought to be construed not strictly, but honestly. There should be no attempt to stretch it either one way or the other, either to curtail the power granted or to increase it. In my judgment, it is as offensive to good government to attempt to extend the power of the Constitution beyond its exact meaning as it is to do the other thing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law.

Mr. KEAN. I ask for a vote on the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The Senator from New Jersey asks that a vote be taken upon it.

Mr. TELLER. I hardly think that ought to be done now.

Mr. KEAN. Then let it be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. KEAN. I should be very glad to have a vote on it, however, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside. The Senator from Colorado will proceed.

Mr. TELLER. I will continue reading this opinion of Judge Marshall:

But this limitation on the means which may be used is not extended to the powers which are conferred; nor is there one sentence in the Constitution, which has been pointed out by the gentlemen of the bar, or which we have been able to discern, that prescribes this rule. We do not, therefore, think ourselves justified in adopting it.

Mr. President, considerable can be said on this question, but I think I have said enough on that point. Before I get through reading from the opinion it will be seen what Chief Justice Marshall's idea was:

If, from the imperfection of human language, there should be serious doubts respecting the extent of any given power, it is a well-settled rule that the objects for which it was given, especially when those objects are expressed in the instrument itself, should have great influence in the construction. We know of no reason for excluding this rule from the present case. The grant does not convey power which might be beneficial to the grantor, if retained by himself, or which can inure solely to the benefit of the grantee, but is an investment of power for the general advantage in the hands of agents selected for that purpose, which power can never be exercised by the people themselves, but must be placed in the hands of agents or lie dormant. We know of no rule for construing the extent of such powers other than is given by the language of the instrument which confers them, taken in connection with the purposes for which they were conferred.

The words are, "Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes." The subject to be regulated is commerce, and our Constitution being, as was aptly said at the bar, one of enumeration and not of definition, to ascertain the extent of the power, it becomes necessary to settle the meaning of the word. The counsel for the appellee would limit it to traffic, to buying and selling, or the interchange of commodities, and do not admit that it comprehends navigation.

Then he goes on at some length to show that it did include navigation. I have skipped some of the opinion. I believe if on some stated day we would do as we do with Washington's address, and read this opinion to the Senate and have attention paid to it, it might be useful to the Senate and quite as valuable as the reading of the address of the Father of the Country.

It is a rule of construction acknowledged by all that the exceptions from a power mark its extent, for it would be absurd, as well as useless, to except from a granted power that which was not granted—that which the words of the grant could not comprehend. If, then, there are in the Constitution plain exceptions from the power over navigation, plain inhibitions to the exercise of that power in a particular way, it is a proof that those who made these exceptions and prescribed these inhibitions understood the power to which they applied as being granted.

Then he goes on and argues it to some extent. I will read one clause here:

The ninth section of the last article declares that "No preference shall be given, by any regulation of commerce or revenue, to the ports of one State over those of another." This clause can not be understood as applicable to those laws only which are passed for the purposes of revenue, because it is expressly applied to commercial regulations.

The genius and character of the whole Government seemed to be that its action is to be applied to all the external concerns of the nation and to those internal concerns which affect the States generally, but not to those which are completely within a particular State, which do not affect other States, and with which it is not necessary to interfere for the purpose of executing some of the general powers of the Government. The completely internal commerce of a State, then, may be considered as reserved for the State itself.

But in regulating commerce with foreign nations the power of Congress does not stop at the jurisdictional lines of the several States. It would be a very useless power if it could not pass those lines. The commerce of the United States with foreign nations is that of the whole United States; every district has a right to participate in it. The deep streams which penetrate our country in every direction pass through the interior of almost every State in the Union and furnish the means of exercising this right. If Congress has the power to regulate it, that power must be exercised whenever the subject exists. If it exists within the States, if a foreign voyage may commence or terminate at a port within a State, then the power of Congress may be exercised within a State.

This principle is, if possible, still more clear when applied to commerce "among the several States." They either join each other, in which case they are separated by a mathematical line, or they are remote from each other, in which case other States lie between them. What is commerce "among" them, and how is it to be conducted? Can a trading expedition between two adjoining States commence and terminate outside of each? And if the trading intercourse be between two States remote from each other, must it not commence in one, terminate in the other, and probably pass through a third?

Commerce among the States must of necessity be commerce with the States. In the regulation of trade with the Indian tribes, the action of law, especially when the Constitution was made, was chiefly within a State. The power of Congress, then, whatever it may be, must be exercised within the territorial jurisdiction of the several States. The sense of the nation on this subject is unequivocally manifested by the provisions made in the laws for transporting goods by land between Baltimore and Providence, between New York and Philadelphia, and between Philadelphia and Baltimore.

We are now arrived at the inquiry, What is this power? It is the power to regulate—that is, to prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed. This power, like all others vested in Congress, is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution. These are expressed in plain terms, and do not affect the questions which arise in this case or which have been discussed at the bar. If, as has always been understood, the sovereignty of Congress, though limited to specified objects, is plenary as to those objects, the power over commerce with foreign nations and among the several States is vested in Congress as absolutely as it would be in a single government. Having in its constitution the same restrictions on the exercise of the power as are found in the Constitution of the United States. The wisdom and the discretion of Congress, their identity with the people, and the influence which their constituents possess at elections are in this, as in many other instances, as that, for example, of declaring war, the sole restraints on which they have relied to secure them from its abuse. They are the restraints on which the people must often rely solely in all representative governments.

Mr. President, this is a more interesting case than almost any case you can get, and while I believe I have read it a hundred times, I have never read it without new interest. I do not believe any lawyer can read it repeatedly without reading it with new interest and appreciating the wisdom in it, and the extent to which Marshall went and settled once and for all this question, which had been up to that time, 1824, disturbing all sections of the country.

Then he takes up the taxing power, and he then takes up the inspection laws. I want to read this particularly:

That inspection laws may have a remote and considerable influence on commerce will not be denied, but that a power to regulate commerce is the source from which the right to pass them is derived can not be admitted. The object of inspection laws is to improve the quality of articles produced by the labor of a country, to fit them for exportation, or, it may be, for domestic use. They act upon the subject before it becomes an article of foreign commerce or of commerce among the States and prepare it for that purpose. They form a portion of that immense mass of legislation which embraces everything within the territory of a State not surrendered to the General Government, all which can be most advantageously exercised by the States themselves. Inspection laws, quarantine laws, health laws of every description, as well as laws for regulating the internal commerce of a State, and those which respect turnpike roads, ferries, etc., are competent parts of this mass.

No direct general power over these objects is granted to Congress, and consequently they remain subject to State legislation. If the legislative power of the Union can reach them, it must be for national purposes; it must be where the power is expressly given for a special purpose or is clearly incidental to some power which is expressly given. It is obvious that the Government of the Union, in the exercise of its express powers—that, for example, of regulating commerce with foreign nations and among the States—may use means that may also be employed by a State in the exercise of its acknowledged powers; that, for example, of regulating commerce within the State. If Congress license vessels to sail from one port to another in the same State, the act is supposed to be, necessarily, incidental to the power expressly granted to Congress, and implies no claim of a direct power to regulate the purely internal commerce of a State or to act directly on its system of police. So if a State in passing laws on subjects acknowledged to be within its control, and with a view to those subjects shall adopt a measure of the same character with one which Congress may adopt, it does not derive its authority from the particular power which has been granted, but from some other which remains with the State, and may be executed by the same means.

In our complex system, presenting the rare and difficult scheme of one General Government, whose action extends over the whole, but which possesses only certain enumerated powers; and of numerous State governments, which retain and exercise all powers not delegated to the Union, contest respecting power must arise. Were it even otherwise, the measures taken by the respective governments to execute their acknowledged powers would often be of the same description, and might, sometimes, interfere. This, however, does not prove that the one is exercising or has a right to exercise the powers of the other.

Mr. President, that is all that I intend to read at this time. I believe that case, if rightly understood, settled very largely the controversy which existed here yesterday, and I understand it was quoted by those holding one opinion as well as by those holding a different opinion.

But, Mr. President, it is not fair to take a passage here and a passage there out of an opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States or any other court. You must take the whole case together. One part may explain what otherwise might be apparently inconsistent. The whole case, I think, settles clearly that there is an absolute distinction between the power of the States and the power of the General Government, and it is not left in a smoky condition. It is not left in doubt by this Constitution of ours, and certainly it is not left in doubt by this decision of the Supreme Court.

I heard something yesterday about some powers that Congress could exercise that are not included in the Constitution. Mr. President, I deny that for myself, and I deny it because the courts have declared that there is no such thing as inherent power in the Government of the United States. It is a government of delegated, limited, and enumerated powers, and it can not be spread out; there can be no construction given to it that is not consistent with the words of it and with the intent as gathered from its proper words.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado if it can be shown and concluded that the United States has one inherent power, can it not be equally said that it has all inherent powers that belong to any sovereignty?

Mr. CLAPP. We can not hear the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. MONEY. My question was this: If it is concluded anywhere that the United States Government has any inherent power of any sort over any subject, has it not all inherent power over all subjects which belong to all sovereign states; and if that is true, what is the use of having a Constitution at all?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the Supreme Court has stated over and over again that there was no inherent power in this Government. This being a Government of delegated and enumerated powers, how could it have any power that was not enumerated? How can it have any powers that are not delegated? It is a Government of that kind and it derives its powers from delegation by the people, and the enumeration and limitation of those powers are found in the Constitution.

I will call attention to a recent case, the case of Kansas v. Colorado, where the Government went into court upon the theory of the Attorney-General or his representative that there were some inherent powers of the Government that had not been expressed. The court disposed of that summarily, every member of the court agreeing in the decision, and held that there were no inherent powers in the Government of the United States. I am almost ashamed, Mr. President, to discuss that question, it is so plain and so simple. How could there be any inherent powers not enumerated and delegated?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRIGGS in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I will state that another proposition of the Government counsel was that the General Government must have certain powers because they had not been reserved to the States—

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. And did not belong to the States, ignoring the fact that the powers not delegated were reserved to the States or reserved to the people.

Mr. TELLER. In that case the Attorney-General, or whoever represented the Government—I think it was not the Attorney-General himself, but some subordinate—made the proposition to the court that there were certain powers that ought to exist and that did exist, which most nations recognize as existing in them, and that those powers ought to exist in the United States, and if they were not expressed in the Constitution they must be found in the inherent powers of the Government. The court said in so many words, there is no such thing as inherent power. How could there be inherent power in a Government where all power was delegated? Where can you get inherent power that is not delegated? From whom would it come?

In the case of Kansas v. Colorado, to which I have referred, the court said:

We must look beyond section 8 for Congressional authority over arid lands, and it is said to be found in the second paragraph of section 3 of Article IV, reading: "The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States, or of any particular State."

The full scope of this paragraph has never been definitely settled. Primarily, at least, it is a grant of power to the United States of control over its property. That is implied by the words "territory or other property." It is true it has been referred to in some decisions as granting political and legislative control over the Territories as distinguished from the States of the Union. It is unnecessary in the present case to consider whether the language justifies this construction. Certainly we have no disposition to limit or qualify the expressions which have heretofore fallen from this court in respect thereto. But clearly it does not grant to Congress any legislative control over the States, and must, so far as they are concerned, be limited to authority over the property belonging to the United States within their limits. Appreciating the force of this, counsel for the Government relies upon "the doctrine of sovereign and inherent power," adding, "I am aware that in advancing this doctrine I seem to challenge great decisions of the court, and I speak with deference." His argument runs substantially along this line: All legislative power must be vested in either the State or the National Government; no legislative powers belong to a State government other than those which affect solely the internal affairs of that State; consequently all powers which are national in their scope must be found vested in the Congress of the United States. But the proposition that there are legislative powers affecting the nation as a whole, which belong to, although not expressed in, the grant of powers is in direct conflict with the doctrine that this is a Government of enumerated powers. That this is such a Government clearly appears from the Constitution, independently of the amendments, for otherwise there would be an instrument granting certain specified things made operative to grant other and distinct things. This natural construction of the original body of the Constitution is made absolutely certain by the tenth amendment. This amendment, which was seemingly adopted with prescience of just such contention as the present, disclosed the widespread fear that the National Government might, under the pressure of a supposed general welfare, attempt to exercise powers which had not been granted. With equal determination the framers intended that no such assumption should ever find justification in the organic act, and that if in the future further powers seemed necessary they should be granted by the people in the manner they had provided for amending that act. It reads: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people."

Mr. President, this Government did not spring up full armed, as Minerva is said to have sprung, from the brain of Jove. It came from the people of the several States, who passed upon this Constitution after it was framed; but nobody in that Constitutional Convention ever dreamt, Mr. President, that there would be any power exercised by either the legislative, judicial, or executive branch of the Government that was not defined and declared in that Constitution. Such power does not exist; and it is absolutely illogical and absurd to say that it does exist, unless you deny that this is a Government of delegated, limited, and enumerated powers.

Mr. President, I have said once or twice here some things about the Constitution and the necessity of adhering to it and some things about the relation of the States. I have read my resolution here, and that resolution, which I now hold in my hand, has been repeated over and over again by every political party that ever existed in this country.

The party that dominates this Senate to-day, Mr. President, commenced its life with the declaration contained in that first paragraph. In 1856, when the Republican party was organized in the State of New York, which finally became a national party, that first provision was in its platform. The first political speech I ever made I made upon that platform, and the second paragraph was enunciated from the platform at Chicago when Mr. Lincoln was nominated for President. I heard it proclaimed. It was the doctrine, not simply of the new party, but of all the parties that ever lived up to that time; and it has been practically, I believe, the doctrine of every party that has ever acquired any respectability in the country since then.

Mr. President, it is not a meaningless declaration. Think of this first provision! This was in 1856; and no man who does not remember what was the condition in 1856 can fully appreciate the importance of that declaration by that new party—a party made up of all other political organizations that had existed in this country, a party that was largely controlled by the men who had been in command of politics in this country for many years. The leading men there, Mr. President, had been men highly honored in the Democratic party and in the Whig party of those days. That provision reads:

Resolved, That the maintenance of the principles promulgated in the Declaration of Independence and embodied in the Federal Constitution are essential to the preservation of our republican institutions, and that the Federal Constitution, the rights of the States, and the Union of the States must be preserved.

Mr. President, we do not need now to express it with the same emphasis they did in 1856. There is no political organization anywhere in this country that is not absolutely loyal to this Government of ours. There was at that time, in some sections of the country at least, a feeling that they were being improperly and unfairly treated, and that this enunciation would be of value. It was not needed in New York; it was not needed over the greater part of this country any more than, or as much as, it is needed to-day.

Mr. President, there never has been a stronger declaration of States rights made in this country than that contained in this last paragraph, and there could not be. The language used is explicit and positive.

That the maintenance inviolate of the rights of the States, and especially the right of each State to order and control its own domestic institutions according to its own judgment exclusively, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our political fabric depends.

There are two members of this body who were members of that convention in 1856. I was not a member of it, but I heard the platform read. That is the platform upon which that party acquired power in this country. That met the approval of the people of the United States, and it met their approval because it had been the doctrine theretofore.

There was a party at that time that was complaining and threatening that they would withdraw from the Union. This declaration was equivalent to saying to those people, "Much as we may dislike your domestic affairs, we do not intend to interfere with them, because we have no right to interfere." Mr. President, some people who helped create that party know very well what it cost to say again and again to the public, "We do not believe in interfering with the domestic affairs of any State; if the State desires to have slavery, let it have it; we have not the constitutional power to prevent it, and therefore we will not act, because we have not the legal authority to act, much as it may offend our ideas of morals, of propriety, or of economics."

Mr. President, is there any danger now threatening this country? There is not any party in this country that will openly deny the truth of the statement contained in that provision of the resolution. There is not a man here of any political party who would dare vote against it. Nobody will deny it, I do not care on which side of the Chamber he sits, nor do I care what his political faith may be.

I think I can turn in a moment to a sentiment uttered by Marshall. Marshall has been considered an extremist in the way of Federal power and in favor of a National Government. This is what he said in the very opinion I have been reading:

No political dreamer would ever be wild enough to think of breaking down the lines which separate the States and of compounding the American people into one common mass.

That was the language used in the case of McCulloch v. Maryland.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. While most Senators are familiar with these cases and know where they are found, yet I take the liberty of suggesting to the Senator from Colorado that, as he proceeds with his speech, he give the citations, so that they will appear in his speech in the Record.

Mr. TELLER. Very well. This quotation from Marshall is in McCulloch v. Maryland, in 4 Wheaton, and in Gibbons v. Ogden, in 9 Wheaton.

Is there anybody in this country now who proposes to change the Constitution of the United States, except in some immaterial matter? I believe the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has a proposition to elect Senators by the people. I think I am not mistaken when I say that a majority of the States of the Union have declared in favor of that doctrine. That is a proposition that, instead of electing Senators by the legislatures of the States, they should be elected by popular vote. I am willing to subscribe to that. That does not in the slightest degree change the form of government. We should have the same Senate that we would have if Senators were elected by the legislatures. Possibly Senators might get a little nearer than they now are to the people if they were elected by them, but I have some doubt about that. I believe, however, there would be less danger of getting men into this body who ought not to come here.

But there are those who think we have not power enough and that we should have more power. I have not heard anybody demanding more power here in this body. I recollect no occasion when there has been an attempt to amend the Constitution of the United States to give more power to the legislative department. I understand the executive department wants more power. I understand the executive department has sometimes said that Congress ought to have more power.

The President of the United States made a speech at Harrisburg on October 4, 1906, in which he said:

In some cases the governmental action must be exercised by the several States individually. In yet others it has become increasingly evident that no efficient State action is possible, and that we need, through Executive action, through legislation, and through judicial interpretation and construction of law, to increase the power of the Federal Government. If we fail thus to increase it, we show our impotence.

That is the most remarkable declaration that ever came from a President of the United States. I wish and intend to treat with proper courtesy the President of the United States, and I think Senators will all bear me witness that I have never assailed him. I have been careful, because I have kept in mind the scriptural injunction, "Speak not evil of your rulers." But when the President of the United States asks that by executive, legislative, and judicial construction there shall be a change in the Constitution of the United States, it is not heresy to condemn that as a declaration that ought not to be made. If the people of the United States want to change their Constitution, they must take the steps provided in the Constitution to make such a change; and until they do that, the Executive of the United States ought to assume that at least it is satisfactory to them, whether it is satisfactory to him or not.

On the same occasion the President said:

I can not do better than base my theory of governmental action upon the words and deeds of one of Pennsylvania's greatest sons, Justice James Wilson. He developed, even before Marshall, the doctrine—absolutely essential not merely to the efficiency, but to the existence of this nation—that an inherent power rested in the nation outside of the enumerated powers conferred upon it by the Constitution, in all cases where the object involved was beyond the power of the several States and was a power ordinarily exercised by sovereign nations.

Mr. President, neither Marshall nor Wilson ever enunciated that doctrine anywhere. I have taken the pains to examine the matter and done everything I could to find whether Wilson ever made such a declaration, and I aver here that he never did. I know the doctrine of inherent power is an old doctrine. It was pretty rife until Marshall decided the case of McCulloch v. Maryland, and also the case from which I have been reading; and yet, from what the President said, one would suppose that Marshall had declared in favor of the doctrine of inherent power. I do not believe the President intended to say that, but certainly, if he did say it, he made a mistake.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me for just one moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I suppose the Senator recognizes and intends to draw the distinction between implied power and inherent power.

Mr. TELLER. I should think that it was rather a waste of time, in a Senate composed practically of lawyers, to attempt to go into an argument to show there was a distinction between implied and inherent powers. Implied powers, of course, come from something asserted.

Mr. BACON. The Senator, I am afraid, misunderstands me. I simply desired to emphasize what I understood the Senator to be saying and to call attention to the fact that possibly what was intended by many as a recognition of inherent power was but the recognition of implied power.

Mr. TELLER. An implied power can only be implied from something necessarily declared.

Mr. BACON. That is right.

Mr. TELLER. And I am dealing not with implied power, for which people contend, which is a different thing, but with the question of inherent power.

I want to quote from the Secretary of State. There is not anybody who does not recognize in the Secretary of State, Mr. Root, a man of great reputation as a lawyer. He has been at the head of the War Department and is now at the head of the Department of State. He said:

It may be that such control—

I only quote his conclusions—

It may be that such control would better be exercised in particular instances by the Government of the States, but the people will have the control they need, either from the States or from the National Government, and if the State fail to furnish it in due measure sooner or later constructions of the Constitution will be found to vest the power where it will be exercised—in the National Government.

Mr. President, had he stated that the people would find a way of changing their Constitution to meet their wishes, he would have stated the fact, but I do not believe the time will ever come when the people will submit to a construction of the Constitution that is not plainly warranted by the letter and spirit of that instrument.

Great power is wanted by the executive department of the Government in other respects. The President has asked at different times in his messages for an increase of power in one way or another—usually indirectly. The President, in his message in December, 1906, referring to the practice of the courts in certain cases, said:

It would be well to enact a law providing something to the effect that:

"No judgment shall be set aside or new trial granted in any cause, civil or criminal, on the ground of misdirection of the jury or the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for error as to any matter of pleading or procedure, unless, in the opinion of the court to which the application is made, after an examination of the entire cause it shall affirmatively appear that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice." (Vol. 41, pt. 1, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 59th Cong., 2d sess., p. 23.)

Again, on page 29 (same RECORD), under the heading of "Marriage and divorce," he said:

Nevertheless in my judgment the whole question of marriage and divorce should be relegated to the authority of the National Congress. At present the wide differences in the laws of the different States on this subject result in scandals and abuses, and surely there is nothing so vitally essential to the welfare of the nation, nothing around which the nation should so bend itself to throw every safeguard, as the home life of the average citizen. The change would be good because it would confer on the Congress the power at once to deal radically and efficiently with polygamy, and this should be done whether or not marriage and divorce are dealt with. It is neither safe nor proper to leave the question of polygamy to be dealt with by the several States. Power to deal with it should be conferred on the National Government (p. 29).

If there is any one thing that the State is capable of doing, it is to manage and control the relation which we call the "marriage relation." They control the laws of inheritance and descent, and they have the right to provide, what we have not the right without a constitutional amendment to provide, as the President admits, who shall get married, how they shall get married, and so forth. This is one of the instances where somebody is reaching out for more power for the General Government, but it is not the only instance; there are dozens of them.

I do not believe the courts of the United States are above criticism. I have criticised them myself. I have seen coming from them decisions that I do not believe were good law, but when the decisions become the law of the land we all must submit to them. The President of the United States on various occasions has criticised the courts. I doubt whether it is a proper thing for one department of the Government to criticise another department in that way, except when there is a plain violation of constitutional obligation; and for that reason I have been careful, and I might say negligent, in not making some complaints which, I think, might have been made and ought to have been made.

Not long since a district court down in Tennessee made a decision which was criticised by the President of the United States. The President of the United States said the judge had rendered an opinion that ought not to have been rendered, and he made some suggestion of legislation on that line. I believe I have his very words, but I can not find them for the moment. I will say, however, that the President did not, I believe, suggest the removal of the judge or anything of that kind; but he did say to us by a message not long ago that he thought he ought to have the power to retire a judge when he deemed it was proper so to do. In accordance with that suggestion, perhaps—I am not certain about that—a Member of the House of Representatives introduced a bill providing that the President of the United States might retire a judge when he saw fit. I believe it never reached any stage beyond being presented, and you can readily imagine it would not get very far in any legislative body of any ability in this country.

I do not care about going into particulars. I only want to say that we know it is in the air that we have got to have some material change in the Constitution, a change that shall give either to the executive or the legislative department, or both, additional authority. From whom does this demand for power come? Does it not come from the people, the source of all power? Has any convention anywhere in this country, popular or otherwise, ever declared that there was not sufficient power in the executive or that there was not sufficient power in the legislative department? I do not know that they ever have. If they have, I am certain that party has not got any representative on this floor. It may possibly be that some political organization has so declared, but it never has been strong enough to send a man here, or at least it has not any here now, I am sure. We do not need any change in the Constitution upon the great fundamentals, and when we do need it the people will make it, and make it as the Constitution provides, and not otherwise.

Mr. President, it is not gracious to criticise the actions of either public officials or public bodies, but I think you will all agree with me to-day if I should make the statement that we have grown exceedingly careless, even in the Senate of the United States, as to the character of the legislation we allow to go through.

The other day, when the clearest possible invasion of the rights of a State that could be made was before the Senate, and when I objected to it, not being a representative from that State, some of my colleagues said, "Oh, that is a local matter; let it go." No violation of States rights can be local. Every violation of the rights of one State is a violation of the rights of all, and it is our duty here as the representatives of States not to minimize in any degree the National Government, but not to allow any invasion by the National Government of the rights of the States, which is as injurious to the National Government as it is to the State government. If we are to maintain, as I have said before, and I want to repeat it, the condition we are now in and this system of Government, we must do it by the maintenance of the States. The Supreme Court has declared that the Constitution of the United States was made not only for the National Government, but for the State governments and for the people alike.

Mr. President, there is a growing disposition to regard the Declaration of Independence as obsolete. A friend of mine from New York said to me, "You may go into good society in New York and quote from the Declaration of Independence, and they will laugh at you." I may say that the same thing is true in some sections when you quote from the Constitution. They laugh at you. I believe the Constitution of the United States has made a great Government, and yet as compared with what it will be it is still a little Government, a young Government. We have lived one hundred and twenty years. We hope to live a thousand. We hope to be an example for all the world. We hope to see all mankind taking advantage of our system of government and thus spreading abroad as far as possible human comfort and human liberty and human happiness. It is not a question to be turned down. As I said the other day, there will be no sudden departure here, no breaking up of this Government by any sudden act. It will come insidiously, little by little, until by and by the States will exist in name, but they will be of no value to maintain the General Government unless with it they carry the power to protect and take care in a proper stately manner of the people who reside within their borders.

Patriotism does not exist anywhere if there is not a corresponding protection and benefit arising from the Government to those who pay to it devotion. You may talk about your flag. That flag is but a rag when it does not float over freemen. It is but a rag when it does not stand for protection to every man in the community over which it floats. Its beauty does not consist in its lines nor in the color nor the shape, but it consists in the fact that it stands for the rights of men as declared by the Constitution of the United States, which is in accordance with divine law.

Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States, it is said, is not so valuable that we can always stand by it. The men who made it knew that the time would come when we would want to amend it. The first Congress that came thereafter made ten amendments, all in accordance with the theory and principle upon which the Constitution had been adopted, to carry out the very purposes and principles that had been proclaimed in it. They knew that sometime there would come a condition when it would need a change, and they provided how it could be changed, and they put no heavy burden upon us in that particular.

At the expense of keeping the Senate longer than I ought, I want to call attention to the Constitution and the way it was created. I do so because I find a growing disposition to underrate it. Every little while some man says: "Oh, the great Father of our Country was nothing but a common man." I heard such a statement made only a few days ago. I heard a Senator here say one day: "I do not believe all the wisdom of the world was included in the Constitutional Convention." Nobody asserts it. But in the history of mankind there never has been a constitution like unto that. There never has been a constitution, in my judgment, that was so wisely and carefully made. You want to stop and consider what the condition was when it was made. There were thirteen colonies, some big and some little; some with large territory, empires in extent, and others with practically nothing; Delaware no bigger than a county in Virginia; Virginia extending clear up as far as our Government extended, containing an area that has since been made into five great States. Delaware was necessary to the Union. Then there was Rhode Island, smaller still than Delaware, if anything, and with a very small population; New York with a great population; Massachusetts with a fair population; all these States having different interests and different ambitions. All of them had to be brought under one control, and how could it be done in such a way that they would all unite?

They devised the Senate. This was the crucial point. How could the little States have their voice in this Government of ours? Who devised it I do not know. Many men have had the honor claimed for them, but whoever did it did the wisest thing that ever was done. The Senate, representing the sovereignty of the States, representing in some degree also as it must the wishes of the people back of the State, is the only body of the kind that ever existed in the world. The Senate of Rome and of other countries that have had senates was entirely different from ours—different in the character of the elections, different in the character of the service, different in the character of its power. Will any man to-day say that he can create a better system? He would be exceedingly brave who would set out to do it. Even now, with the ambition of States for extra power, how long would a conference last between New York, Delaware, and Rhode Island, or even, perhaps, Colorado? But to-day the smallest State here has the same power as the largest, and sometimes even more power, but it is rightfully exercised, not because the Constitution gives it more power, but because its representatives perhaps are entitled to more consideration than the representatives of some of the larger States.

The President of the United States has a right to veto any bill that we may pass. The other day a member of this body received a letter from the President of the United States, saying that under certain conditions he would veto a bill, and laying down what he claimed to be the theory upon which we should legislate in that respect. It did not seem to make much impression in this body.

The King of England would not have dared, and at no time for two hundred years would he have dared, to send that kind of a letter to a member of Parliament. What would have been the result if he had? I can tell you what did happen when King George III, through one of his ministers, said to a member of Parliament, "If you vote for a certain bill introduced into the Parliament the King will consider it an offense against him and an unfriendly act." Within four days afterwards Parliament, by a vote of 153 to 80, declared it was a crime and a misdemeanor on the part of the King; and since that time no king has ever dared to do it; and he was the most popular King that England had had for two hundred years. The Parliament asserted their rights as the law-giving power to be free from dictation and from the King himself, popular as he was. To give the details, in 1783, Fox brought in his famous bill for the organization of the government of India. The King, George III, requested Lord Temple to let the members of the House of Lords know that any peer who should vote in favor of the bill would be regarded as an enemy of the King. Four days later the House of Commons, by a vote of 153 to 80, resolved that: "To report any opinion, or pretended opinion, of his Majesty upon any bill or other proceeding pending in either House of Parliament, with a view to influencing the votes of the members, is a high crime and misdemeanor, derogatory to the honor of the Crown, a breach of the fundamental principles of Parliament, and subversive to the Constitution of this country."

If that was the rule in Great Britain, it is equally the rule here to-day, or, at least, it ought to be, and heretofore I believe it has practically been the rule that the Executive shall not interfere, except as the Constitution provides he may, by advice to us in proper form.

I omitted to say some things I wanted to say about the President asking for power to dismiss an officer, and I will simply call attention to the President's message of December 5, in which he says:

I am convinced that the President should have the authority, upon his own initiative and responsibility, to dismiss any officer whom he thinks unworthy to remain in the service. I think there is no danger that this power would be abused, and, if such danger exists at all, it is so slight as to be altogether outweighed by the considerations of public policy which require this authority to be vested in the constitutional Commander in Chief of the Navy. I therefore strongly recommend that article 36, as hereinbefore given, be amended by omitting all of it after the words "general court-martial" where these words first occur therein, and that article 37 be repealed.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 5, 1906.

I want to say a few words about the convention of 1787. I do not know that it will enlighten anybody, but I have been somewhat annoyed by and somewhat restive under the criticisms that I hear in present days about George Washington. A friend of mine said to me a few days ago that he was talking to a lady of culture and education, and she said to him, "Do you not think George Washington was greatly overrated?" He said, "I do not know. Have you taken any pains to look into his character or his history or the biographies of him?" She said, "I never read a word about him, but I have heard people say that he was not so great a man as some think." That probably is quite common.

I want to call attention to who were in the convention. Washington was president of the convention. He had been through the war. He had done for his country what no other man could have done, in my opinion, and I want just briefly to say a word on that point.

Benjamin Franklin, then 81 years old, was there. He had made a world-wide reputation for himself. Nearly all those who had been prominent in the affairs of the country between 1775 and 1787, except John Adams and Thomas Jefferson, both being abroad, were present. Of the fifty-five members in attendance forty had been Members of Congress; eight were signers of the Declaration of Independence; six of the Articles of Confederation; five were governors of their respective States and two of them became Presidents, one Vice-President (Gerry), Langdon had been a Senator; Randolph, Attorney-General; Hamilton the first Secretary of the Treasury; Dayton was in Congress eight years and was Speaker of the House and afterwards Senator; Ellsworth and Johnson, of Connecticut, were the first Senators from that State, and Ellsworth subsequently Chief Justice of the United States. I may say in passing what I have not added here, that he left a record scarcely exceeded by anybody and by nobody, unless it was Marshall himself. Johnson, to whom probably must be given the credit of having suggested the creation of a Senate, with the number, to be selected by the legislatures of the States, became president of Columbia College. I believe that Johnson, of Connecticut, is entitled to that credit, but it is disputed, and I put it as probable.

Rutledge became associate justice of the United States Supreme Court; Rufus King a Senator from New York and minister to England. Sherman, of Connecticut, went to the House of Representatives and then into the Senate. Yates was chief justice of New York. Gerry, Strong, Paterson, Bassett, Spaight, Davie, Martin, and Charles Pinckney all became governors of their respective States, and some of them occupied that position more than once. Bassett, Dickenson, Martin, Blount, Butler, Few, all became Senators. Gerry, Fitzsimmons, Carroll, Spaight, and Williamson were Members of the House of Representatives under the Constitution. Edmund Randolph, delegate to the Continental Congress, who became a member of the Convention afterwards, served in the capacity of governor of Virginia, Attorney-General, and Secretary of State of the United States.

It will be seen from this hasty review that this was no ordinary convention. It has never been equaled in the character of its membership in the world's history.

I claim to be something of a student of the world's history. No man can put into a body of equal size an equal number of men of the same character and reputation.

It had a great task to perform, namely, the establishment of a government of the people and a government of thirteen sovereignties, each jealous of their rights and each desiring to yield as little as possible of their powers as States. By the plan proposed for the ratification of the Constitution, it must have the support both of the people and the States alike. Was a greater task ever set for men than this? I think not. Under this plan the States must each call a convention of its people to ratify the act of the national convention. In December, 1787, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware had ratified. In January, 1788, Georgia and Connecticut did likewise, while Maryland, South Carolina, and New Hampshire postponed their ratification for some time, but all of them had acted by January 21, and there being a ratification by nine States, the Constitution became effective according to its terms.

New York, Virginia, North Carolina, and Rhode Island had not ratified. Would they do so? The result in New York and Virginia was doubtful, and when New York finally acted it was by a majority of only two, while Virginia gave a majority of ten for the Constitution. It was not until May 29 that the thirteen States had ratified the Constitution.

The whole number of delegates in the convention was sixty-five, but fifty-five was the greatest number that ever attended at one time, and of the fifty-five, forty afterwards became Members of Congress.

When nine States had ratified the Constitution, Congress determined to proceed to the organization of the new Government. In February the electors were elected, and on the 4th of March, 1789, Congress met, and the present Government was then born. But neither the House of Representatives nor the Senate had a quorum, and it was not until the 6th of April that a quorum of both Houses was obtained, and on April 30 the President was inaugurated.

Who were in the convention that made the Constitution?

Washington, the greatest man of American history and as good as he was great. For eight years he had been at the head of the Revolutionary Army. An American writer says of him:

The most famous man alive; idolized at home, named by every tongue in Europe, praised by kings and great ministers, who compared him with Caesar, Charlemagne, and Alfred the Great—his head snow white, but with steadfast heart and mind he moved in the simple pursuit of his country's weal.

Lord Brougham said:

Until time shall be no more, will be a test of the progress which our race has made in wisdom and virtue which will be derived from the veneration paid to the immortal name of Washington.

Gladstone said:

If among all the pedestals supplied by history for public characters of extraordinary ability and purity, I saw one higher than all the rest, and if I were required at a moment's notice to name the fittest occupant for it, my choice would light on Washington.

I have said he was great—he was great as a soldier, great as a statesman, great in virtue, great in his love of liberty preserved and supported by law. His eight years of warfare under the circumstances and conditions surrounding him finds no parallel in the history of the world. No military chieftain who preceded him or has followed has eclipsed his fame. It is as world-wide as it was the day he surrendered his commission to the people whose liberty he had won.

That he was proficient in all things I do not claim, but he was so near it that he stands to-day as he did in 1783—the most conspicuous American that ever lived.

If we may believe there is a Providence that cares for man, we may well believe that a power greater than human secured his selection to lead our forces in that great contest; and great as was his service during that eventful period between 1775 and 1783 it was none the less valuable in forming the first Constitution of the United States. By what I have said about Washington I do not intend in any way to underestimate what others did in the field of strife or the not less important field of statesmanship. A few days since I heard a gentleman state that he did not believe that the Convention that drafted our Constitution had all the wisdom of the world; but, Mr. President, that was a great Convention—not great in numbers, but great in wisdom. Who can recall another body of men with greater ability than the Convention which drafted our Constitution?

We will show our appreciation of that great man who first gave shape to this Government in its executive branch by our devotion to the principles established in our Constitution, and we should not let anything interfere with the maintenance in this body of the right of any State, because upon that rests, in my judgment, the foundation of this Government, and it will be maintained just as long as you can maintain the separate States in their statehood, and no longer.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18347) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 36, 43, 44, 45, 51, 52, 54, 60, 64, 65, 66, 67, 69, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 78, 79, 81, 82, 88, 89, 92, and 93.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 39, 40, 41, 42, 47, 48, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 61, 62, 70, 76, 77, 80, 84, 86, 87, 91, 94, 95, 96, 97, and 98; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 5, line 15, strike out the words "And provided further" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Provided;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 10, line 16, strike out the words "and fifty-one;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 10, lines 15 and 16, strike out the words "four hundred and ninety-seven" and insert in lieu thereof the words "five hundred and forty-eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 11, lines 12 and 13, strike out the words "twenty-nine million" and insert in lieu thereof the words "twenty-eight million seven hundred and twenty-six thousand five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 13, line 21, strike out the word "six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 14, line 13, strike out the word "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eleven;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 14, line 19, strike out the words "thirty-eight thousand six hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "thirty-seven thousand four hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 18, after the word "actual," insert the word "simultaneous;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 20, after the word "annum," add the words "and to defray the expenses of said headquarters the sum of twenty thousand dollars is hereby appropriated;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 25, after the word "national," insert the words "or State;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 25, strike out the amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That section thirty-eight hundred and ninety-three of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"And the term 'indecent' within the intendment of this section shall include matter of a character tending to incite arson, murder, or assassination."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 27, line 1, strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

As to amendments numbered 63, 76, and 77 the conferees are unable to agree.

BOIES PENROSE,
J. C. BURROWS,
A. S. CLAY,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JESSE OVERSTREET,
J. J. GARDNER,
JOHN A. MOON,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments numbered 63, 76, and 77, and agree to the further conference asked for by the House of Representatives, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. PENROSE, Mr. BURROWS, and Mr. CLAY.

RIGHTS OF THE STATES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. TELLER relative to the rights of the States, and especially the right of each State to order and control its own domestic institutions, etc.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I was forcibly struck with one thing among many others said by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], about which I wish to say a little more. The Senator from Colorado alluded to the fact that a letter had been written by the President of the United States, according to common report, in which there had been a threat made by the President that he would veto certain legislation in case that that legislation should be enacted by Congress, and the Senator went on to say that he was surprised that the making known of that threat had not seemed to create much of a stir in Congress or in the Senate. There was another thing which I think is still more remarkable. That information relative to the threatened veto did not come to us officially, but was simply a matter of well-founded report, about the correctness of which I suppose no one has any substantial doubt. But a more remarkable fact is that the President of the United States should have communicated to this body, as well as to the House of Representatives in an official message a threat of that kind, and that that official threat, officially communicated, has created no stir in Congress. On the 25th day of March of this year the President sent a message to Congress, addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives, in which there occurs this language:

Numerous bills granting water-power rights on navigable streams have been introduced. None of them give the Government the right to make a reasonable charge for the valuable privileges so granted, in spite of the fact that these water-power privileges are equivalent to many thousands of acres of the best coal lands for their production of power. Nor is any definite time limit set, as should always be done in such cases. I shall be obliged hereafter, in accordance with the policy stated in a recent message, to veto any water-power bill which does not provide for a time limit and for the right of the President or of the Secretary concerned to fix and collect such a charge as he may find to be just and reasonable in each case.

I will not stop to discuss the question as to whether the Government of the United States has any interest in the water power of a navigable stream entirely within the limits of a State. I have no doubt in my mind as to the fact that the Government of the United States has none whatever. It has only power over the navigation of the stream—nothing more. But conceding that it has power over the water power, that is not the point I am after. I am speaking of the question as to whether there is a breach of the privileges of the Senate in the President of the United States sending to us a message in advance stating that if certain legislation is enacted he will veto it.

The time will not permit me to elaborate it, but I simply desire to say, and I am glad of the opportunity to say, that I consider it a most gross breach of the privileges of the Senate for any such message to be sent to the Senate of the United States. I am unwilling that this session shall close without an emphatic protest by some Senator against this invasion of the prerogatives of the Senate. If the President of the United States can do so in one instance, he can do so in all; and he can take up the Calendar of the Senate and go seriatim through it and practically, so far as his power will enable him to do it, dictate to the Senate what legislation they shall enact and what legislation they shall not enact, by saying, "If you pass this bill, I will approve it; if you pass this other bill, I will veto it;" practically saying, "Do as I bid you." I do not consider, Mr. President, that there could possibly be any grosser breach of the privileges of the Senate short of actual personal constraint of a Senator.

Mr. President, we are not without precedents in regard to this matter and not without expressions of opinion of Senators on the subject. While the Senator from Colorado has been speaking, having had my attention now called to the subject by what he has said, I have sent and got some of the books which I have now before me, and from which I will read very briefly. There was a very learned and distinguished man, who sat here, I think, occupying the very chair the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] is now temporarily occupying—Mr. HOAR, Senator from Massachusetts, who was not slow whenever there was a breach of the privileges of the Senate to assert what he conceived to be the privileges of the Senate, and to dispute the right of any power to encroach upon those privileges. I recollect the incident which occurred in the Senate when the then senior Senator from Massachusetts used the language which I am now about to read. It was a matter which grew out of some bill in which the then Senator from Kansas, Mr. BURTON, was interested. I do not read the entire colloquy, because it is too long. This is what occurred on the 21st day of January, 1903:

Mr. BURTON. I am satisfied that if Senators will hear the bill read there will be no objection to it. There were no objections to it in our committee.

Prior to that the Senator from Kansas had made allusion to something which had been said by the President or by the head of a Department. Mr. Hoar then said this:

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to interfere with the Senator's bill, and I shall not, but I should like to be allowed to say that I do not fancy the practice which has grown up, and for which the Senator from Kansas is not in the least responsible (I dare say we are all alike responsible), of stating what is the opinion of any head of a Department or what is the opinion of the President of the United States himself about measures pending in this or the other House. There is a constitutional method by which the President conveys his approval or disapproval of bills, and outside of that method I hold it to be contrary to the privileges of the Senate to have the opinion of the President of the United States stated in legislation. The House of Commons or the House of Lords always resent it, and have in history done so for a great many years, when that statement is made about the Crown.

Now, when the President has formally communicated to us a veto and has not under his right to communicate to us his opinion and recommendation said anything else, I do not think it is within the limits of Senatorial privilege to say that the head of a Department, or especially the head of a Bureau like the Land Office, thinks the President made a mistake and after all we ought to pass the bill. I do not care so much about that, but the great newspapers all over the country are informing us that certain bills are Administration bills, and that certain Senators have been at the White House and have arranged with the President of the United States what the Senate shall do about a treaty or about a trust bill, or about some other important matter of legislation. It is nobody's business to be arranging with the President of the United States what the Senate shall do. We are an independent body.

And so on.

Mr. President, this matter has rested in my mind ever since the message was sent in by the President in March last. Since that time we have passed one of those bills without making the provision in regard to water power to which he alluded in that message, and he has vetoed it. But unfortunately the bill originated in the other House and the veto did not come to the Senate, so there has been no opportunity here for the expression of views upon this subject.

I want to say, Mr. President, that I had it very gravely in mind whether I should introduce a resolution raising the question whether the threat of a veto was a breach of the privileges of the Senate, and referring to the Committee on Privileges and Elections the question whether the particular language contained in the message of March 25 was not a breach of the privileges of the Senate. I have only been deterred from doing so because of the fear that if introduced by myself, belonging to the opposition party, the resolution might be construed into a partisan matter, a matter which I desired should be considered by the Senate in a nonpartisan manner, concerning, as it does, Senators of all parties, and not be degraded into a partisan contest. The question is way above party considerations. It concerns the highest prerogatives of the Senate. Therefore I have refrained. But I have hoped that some Senator of the dominant party would introduce that resolution.

Mr. President, it has not always been thus. In the elder day the time was when the suggestion of such a breach of the privileges of the Senate or of the House of Representatives met with prompt response from the members of either body concerned. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a most noted instance of that. Of course we all recognize the fact that there was no President of the United States who, from character and from particular conditions of the time, was in a position to be treated with the utmost deference and consideration by Congress to such a degree as President Lincoln, and, further, that in time of war naturally there is, in practice, less stringent observance of the rules with reference to the trespassing of the executive department upon the prerogatives of the legislative department. Nevertheless, it is a fact that once during the civil war, at the very height of the pride and prestige and power of President Lincoln, the House of Representatives resented, and most pointedly and emphatically condemned, what they considered to be a breach by him of the privileges of the House.

In 1864 the House of Representatives passed a resolution condemnatory of the occupation of Mexico by the French forces. The French Government called the attention, through its diplomatic representatives, of the State Department to the fact that such a resolution had been passed by the House of Representatives, and took exception thereto, and correspondence ensued, in which the executive department of the United States practically disclaimed any responsibility for the act of the House of Representatives and, in effect, said to the French Government that the action of the House of Representatives was without practical force or effect. I will read, in order that it may go in the RECORD properly, the communication of the French Government accepting that practical disclaimer given by Mr. Lincoln through the State Department. It is found recited in a resolution which was introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. Henry Winter Davis, of Maryland, a man not an opponent of the Administration, but a most zealous member of the party in power. This, which I now read, occurred on the 23d day of May, 1864:

Mr. DAVIS of Maryland. I ask the Clerk to read my resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Whereas the following announcement appeared in the Moniteur, the official journal of the French Government—

The French is quoted in one column and the English translation in a parallel column, as follows:

The Emperor's government has received from that of the United States satisfactory explanations as to the sense and bearing of the resolution come to by the House of Representatives at Washington relative to Mexico.

It is known, besides, that the Senate had indefinitely postponed the examination of that question, to which in any case the executive power would not have given its sanction.

That was the assurance which had been given by the State Department here to the French Government. That is the quotation from the Moniteur, the official organ of the French Government. The resolution, as introduced by Mr. Davis, after quoting the above, proceeds:

Therefore,

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to this House, if not inconsistent with the public interest, any explanations given by the Government of the United States to the Government of France respecting the sense and bearing of the joint resolution relative to Mexico, which passed the House of Representatives unanimously on the 4th of April, 1864.

And then, in response to that request, follows in full the correspondence between the French Government and the American Government in relation to the matter.

Thereupon the matter was, by resolution of the House, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House. I hold in my hand the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House in response to the requirement of the resolution of the House that it should make an examination and report the finding whether there had been a breach of the privileges of the House. After going through a full examination of the matter, citing precedents and making arguments to show the House had acted within its proper powers, and to show that there had been a trespass and breach of the privileges of the House, the committee submitted this report and the accompanying resolution to the House of Representatives. It is found in the same volume from which I read.

I can not read the entire report, because it is too long. I will, however, read the opening sentences of the report, which are as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs have examined the correspondence submitted by the President relative to the joint resolution on Mexican affairs with the profound respect to which it is entitled, because of the gravity of its subject and the distinguished source from which it emanated.

They regret that the President should have so widely departed from the usage of constitutional governments as to make a pending resolution of so grave and delicate a character the subject of diplomatic explanations. They regret still more that the President should have thought proper to inform a foreign government of a radical and serious conflict of opinion and jurisdiction between the depositories of the legislative and executive power of the United States.

No expression of deference can make the denial of the right of Congress constitutionally to do what the House did with absolute unanimity other than derogatory to their dignity.

After reviewing in this report the whole case, the committee of the House of Representatives, replying to what the President had done, submitted this resolution to the House of Representatives:

The committee, in the conclusion of the report, recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Congress has a constitutional right to an authoritative voice in declaring and prescribing the foreign policy of the United States, as well in the recognition of new powers as in other matters; and it is the constitutional duty of the President to respect that policy not less in diplomatic negotiations than in the use of the national force when authorized by law; and—

and the propriety of any declaration of foreign policy by Congress is sufficiently proved by the vote which pronounces it; and such proposition while pending and undetermined is not a fit topic of diplomatic explanation with any foreign power.

Thus spoke, Mr. President, the House of Representatives, through its committee, to Abraham Lincoln—in personal popularity and in political and personal influence the most powerful President who ever occupied the White House. There was not one tithe of the breach of the privileges of the House of Representatives in the disclaimer which President Lincoln, through Mr. Seward, had made to the French Government that there is in the formal message from the President of the United States saying to the Congress of the United States—to the Senate of the United States and to the House of Representatives—that if they enacted certain legislation he would veto the bill.

Mr. President, it is a most significant thing that a committee of the House of Representatives in that day should have unanimously submitted to the House of Representatives such a resolution as that which I have just read, because, the Senate will mark the fact, the question was there whether the President of the United States, through the State Department, had or had not acted within his powers; whether he had or had not committed a breach of the privileges of the House of Representatives in making the explanation and disclaimer which he had made to the Government of France as to the action of the House of Representatives. The last two lines of the resolution are a direct condemnation of the fact that such had been done, in this language:

And such proposition—

That is, a proposition relative to foreign affairs in the particular matter, the Mexican affairs—

And such proposition while pending and undetermined is not a fit topic of diplomatic explanation with any foreign power.

It has been made a topic of explanation with a foreign power and this resolution says that it was not a fit topic for explanation, thereby condemning it. I paraphrase, sir, the words of that resolution, and say that while a measure is pending in Congress it is an unfit thing to do for the President to send a message to Congress that he will veto the measure if enacted into law.

I say, Mr. President, it is remarkable that such a resolution should have been reported by that committee to the House of Representatives, but the most remarkable statement follows. When that resolution was submitted to the House of Representatives on the 4th day of April, 1864, it received the unanimous vote of every man in the House of Representatives, and among the names recorded I find on page 1408 of the Congressional Globe of April 4, 1864, the name of our honored, most distinguished, and in commission our eldest brother, the Senator from the State of Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who now sits before me, and who was then a Member of the House of Representatives.

The vote, as given by yeas and nays, is as follows:

Mr. Davis of Maryland called for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 109, nays 0, as follows:

Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Alley, Allison, Ames, Ancona, Anderson, Arnold, Ashley, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Francis P. Blair, Bliss, Blow, Boyd, Brooks, Broomall, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Chanler, Ambrose W. Clark, Clay, Cobb, Cole, Cox, Cravens, Henry Winter Davis, Dawson, Denson, Denison, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eden, Eldridge, Elliot, English, Finck, Frank, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Herrick, Highy, Holman, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asabel W. Hubbard, Jenckes, Julian, Kalbfleisch, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, King, Law, Lazar, Long, Longyear, Mallory, Marcy, McBride, McClurg, McKinney, Middleton, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, James H. Morris, Morrison, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Norton, Charles O'Neill, John O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyn, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, Scott, Shannon, Spalding, Stevens, Strouse, Thayer, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—109.

Nays—0.

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. President, I can not add to the force of that action and I will not now say anything more.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon a question?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest to the Senator if there is not a vast difference between the action of President Lincoln, after the House had taken action upon the matter, and the declaration of the Executive as to his purpose and policy, not with reference to what Congress had done, but his purpose and policy with reference to possible legislation? It strikes me that there is a vast difference.

Mr. BACON. I think the vast difference is in the grossness of the excess of the breach of privilege in this case over what there was in that case.

In the first place, Mr. President, the Senator's question is not predicated upon the facts as they exist, because the Senator will recognize that while Congress had given expression to its views there had been no determination, and the resolution expressly puts its condemnation upon that ground. It says:

And such proposition, while pending and undetermined, is not a fit topic of diplomatic explanation with any foreign power.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

Mr. OWEN rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield further to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator from Oklahoma will allow me a moment, I will not trespass long.

Mr. BACON. I do not feel justified in trespassing on the time of the Senator from Oklahoma, as I have really occupied the floor by his courtesy, and therefore I continue only with his permission.

Mr. CLAPP. I supposed the Senator from Georgia had finished.

Mr. BACON. I beg pardon. I thought you wished to ask me a question.

Mr. OWEN. I did not intend to interrupt the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator from Oklahoma, but I came to an abrupt conclusion on purpose, while of course much more might be said on the subject, because I knew I was trespassing on what was the legitimate time of the Senator from Oklahoma. When I made the response to the Senator from Minnesota I was under a misapprehension. I thought the Senator desired to propound an inquiry to me. But I have no desire to occupy the floor longer, and I will not trespass further upon the time of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me for a moment?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator from Oklahoma has yielded to me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not hear the Senator from Oklahoma. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CLAPP. If I can do so and retain the floor.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry.

Mr. OWEN. I did not intend to yield the floor, but merely to give an opportunity to the Senator from Minnesota to make a comment, which I thought he wished to make.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not know that anyone had been recognized to succeed the Senator from Georgia, but if anyone has been recognized, I want to make an inquiry before we pass away from this subject. It is whether we can not be indulged to pursue this matter a few minutes longer.

The statement was made first by the Senator from Colorado and afterwards referred to by the Senator from Georgia that a letter had been received from the President saying that if we passed certain legislation, he would veto it; and there might have been added the statement that if we passed it over his veto, he would refuse to enforce it. The Senator who is supposed to have received that letter was absent from the Chamber. He is now present in the Chamber. I should like official and accurate knowledge with respect to that letter. I have heard about it. I have made some statements about it.

Mr. OWEN. I regret very much, but I do not feel willing to yield for that purpose.

Mr. FORAKER. Before we pass from it the Senator from Michigan might be given an opportunity to put that letter in the Record, if he is willing to do so.

Mr. OWEN. I do not feel willing to yield the floor for that purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma declines to yield.

Mr. ALDRICH. Was the Senator from Oklahoma recognized by the Chair?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma was recognized.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator from Oklahoma yielded to me.

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota for a question.

Mr. CLAPP. I will not trespass upon the time of the Senator from Oklahoma. I simply want to say that in the Lincoln case the House had not concluded its action. It had proceeded to act, and the matter was pending in the House. It does seem to me that there is a great difference between the two cases.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question in order that this matter may be settled, and other matters? The Senator belongs to the dominant party. Will not the Senator kindly have a resolution sent to the Committee on Privileges and Elections in order that the question between us may be settled?

Mr. CLAPP. No, sir; because I do not think that the matter warrants any such resolution. At the proper time, when I will not be trespassing upon the time of another Senator, I will state the reasons why I do not think so.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. OWEN. For a question.

Mr. FORAKER. Only for an inquiry of the Senator from Minnesota before he takes his seat. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not think the sending of a communication to a member of this body containing a threat that if the body sees fit to pass legislation, it will be vetoed, and if passed over the veto, it will be disregarded, is not a matter this body should take notice of officially in defense of its own dignity and its own honor and its own usefulness as well?

Mr. CLAPP. In the first place, Mr. President, it would depend at the very threshold upon whether that occurred. I know of no evidence before the Senate of that fact; nor do I think, at present at least, that the mere sending of a letter to a man because he is a Senator, unless it is addressed to the Senate, necessarily calls for any reply from the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. Perhaps not from the Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. I think we have magnified this matter beyond all fair proportions.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, it is possible that we have. It is to avoid any magnifying of it that I should like to get the exact fact. If we could have the exact fact and put it in the Record, then I think we all would know what to do about it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

Mr. FORAKER. I will not trespass longer on the time of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. OWEN. I do not wish to give up the floor.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not ask that, but I ask the Senator to yield that I may ask a unanimous consent that will take only a moment and occasion no debate whatever. I wish to call up a bill relating to Territories, the omnibus Territories act, which has passed the House. I ask that it be taken up, considered, and passed.

Mr. HALE. What is the bill?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is a bill which the Senate has passed and which the House has passed and sent back to us, with amendments concerning many things, such, for instance, as authorizing the issuance of bonds for the building of a courthouse in a certain county of Arizona, another with regard to another public building, and two or three with reference to Hawaii, about which the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico have been consulted.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, if this leads to any debate, I shall not yield.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will not ask for it if it does.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I shall be much obliged to the Senator from Oklahoma if he will yield.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY THE PEOPLE.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to joint resolution No. 91, which was laid upon the table several days ago, and which I now wish briefly to address the Senate upon. It is a joint resolution proposing certain amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. DEPEW. I wish to ask a question of the Senator from Oklahoma. Has the joint resolution been read?

Mr. OWEN. It was presented to the Senate several days ago, and I want to have it read now.

Mr. DEPEW. I asked the question because I wish to present an amendment to it. Possibly the Senator might offer his remarks also to the amendment which I shall propose.

Mr. OWEN. I prefer to submit my remarks first, and have the amendment come in due order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the joint resolution be read.

Mr. OWEN. The Secretary will please read the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Secretary read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 91) proposing certain amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved, etc., That the following article be proposed to the legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall, immediately after passage of this resolution, be submitted by the President of the United States to the governors of the several States of the Union, and when ratified by three-fourths of the State legislatures such article shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the said Constitution, namely:

"Art. 16. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the electors thereof for six years, and each Senator shall have one vote; and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of Members of the House of Representatives. They shall be divided as equally as may be into three classes, so that one-third may be chosen every second year, and if vacancies happen, by resignation or otherwise, the governor may make temporary appointments until the next regular election in such State. No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained the age of thirty years, and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an elector of the State for which he shall be chosen. The Vice-President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no vote unless they be equally divided. The Senate shall choose their own officers, and also a president pro tempore in the absence of the Vice-President, or when he shall exercise the office of the President of the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. ALDRICH. I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his question of order.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection to the Senator from Oklahoma making a speech upon this subject, but it should be distinctly understood that this joint resolution is not before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will not be before the Senate except upon unanimous consent or by motion.

Mr. OWEN. I have made no motion, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma has made no motion.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection to the speech of the Senator from Oklahoma being made.

Mr. OWEN. I repeat I have made no motion.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. OWEN. I yield if the bill which the Senator desires to move will involve no debate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It will involve absolutely none. I am convinced of that. If it does, I will not push it. I made the same request a moment ago. It will only take about a minute and a half, I think, unless some Senator proposes an amendment or asks for the entire reading; and if that is done, I shall not ask that the bill be considered. I think, on the whole, however, I will not interrupt the Senator now, and I am very much obliged to him. He is very kind.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, this resolution proposes to submit to the States of the Union for their consideration, under Article V of the Constitution of the United States, a sixteenth amendment to the Constitution.

Article V provides that Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to the Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by Congress.

The reasons for this proposed reform are thoroughly well understood—

First. That it will prevent the corruption of legislatures.

Second. That it will prevent the disturbance of the State legislation by contests over the Senatorship.

Third. That it will prevent men using money improperly to obtain a seat in the Senate.

Fourth. That it will make the Senate more responsive to the will of the people of the States.

Fifth. That it will compel candidates for the Senate to be subjected to the severe scrutiny of a campaign before the people and compel the selection of the best-fitted men, and so forth.

The joint resolution No. 91 provides the mode of ratification by "three-fourths of the State legislatures" of the proposed sixteenth amendment.

Mr. President, it is not my purpose to debate this resolution.

This matter has been debated by the American people and in the public press and in numerous assemblies, and the mind of the American people has been made up with regard to it. I therefore do now respectfully request the action of the Senate in favorable compliance with the well-established public opinion of over three-fourths of the States of this Union.

I call the attention of the Senators from Pennsylvania that that great Commonwealth, by its legislature, on the 13th day of February, 1901, passed a joint resolution in favor of the election of United States Senators by the direct vote of the people, which resolution was approved by Gov. William A. Stone.

I call the attention of the Senator from Indiana that that great Commonwealth, by its legislature, on the 11th of March, 1907, passed a joint resolution requesting suitable steps to be taken to provide for the election of Senators by the direct vote of the people, and I challenge the Senators from Indiana to give their cordial support to the will of the people of Indiana as expressed through the legislature of that State; that they now make effective the will of Indiana by cooperating with me in a demand for an immediate and favorable vote upon joint resolution 91.

I call the attention of the Senators from Michigan to the fact that that great State in like manner has passed a similar resolution.

I call the attention of the Senators from Illinois to the fact that on the 10th day of February, 1903, the legislature of that great State made the same demand in compliance with the will of the people of the State of Illinois, and I call upon the Senators from Illinois to vote with me for this resolution, in compliance with the expressed will of the people of that Commonwealth, and to hold up my hands in the passage of this joint resolution No. 91.

I call the attention of the Senators from Wisconsin to the fact that that great State in like manner has committed itself positively to this reform and has registered the demand of the people of that State in favor of this amendment, and I appeal to them to cooperate with me in the immediate passage of this resolution.

I call the attention of the Senators from Minnesota to the fact that on the 9th day of March, 1901, the legislature of that great Commonwealth passed a resolution requesting favorable action on this proposition.

I call the attention of the Senators from Iowa to the fact that on March 12, 1907, the legislature of that great State expressed the will of the people of Iowa, and I appeal to the Senators from Iowa to cooperate with me in making effective the wishes of the people of Iowa.

Mr. President, in Senate Document No. 454 I have submitted to the Senate copies of the resolutions passed by the various States, and I call the attention of the Senators of the several States enumerated by me to these resolutions and ask their loyal cooperation. I call the attention of other Senators to the fact that many of their States, not enumerated, which have not taken formal action upon this question are fully committed to it through the adoption of the principle of nominating primaries or mandatory primaries for the nomination of Senators, as Maryland, Mississippi, and other States.

In these various resolutions the reasons for this demand have been abundantly set forth.

I shall not, in the presence of this Senate, repeat them. I shall assume that they are thoroughly well understood and that this question is no longer debatable, and I ask the Senators to sustain me in the effort to get a vote now on this joint resolution and in the effort to prevent postponement or delay or evasion, even in the form of the proposed amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. DEFEW].

Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senators from Nebraska, and of Missouri, and of South Dakota, and of Kansas, and of Montana, and of Idaho, and of Washington, and of Oregon, and of California, and of Nevada, and of Utah, and of Colorado, and of Wyoming to the fact that the legislatures of each and every one of those States have expressed the will of the people of those States in demanding the passage of this sixteenth amendment to the Constitution; and in view of this expression of the wishes of the people of your several States, I now appeal to you personally on this floor to hold up my hands in favor of an immediate vote without any postponement or delay.

I call the attention of the Senators from Arkansas, from Tennessee, from Texas, from Kentucky, from Louisiana, from North Carolina to the fact that the legislatures of their States have made the same demand as Oklahoma has made upon me as its representative on this floor; and I am responding to the will of the people of my State when I make this demand.

Mr. President, here are the legislatures of twenty-seven States of this Union who have requested this reform, and twenty of them have sent Republican Senators to this body. This is no Democratic movement, nor would I care to demand this important reform merely for political advantage. I want this resolution passed, and I call upon you, the dominant party in this nation, instructed, as you are, by the States of the Union to respond to the will of the people of this country, and more, to respond to the principles of righteousness which ought to prevail and which will prevail when the great people of this country are allowed a free expression of their will in electing Senators by a direct vote of the people.

Mr. President, a majority of the Senators representing the party in power have been instructed in this matter by the people of their States, and I ask a faithful compliance with the expression of the will of the people of this country.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. OWEN. I do.

Mr. HALE. What is the trouble with all the Senators from these different States which have passed these resolutions whose Senators have been here much longer than the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. OWEN. I acknowledge the rebuke, Mr. President.

Mr. HALE. What is the trouble with these Senators that they have not brought this matter up?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I give them an opportunity to do so now and the full liberty to explain themselves.

Mr. HALE. I know; but, Mr. President, those Senators have had this opportunity, some of them for six or seven years, and I wish the Senator would tell us what is the measure of the delinquency of those Senators whom he is prodding now who have for six or seven or eight years, in some cases, not done anything in this matter?

Mr. OWEN. The extent of that delinquency, if any, is what I am trying to find out.

Mr. HALE. I know; but will not the Senator tell the Senate what is the trouble with all those Senators?

Mr. OWEN. I think a vote will tell better than any of my arguments, Mr. President.

Mr. HALE. I think all of us had that feeling when the Senator referred to all these States which years ago had passed such resolutions, and the Senator has just come here and has found out the delinquency of these Senators. I wish he would tell the Senate what is the reason—

Mr. OWEN. I am responding to the instructions of my State, without commenting upon the delinquency of anybody.

Mr. HALE. No; but the Senator has commented upon them here, and he has appealed to these Senators to stand by him in putting this popular measure through. I wish he would state to the body here what he thinks is the reason these Senators have been so lacking in their duty all these years.

Mr. OWEN. Possibly the reason, Mr. President, is because it would require a very extraordinary effort to get any action by the Senate, and I am making an extraordinary verbal effort now. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. OWEN. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Oklahoma understand that a Senator is bound to vote according to the instructions of his legislature?

Mr. OWEN. No, sir.

Mr. President, in Senate Document No. 454 of the present first session of the Sixtieth Congress I have submitted to the Senate for their convenience, so that they may not necessarily overlook it, copies of the resolutions on this subject passed by the various States, and I call the attention of the Senators of the various States enumerated by me to these resolutions, and I ask their cooperation. I do so without any reproach or blame whatever to them. I have a right to appeal to them without being rebuked by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] because of my junior life in this body. The Senator from Maine is not called on to rebuke the Senator from Oklahoma because he did not arrive sooner. [Laughter.] He came as soon as he could. [Laughter and applause in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair must admonish the occupants of the galleries that applause is not allowed under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I call the attention of other Senators to the fact that many of their States, not enumerated, which have not taken formal action upon this question are fully committed to it through the adoption of the principle of nominating primaries or mandatory primaries for the nomination of Senators, as Maryland, Mississippi, and other States.

I shall assume that the Senate of the United States is not a kindergarten and needs no further discussion or any instruction whatever on this particular matter, and I respectfully urge and insist on the immediate compliance of the Senate with the wishes and the desires of the American people in accordance with the expression of that will in the various States.

Now, Mr. President, there are various ways to prevent my having a vote on this resolution. Ingenious amendments can be offered proposing to change representation in the Senate from the constitutional number of two for each State to a basis of population, as is contemplated by the Senator from New York [Mr. DEFEW], but I call his attention to the enthusiastic opposition to that proposition of New Hampshire and Vermont and Rhode Island and of every other small State.

Mr. DEFEW. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. DEFEW. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma misunderstands the amendment which I intend to propose.

Mr. OWEN. I am a mind reader, Mr. President.

Mr. DEFEW. Perhaps Oklahoma has not yet been long enough in the Union to read the mind of New York, although for a new State its mind is very strong and its expression exceedingly vigorous. [Laughter.] But when the Senator permits me to offer this amendment, he will discover that the only object of it is that, if we are to elect Senators by the people, the people shall vote.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I shall not make any mistake, and the American people will make no mistake, in the purpose of this proposed amendment. It is to prevent action. I have no manner of doubt about that, and I express that opinion without any doubt whatever of its real purpose.

Mr. DEPEW. May I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. OWEN. Certainly.

Mr. DEPEW. Is the Senator opposed to qualified citizens of the United States, 21 years of age, voting for United States Senators on a direct ballot?

Mr. OWEN. That is what I am for. I assert that right.

Mr. DEPEW. Then the Senator will be in favor of my amendment.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, this proposition can be defeated in a number of ways; and I have no power to prevent its being defeated if that be the will of the Senate; but I want that will recorded, and I want it recorded in such a manner that the people of this country shall have no doubt of its meaning. Now, Mr. President, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution numbered 91.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, merely for a question of order, I ask if the joint resolution referred to is on the Calendar? Has it been reported from any committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is on the table Calendar.

Mr. LODGE. Yes, Mr. President; but I do not refer to the table Calendar. Has it been reported from any committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not been reported from any committee.

Mr. LODGE. Then I do not see how a motion to proceed to its consideration would be in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, he asks unanimous consent. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. OWEN. No; I do not ask unanimous consent. I move that the Senate proceed to its consideration. I ask for a vote of the Senate on that motion, and call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KEAN. Does the Senator from Oklahoma occupy the floor for any such purpose?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor.

Mr. OWEN. I had the floor, and have it now.

Mr. KEAN. But for no such purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor in his own right, and he has moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution which he has been discussing.

Mr. OWEN. And on that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the joint resolution.

Mr. OWEN. Do I understand the Senate has now proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution has not been by vote of the Senate taken up for consideration.

Mr. DEPEW. I offer a proposed amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his question of order.

Mr. LODGE. I do not see how any joint resolution can be put before the Senate, except by unanimous consent, unless it has received two readings on separate days, as required by the rule.

Mr. OWEN. It has been read on two days, and I had it read this morning.

Mr. LODGE. It has never had a reading and a reference—never.

Mr. OWEN. The joint resolution was read twice on May 21 and laid on the table.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from New York yield to me for a moment?

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from New York has not the floor.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then I will ask if the Senator from Oklahoma will yield to me, in order that I may ask the Senate to pass a bill now?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. OWEN. With pleasure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I now renew my request for the immediate consideration of the bill which I send to the Secretary's desk. It will occasion no discussion, and it will take only a moment for it to be read.

Mr. KEAN. Let us get through with this matter first.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There will be no objection to this bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I must object to the request. The bill has never been considered by the Senate in any way.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well, I will withdraw the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the matter presented by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] is for the Senate to determine.

Mr. OWEN. I call for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, pending that motion I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine moves that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. OWEN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ALDRICH responded to his name.

Mr. GORE. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GORE. Would it be in order to move to amend the motion made by the Senator from Maine by coupling with it an injunction instructing the committee to report back the joint resolution forthwith in favor of its passage, or to report it back forthwith, although I should like to know how long that means?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rule, instructions may be added to a motion to commit.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire will state his question of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. The name of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] was called, and he answered to his name. Therefore the call must proceed.

Mr. ALDRICH. I voted "yea."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not hear the vote. No amendment to the motion would now be in order. The suggested amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] comes too late. The Secretary will resume the calling of the roll.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NIXON] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DEPEW (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILMAN], which I transfer to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BULKELEY] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FOSTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FRAZIER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. FULTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent, and therefore I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DEPEW (when Mr. PLATT's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. PLATT] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. MILTON].

Mr. SCOTT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO]. He is not in the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]. I do not see him in the Chamber. I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], and vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FLINT. I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. RAYNER] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY].

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 20, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Aldrich	Clark, Wyo.	Hale	Richardson
Allison	Crane	Heyburn	Smith, Md.
Bacon	Cullom	Hopkins	Stewart
Baukhead	Depew	Kean	Warner
Brandegee	Dick	Knox	Warren
Briggs	Dillingham	Lodge	Wetmore.

Culbertson	Frye	Martin	Tallaferrro
Curtis	Fulton	Milton	Taylor
Daniel	Gamble	Money	Tillman
Davis	Gary	Nixon

So the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. DEPEW. I offer the amendment I send to the desk, and ask that it be read, printed, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HALE. The whole subject has been referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The Senator, of course, by unanimous consent, can have his amendment read and referred to that committee.

Mr. DEPEW. Let it be referred with the joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. That is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York asks that the amendment proposed by him may be read. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The qualifications of citizens entitled to vote for United States Senators and Representatives in Congress shall be uniform in all the States, and Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation and to provide for the registration of citizens entitled to vote, the conduct of such elections, and the certification of the result.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. DEPEW. I ask that it be referred with the joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PENROSE. I offer an amendment to the joint resolution, which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Article XVI. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, and each State shall have additional Senators in proportion to its population, based upon a proportionate excess of population beyond that of the State having the lowest population in the last decennial census, but no State shall have more than fifteen Senators.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

AFFAIRS IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. HALE, Mr. OWEN, and Mr. NEWLANDS addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. HALE. I have yielded to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 21957) relating to affairs in the Territories. It will require no discussion, and it is necessary that the bill be passed now.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. OWEN. Was the Senator from Oklahoma taken from the floor by the vote?

Mr. GALLINGER. He was.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator and his joint resolution, both.

Mr. HALE. The Senator went with his joint resolution.

Mr. OWEN. He wants to follow the joint resolution—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 21957) relating to affairs in the Territories.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, is the bill before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is being read for the information of the Senate, at the request of the Senator from Indiana, who has asked unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I submit that it is impossible to hear the reading of the bill. It is a long bill and it should be read carefully and should be heard.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a good bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will say that practically all of this bill has been passed. I will simply say, in reply to the Senator from Minnesota about reading the bill carefully, that the bill consists of a number of bills which have heretofore passed the Senate, having been read three times.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Territories with amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection to the consideration of the bill, it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the amendments of the committee will be stated in their order.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "a facsimile of;" and before the word "signature," in line 7, insert the word "written."

Mr. CLAY. I was not aware that unanimous consent had been given to consider the bill. Has unanimous consent been given?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CLAY. Is it a House or a Senate bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is a House bill.

Mr. CLAY. From what committee does it come?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was reported from the Committee on Territories.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], who is now absent from the Senate, says the bill has passed the Senate in the form of various bills.

Mr. CLAY. It contains a good many different propositions.

Mr. ALDRICH. They have all been considered by the committee, I think.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] is a member of the committee, I believe, from which the bill came. Is that correct?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. Was the bill unanimously agreed to by the committee?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It was.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CLAY. I believe I will let it go through.

Mr. KEAN. A part of it was agreed to by the committee. The part relating to Hawaii was not agreed to by the Committee on Territories.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Then I will modify my statement.

Mr. CLAY. May I ask the Senator from New Jersey what was the feature disagreed to?

Mr. KEAN. Several amendments were proposed to the bill in committee and the Secretary was beginning to report the committee amendments. Some of them are very proper. Others I do not think are so proper.

Mr. CLAY. Where everyone seems to be agreed about it, although it is a right serious matter to undertake legislation in the closing days of the session—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Indiana was called from the Chamber unexpectedly, and in his absence I hope the Senator from Georgia will not object to its present consideration.

Mr. CLAY. The most dangerous legislation we ever had in this country was passed in the last days of a session of Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARTER. Is any member of the committee prepared to give explanations concerning the bill? I heard that the Senator in charge of it left the Chamber.

Mr. ALDRICH. He was obliged to leave.

Mr. CARTER. I should like some explanation.

Mr. HALE. Of course, if the Senator objects, that is the end of it.

Mr. CARTER. I do not wish to be understood as objecting, but I should like to inquire what was the purpose of the committee in repealing section 1955 of the Revised Statutes, which authorizes the President of the United States to prohibit the importation of firearms into the District of Alaska. That section is of some use, I assume, so far as the Indian tribes are concerned, and there should be some restriction in that behalf permitted. As I understand it, that section is entirely repealed.

I observe also that on page 11 a portion of the act relating to the civil government for Alaska, approved in 1884, is likewise repealed, after the word "provided," in section 14. I do not find any word "provided" in section 14. Consequently the reference seems to be inaccurate.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Indiana, in charge of the bill, was called away, stating that there would be no objection to the details of the bill, and it was understood when the Senate took it up. Of course if there are real objections to the bill and Senators interpose those objections, it can not be passed; but otherwise I think in good faith we are bound to proceed with the consideration of the bill until it is disposed of.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no desire to object to the bill, but I should like some explanation of the paragraph on page 5, where the word "white" is used before the words "male and female citizens over the age of 21 years," in reference to consent to the sale of intoxicating liquor.

Mr. HALE. Perhaps the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] can explain that. He is a member of the committee.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] is also a member of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. So is the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. HALE. And the Senator from Minnesota also.

Mr. NELSON. The chairman of the committee, after calling up the bill, left the Chamber. I supposed he would take charge of the bill, and for that reason I am not prepared to explain it.

Mr. HALE. The bill is in the hands of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to its consideration?

Mr. KEAN. I am a member of the Committee on Territories. I had no idea that the bill repealed any of the statutes the Senator from Montana referred to, and I do not think the committee ever had it called to their attention. If that is the case—

Mr. CARTER. On further examination I find that the portion which repeals the act of 1884 repeals merely the proviso in the act which prohibited the importation of intoxicating liquors into the district. That, of course, will be in conflict with the terms of this bill, which seems to provide a local-option law in lieu of a prohibitory law. Section 1955, however, of the Revised Statutes permits the President to prohibit the importation of firearms into Alaska. I suppose that by virtue of that authority it would permit him to prescribe the conditions under which such arms might be taken into the country.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CARTER. I understand it to have always been a useful provision of law to permit some officer to prevent the passage of firearms, without restriction, into the Indian country. Whether it is wise to repeal that provision entirely, it being the only provision of the kind applicable to Alaska, is a question which calls for the deliberate judgment of the Senate. I do not wish to object to the bill. I merely call attention to that feature.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to call attention to this feature of the bill. I do not want to object to it, but it ought to be explained.

Mr. HALE. It is simply a question, after the statement which has been made of the occasion of the Senator from Indiana leaving the Chamber, whether any Senator objects to the consideration of the measure. If objection is made it will go over.

Mr. CLAY. I do not object to it, but I want to say—

Mr. HALE. The Senator may as well understand that there is nobody here who can explain it.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine, in view of the suggestions that have been made, whether he thinks it is advisable to press the bill to final consideration at this time?

Mr. HALE. That is for other Senators to determine. Any Senator by objecting can carry it over.

Mr. CURTIS. In order to save time I should like to object to the bill.

Mr. HALE. That ends it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I want to make a statement as to the order of business, in which every Senator is interested. I am told that the conference committee on the public buildings bill has agreed to a final report. If that be so, the report can and will be presented early this evening.

Mr. WARREN. It will probably be here inside of fifteen minutes.

Mr. HALE. That is all the better. If that committee, and what the Senator says assures me of my statement, has finally agreed, the report can be submitted to this body either now or somewhat later in the evening. The great sundry civil appropriation bill has not been finally agreed to in conference. I think I may say that if the conference report on the public buildings bill is agreed to, with provisions which I am told are in it, the Senator from Iowa will be able later to report finally the sundry civil bill from the conference.

Mr. WARREN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The conferees on the Military Academy bill are in full agreement and have just started to make their report, which, perhaps, would not come to-night, but it could come late to-night or early Monday morning.

Mr. HALE. I do not apprehend any difficulty with those bills. The reports of the conference committees will be agreed to in time. After that the bill yet to be disposed of is the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator permit me to correct his statement?

Mr. ALDRICH. There is the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. I am not speaking of all the bills in conference.

Mr. CLAY. I thought the Senator was referring to all pending between the two Houses.

Mr. HALE. When I come a little later to my proposition all those will be cared for. As to the deficiency bill, I may say there is an amendment in it adopted by the Senate giving entire control as to the appropriations to be made for the rest of the year for public buildings and grounds. The proposition which has been suggested from the House, and I think a wise and good one, is that the schedule and list of appropriations for the rest of the year under the public buildings bill, which has been agreed to, shall be incorporated in the deficiency appropriation bill under the amendment already put upon it by the Senate. That disposes of all these cases.

I wish Senators would bear in mind that the Committee on Appropriations in dealing with all these bills has spent days and Sundays and has not been obliged to ask the Senate what it has always done heretofore at the end of a session, to meet at night or at 11 o'clock. Neither of these things, under the course that the committee has taken, has been resorted to, nor has there been any need to have it resorted to. I have never known another instance in my experience where, in the last week, we have not met every day at 11 o'clock and that we have not had more or less night sessions.

If we have an evening session to-night, I believe this will be possible; to pass the public buildings bill, perhaps, before we take a recess; to pass the sundry civil appropriation bill and send it to the clerks for careful enrollment, upon which they must have twenty-four hours at least; to pass the deficiency appropriation bill before 9 o'clock, with the schedule and list of appropriations under the public buildings bill needed for the ensuing year.

Then, Mr. President, I think the Senate will be glad to agree unanimously to give the clerks an opportunity to enroll these bills, and the Senate may take a recess or adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock Monday, with an agreement that nothing but routine business, business between the two Houses and conference reports, shall be considered on Monday, and I will be willing to risk my reputation as a guesser that we could adjourn before 2 o'clock on Monday.

Now, I do not think that an unreasonable programme. I do not think it unreasonable to believe that it can be carried out. But, first, if the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is ready to report, we can take their report before we take a recess, and after that we can take a recess, and that will be the only evening session that will be asked for the first session of this Congress.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. HALE. With pleasure.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that there is some important executive business that ought to be transacted, and we might now go into executive session and then come out again and take up these matters.

Mr. HALE. I think that is a very good suggestion.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR PROCTOR.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that on Saturday, December 12 next, after the conclusion of the morning business, I will present resolutions of respect to the memory of REDFIELD PROCTOR, late a Senator from Vermont in this body, and ask that the other business of the Senate be laid aside to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his character and distinguished public service.

PARLIAMENTARY PRACTICE OF SENATE.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Chief Clerk be authorized to prepare a digest of the precedents and decisions on points of order in the parliamentary practice of the Senate, with a full index, and that 1,000 copies be printed and bound for the use of the Senate.

ELECTION OF SENATORS.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that 20,000 copies of Senate Document No. 406, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session; Senate Document No. 323, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, and Senate Document No. 232, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, being papers relating to the election of Senators by direct vote of the people and containing the speech of Hon. George F. Hoar, of Massachusetts, in the Senate of the United States, Thursday and Friday, April 6 and 7, 1903, be printed as one document, to be entitled "Papers Relating to the Election of Senators by Direct Vote of the People."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GORE. In that connection I ask that a speech delivered on March 23, 1897, by the Senator from Indiana, Mr. Turple, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of Senators by the votes of the qualified electors of the States, together with Senate Document No. 454, Sixtieth Congress, first session, being a memorial presented by my colleague [Mr. OWEN] relative to amending the Constitution of the United States, be printed as a document, and that 20,000 extra copies be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INLAND WATERWAYS COMMISSION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Maine to yield to me for a few moments to make a statement regarding House bill 21899, relating to the inland waterways. I have been for a week past in constant attendance in the Senate with a view to securing consideration of this bill. I have several times asked for unanimous consent for its consideration, but objection has been made. At one time I moved consideration, but a conference report on the public buildings bill was pressing for consideration, and many Senators who were favorable to the waterways bill voted against its consideration at that time lest it should postpone agreement on the public buildings bill. It has since been my constant purpose to move the Senate to immediately consider it, but conference and other privileged reports have prevented.

Mr. HALE. I can not yield to the Senator to make that motion now.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator yield to me for a statement?

Mr. HALE. Yes; but I do not yield for any motion, because to carry out the real business before the Senate we have to go on with the appropriation bills. I yield to the Senator for a statement.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, it is my purpose at as early a time as possible to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 21899, providing for the appointment of an Inland Waterways Commission.

Mr. HALE. I did not yield for the Senator to make any motion.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand that. I understand that the Senator now simply yields to me for a statement, and I am simply stating what my purpose is.

I do not propose now to make a motion for the consideration of the bill. I wish, however, as there is some confusion in the minds of Senators regarding these various bills relating to waterways, to make a statement in reference to this particular bill, and it will involve a short history of the course of legislation upon this subject.

I will state, in the first place, that last spring a year ago the President, yielding to the request of numerous commercial organizations throughout the country, determined to appoint an Inland Waterways Commission, consisting of nine members, with a view to preparing a comprehensive plan for the development of the waterways of the country. In his letter to those whom he requested to serve upon the Commission he stated the great importance of the question, the pressing nature of the demand for legislation, and the desirability of having a broad and comprehensive plan upon this subject.

That Commission, of which I am a member, entered upon the discharge of its duties a year ago, and during the last summer visited every section of the country, either in entirety or through the action of part of its members. Last fall it met for the purpose of deliberating upon this question, with a view to making a recommendation. Before they had proceeded far in their deliberations I introduced in the Senate a bill, Senate bill No. 500, which represented simply my individual views upon this subject, and I am inclined to think that many Senators are of the opinion that that is the bill which I am now urging for the consideration of the Senate. That bill presented a full and comprehensive plan and proposed to provide a fund of $50,000,000.

It gave the Commission ample powers, not only for the examination and survey of all various projects, but also for entering upon the projects. It provided for the coordination of the various scientific services of the United States relating to waterways and also provided for cooperation with the States, municipalities, corporations, and individuals.

That bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce and was by it referred to a subcommittee, and by that subcommittee referred to the Secretary of War for his opinion and to the Inland Waterways Commission for its opinion, and both the Secretary of War and the Inland Waterways Commission approved of the bill in its main features.

The letters of the Secretary of War and the Inland Waterways Commission were as follows, the essential part being quoted:

COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE, UNITED STATES SENATE—LETTERS OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR AND CHAIRMAN OF INLAND WATERWAYS COMMISSION RELATIVE TO S. 500.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 17, 1908.

Respectfully returned to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce, inviting attention to specific suggestions as follows:

1. Certain provisions of this bill (S. 500, 60th Cong., 1st sess.) are in accord with the suggestion of an Inland Waterways Commission appointed by the President on March 14, 1907, of a plan for obtaining information concerning our waterways as related to the general welfare. The policies and general plans of this Commission were submitted to the President on February 3 last in the form of a preliminary report, which report was transmitted to the Congress on February 26 with a message approving the recommendations.

2. The bill carries the following provisions which render it worthy of careful attention.

(a) It provides for coordination between navigation and other uses of the waters in connection with their improvement for the promotion of commerce among the States. This provision is fully explained in the preliminary report of the Waterways Commission. It is recognized by the War Department as wise and necessary.

(b) The bill provides for cooperation with States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals. This provision seems to be based on the constantly increasing utilization of the streams, not only for navigation, but for other purposes, which has accompanied extension of settlement and increase of population. With sparse settlement, largely confined along waterways, there was little overlapping or conflict of interests connected with the running waters; but with the present comparatively dense population not only all uses of the streams but all conflicting interests must be brought into harmony in order that the waterways may be made generally beneficial. This can not be done without careful regard for the interests of all the people and for all the lawful means that may be employed to protect them. The aim appears to be that of promoting union of interest through mutually beneficial cooperation, and thus meeting the requirements of our growing population and increasing industries. This feature is recognized by the War Department as highly desirable.

(c) The bill provides for correlating the existing agencies in the Departments of War, Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce and Labor through certain powers vested in the President. The need for some such plan is sufficiently shown by the fact that while this country is better endowed with waterways than any other, our streams are less used for navigation and other public purposes than those of other countries. Since this provision touches duties placed on the War Department by law, it has received careful consideration. It does not appear that the measure would interfere with the functions of the War Department, or with the continuation and extension of the engineering work now performed there, but it is believed that the provision for administration would tend to promote the general welfare. Accordingly, this feature meets the approbation of the War Department.

(d) The bill provides for the utilization and control of water power available in navigable and source streams developed by works for improving navigation. Under statutory provisions for the granting of rights connected with navigable streams, which have been often repeated and sustained by the courts, the War Department has exercised the power to regulate the use of the water of navigable streams for power purposes developed incidentally by improvements intended to promote navigation. It is the policy of the Department to extend such control, and thereby protect the public interests by limitation of the term and manner of use of leases, by reasonable charges for the benefits conferred, and by any other means found requisite from time to time. A continuation of such control is essential to the policy of coordination and cooperation made necessary by the conditions that have arisen with the growth of population and increase of industries. Accordingly this feature of the measure is regarded as in accordance both with established custom and with current needs.

(e) The bill provides also for the initiation of projects by a board of experts. These provisions affect the work of the War Department and have had careful consideration. Suitable provisions for expert initiation and prompt execution are essential to the proper development of any system of river improvement. The chief defect in the methods hitherto pursued lies in the absence of executive authority for originating comprehensive plans covering the country or natural divisions thereof.

The creation of an Inland Waterways Commission for the purpose of initiating plans for the improvement of waterways seems to me a more effective way of a general plan for the improvement of all the waterways in the country than under the present provisions of law. This would not dispense with the admirable machinery furnished by the War Department for the improvement of waterways when the plan has been determined upon and is to be executed. But it supplies what does not exist in the law now—a tribunal other than Congress charged with the duty of originating and developing a satisfactory plan.

(f) The present bill confers very great powers upon the Commission to be appointed, because it provides the money with which this Commission may execute the plans which it adopts. How far, if at all, this great power should be limited this Department expresses no opinion.

(g) In connection with the method of administration provided for the bill makes proper provision for guarding expenditures and reporting operations.

3. In its present form the bill might be construed to curtail indirectly certain functions of the War Department, which is now charged with large discretion in waterway affairs. Possible ambiguity on this point should be removed. The present arrangement began with the creation of the War Department, when the Federal Government was organized in 1789. It was not changed when the Navy Department was instituted nine years later nor when the civilian Department of the Interior was established in 1849; and the records pertaining to the administration of the waterways are kept in the War Department in the custody of the Chief of Engineers of the Army. Under the same long-standing arrangement it is the policy of the War Department to maintain a trained body of military engineers with a view to the national defense, and to keep these engineers in training in time of peace by detail to civil duty allied to their professional duty in time of war or military preparation; and it was carrying out this policy that the functions of the War Department pertaining to waterways have been more and more largely entrusted to the engineers of the Army during the one hundred and ten years since the Army and Navy were separated in distinct Departments. This policy has long been sustained by the Congress, although the military engineers have been prohibited from initiating projects or originating plans for meeting the growing needs of commerce. It is desirable to continue the policy of keeping the military engineers in training and at the same time rendering their skilled service available in work on waterways, although it is not necessary to vest them with the power of initiative, which they have not exercised in the past and which is, perhaps, inconsistent with their primary duty in connection with the military establishment of which they form a part. A provision that the Chief of Engineers of the Army shall be a member of the Commission proposed to be created, and a further provision specifically covering the detail of military engineers to the service of the Commission whenever such detail shall be consistent with their military duties, would remove any possible ambiguity and would be in accord with the custom and policy of the War Department.

4. I respectfully suggest certain changes in the form of the bill to meet constitutional and legal objections which have occurred to me. These relate to (a) the general authority of Congress over inland waterways in connection with navigation; (b) the specific authority over collateral works for purposes incidental to the improvement of navigation; (c) the reservation to the Government of the control over such collateral works now conferred upon it by law.

WM. H. TAFT,
Secretary of War.

UNITED STATES INLAND WATERWAYS COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., April 20, 1908.

The COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE,
United States Senate:

The bill providing for the appointment of an Inland Waterways Commission, and for other purposes (S. 500, 60th Cong., 1st sess.), referred to the Commission on April 18, was taken under consideration at a session of the Commission on that date, and conclusions were reached as follows:

"1. Several of the leading provisions of the bill are in accord with the recommendations of the Commission in a report submitted on February 3 last and transmitted to the Congress by the President on February 26. Among these are (a) the provision for coordination of navigation with related uses of the waters; (b) the provision for cooperation between the Federal Government, States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals; (c) the provision for correlating existing agencies in the Departments of War, Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce and Labor in such manner as to secure effective administration; and (d) the provisions looking toward the control of running waters in such manner as to protect and promote navigation. In so far as these provisions are concerned, the bill has the unqualified approbation of the Commission.

"2. Another leading feature of the bill is the provision for a waterway fund. This is consistent with the recommendation of the Commission 'that the Congress be asked to make suitable provision for improving the waterways of the United States at a rate commensurate with the needs of the people as determined by competent authority'; yet at this time, as at the time of preparing and submitting the report, the Commission is of opinion that the specific mode of providing means for improving and promoting navigation should be left to the wisdom of the Congress.

"3. The general purpose of the bill is in harmony with the comprehensive plan for improving and developing the waterways of the country framed by the Commission and approved by the President in his message of February 26 last."

Respectfully submitted.

THEODORE E. BURTON, Chairman.

W J MCGEE, Secretary.

UNITED STATES INLAND WATERWAYS COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., April 21, 1908.

The COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE,
United States Senate:

In expressing the opinion of the Inland Waterways Commission concerning the Newlands bill (S. 500, 60th Cong., 1st sess.) yesterday the fact was inadvertently overlooked that Commissioner Alexander Mackenzie, brigadier-general, United States Army, Chief of Engineers, dissents from the views of the other Commissioners, both on general policy and on specific provision, his opinion being expressed in a minority report appended as a supplement to the preliminary report of the Commission submitted to the President on February 3 and transmitted to the Congress with the Executive approval on February 26.

Respectfully submitted.

THEODORE E. BURTON, Chairman.

W J MCGEE, Secretary.

The portion of the report of the Inland Waterways Commission (60th Cong., 1st sess., S. Doc. 325) referred to in the above letter of the Commission is as follows:

1. We recommend that the Congress be asked to authorize the coordination and proper development of existing public services connected with waterways; and we suggest that such enactment might provide that the President of the United States be authorized, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint and organize a National Waterways Commission to bring into coordination the Corps of Engineers of the Army, the Bureau of Soils, the Forest Service, the Bureau of Corporations, the Reclamation Service, and other branches of the public service in so far as their work relates to inland waterways, and that he be authorized to make such details and require such duties from these branches of the public service in connection with navigable and source streams as are not inconsistent with law; the said Commission to continue the investigation of all questions relating to the development and improvement and utilization of the inland waterways of the country and the conservation of its natural resources related thereto, and to consider and coordinate therewith all matters of irrigation, swamp and overflow land reclamation, clarification, and purification of streams, prevention of soil waste, utilization of water power, preservation and extension of forests, regulation of flow and control of floods, transfer facilities and sites and the regulation and control thereof, and the relations between waterways and railways; and that the Commission be empowered to frame and recommend plans for developing the waterways and utilizing the waters, and as authorized by Congress to carry out the same, through established agencies when such are available, in cooperation with States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals, in such manner as to secure an equitable distribution of costs and benefits.

The dissenting part of General Mackenzie's supplementary report is as follows:

5. I can not, however, agree with the recommendation for the establishment at this time of a permanent inland-waterways commission, vested with the authority indicated, in addition to or as a substitute for the existing Commission. Until this Commission shall have fully carried out the duties allotted to it and prepared a comprehensive plan for the improvement and control of the river systems of the United States, or at least until such work is more advanced and results more thoroughly considered, I believe a recommendation for so radical a departure in the methods of planning and executing the improvement of waterways as that proposed is at least premature.

6. Moreover, it is my belief that further investigation will demonstrate that when this Commission shall have completed its labors all necessary cooperation can be secured, and all work proposed for the permanent commission can be equally well provided for by the existing agencies of the Government, and that through such agencies, without the interposition of a permanent commission, improvement of waterways and attention to allied subjects will be more promptly accomplished. While fully appreciating the importance of having general principles and schemes considered and recommended by a commission, as is now being done and as will continue to be done, I have grave fear that the scheme of operations recommended in connection with the proposed permanent commission would be found to be impracticable.

A. MACKENZIE,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

My individual supplementary report is as follows:

SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT OF COMMISSIONER SENATOR FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

I concur in the report of the Commission, but desire to emphasize my belief that it is of the highest importance that in dealing with subjects relating to the respective powers, rights, and interests of the nation, States, municipalities, corporations, and individuals, large powers and a comparatively free hand should be given to an administrative body of experts in the full development of projects, lest the complexity of the transactions, the time necessary to secure Congressional approval, and difference of view as to purpose or method, may result in indecision and delay, the worst enemies of effective development.

An ample fund should be provided, to be reinforced from time to time either by legislative appropriation or by bond issue, and the administrative board or commission should be given the power, not only to investigate projects, but also, when determined to be feasible, to enter, with the approval of the President, upon their immediate execution; but the power should be limited so as to prevent such administrative body from entering into any contract unless there are sufficient unappropriated moneys in the fund to meet the cost thereof.

Unless some method of construction and development, insuring prompt decision and execution and continuous and consecutive work by a body of experts is adopted, I fear that the best of projects may be wrecked in the shoals and quicksands of legislation.

FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

The committee print of the bill, with the amendments suggested by Secretary Taft in italics, is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a special fund shall be established in the Treasury, to be known as the inland waterway fund, to be used in the examination and survey for and the development of the navigable inland waterways of the United States for the purpose of regulating, improving, and protecting interstate and foreign commerce; and the sum of $50,000,000 is hereby reserved, set aside, and appropriated as such fund.

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to cause to be made examinations and surveys for the development of the navigable inland waterways of the country, including the Great Lakes, the Mississippi River and its tributaries, the navigable rivers of the Gulf of Mexico and their tributaries, the navigable rivers of the Atlantic coast and their tributaries, the navigable rivers of the Pacific coast and their tributaries, and for the connection of such rivers with each other, wherever practicable and desirable, by connecting canals and by coastal canals, with a view to the promotion of transportation between such rivers by vessels of a standard draft; and to investigate all questions relating to the development and improvement of the inland waterways of the country, with a view to the promotion of interstate and foreign commerce; in connection therewith and in aid thereof to consider and coordinate the questions of irrigation, swamp-land reclamation, clarification of streams, utilization of water power, prevention of soil waste, protection of forests, regulation of flow, control of floods, transfer facilities and sites and the control thereof, for the better regulation and protection of interstate and foreign commerce, and such other questions regarding waterways as are related to the development of rivers, lakes, and canals for the purposes of commerce.

SEC. 3. That in order to enable the President to make such examinations, surveys, and investigations, and to construct the works provided for by this act, he is authorized to appoint an Inland Waterway Commission, to be composed of _____ members, and to bring in coordination therewith the Corps of Engineers of the Army, the Bureau of Soils, the Forest Service, the Bureau of Corporations, the Reclamation Service, and other branches of the public service related to waterways, and to appoint such experts and other persons and create such board or boards in connection therewith as the work may require, and to fix the salaries, in addition to any other compensation received from the United States, of all commissioners, experts, and other persons employed under this act until the same have been fixed by Congress, the official salary of any official appointed or employed under this act to be deducted from the amount of salary or compensation fixed under the terms of this act.

SEC. 4. That such Commission shall make to the President annually, and at such other periods as may be required either by law or by the order of the President, full and complete reports of all their acts and doings and of all the moneys received and expended in the construction of works and in the performance of their duties in connection therewith, which reports shall be by the President transmitted to Congress; and such Commission shall furthermore give to either House of Congress such information as may at any time be required either by act of Congress or by order of either House of Congress.

The President shall cause to be leased or otherwise provided for the use of the Commissioners and other employees under this act such offices in the District of Columbia and elsewhere as may, with the suitable equipment of the same, be necessary and proper in his discretion for the proper discharge of their duties.

SEC. 5. That if after such examination, survey, and estimate, such Commission shall determine that any project for the improvement or construction of an inland waterway or coastal waterway is practicable and desirable for the better regulation, protection, and development of interstate and foreign commerce, it may, with the approval of the President and through the appropriate service, construct or execute, or cause to be let, contracts for the construction or execution of the same, in such portions or sections as it may be practicable to construct and execute as parts of the whole project: Provided, That the necessary moneys therefor are available in the inland waterway fund.

SEC. 6. That such projects may include such collateral works for the irrigation of arid lands, for the reclamation of swamp lands, for the conservation or replacement of forests, for the clarification of streams, and for the utilization of water power as may be deemed advisable in aid of and in connection with the development of a channel for navigation or as aiding in a compensatory way in the diminution of the cost of such project.

SEC. 7. That such Commission is authorized, with the approval of the President, and under such regulations and conditions as he may prescribe for the protection and future interests of the Government and people of the United States, to enter into cooperation with States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals in such collateral works, and to make arrangements for the proportionate payment of the cost thereof out of the inland waterway fund and by the States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals benefited thereby, in such manner as to secure an equitable distribution of the costs and benefits: Provided, That the cost of such collateral works to be paid by the United States shall be paid, if practicable, out of funds provided therefor by Congress, but if sufficient provision therefor is not specially made by Congress, such Commission is authorized to pay for the same out of the inland waterway fund, but the total payments made on account of such collateral works from such inland waterway fund shall not exceed 10 per cent thereof, and provision shall be made, as far as practicable, for the reimbursement to such fund of such payments by the States, municipalities, corporations, or individuals benefited thereby: And provided also, That the inland waterways developed shall remain free for all the uses of navigation.

SEC. 8. That such Commission shall make, with the approval of the President, rules and regulations governing the cooperation and compensation to the fund, wherever practicable, by the conveyance of reclamation rights, the lease of water power, and such other means as may be beneficial to the United States and the several States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals entering into such cooperation.

SEC. 9. That in carrying out the provisions of this act regard must be had, as far as practicable, to the equitable apportionment and contemporaneous execution of the projects contemplated under this act among the several waterway systems of the country.

SEC. 10. That the President is authorized, whenever the inland waterway fund is reduced below $20,000,000, to make up the deficiency in such fund by the issue and sale of bonds in such amount and for such time as he shall deem advisable, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding _____ per cent per annum; but the amount of bonds issued shall not at any time exceed the difference between the cash on hand in such fund and $50,000,000.

The bill was then considered by the subcommittee, which inserted in addition to the amendments suggested by Secretary Taft certain amendments of its own, and then reported the same favorably to the full committee. The bill as reported by the subcommittee, with the amendments in italics, is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a special fund shall be established in the Treasury, to be known as the inland waterway fund, to be used in the examination, survey, and development of the navigable inland waterways of the United States for the purpose of regulating, improving, and protecting interstate and foreign commerce; and the sum of ten million dollars is hereby reserved, set aside, and appropriated as such fund.

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to cause to be made examinations and surveys for the development of the navigable inland waterways of the United States, including the Great Lakes, the Mississippi River and its tributaries, the navigable rivers, bays, and sounds of the Gulf of Mexico and their tributaries, the navigable rivers, bays, and sounds of the Atlantic Coast and their tributaries, the navigable rivers, bays, and sounds of the Pacific coast and their tributaries, and for the connection of such rivers, lakes, bays, and sounds with each other, wherever practicable and desirable, by connecting canals and by coastal canals, with a view to the promotion of transportation between such waterways by vessels of a standard draft; and to investigate all questions relating to the development and improvement of the inland waterways of the United States, with a view to the promotion of interstate and foreign commerce; in connection therewith and in aid thereof to consider and coordinate the questions of irrigation, swamp-land reclamation, clarification of streams, utilization of water power, prevention of soil waste, protection of forests, regulation of flow, control of floods, transfer facilities, and sites and the control thereof, for the better regulation and protection of interstate and foreign commerce, and such other questions regarding waterways as are related to the development of rivers, lakes, and canals for the purposes of commerce and navigation.

SEC. 3. That in order to enable the President to make such examinations, surveys, and investigations, and to construct the works provided for by this act, he is authorized to appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate, an Inland Waterway Commission, to be composed of nine members, and to bring in coordination therewith the Corps of Engineers of the Army, the Bureau of Soils, the Forest Service, the Bureau of Corporations, the Reclamation Service, and other branches of the public service related to waterways, and to appoint such experts and other persons and create such board or boards in connection therewith as the work may require, and to fix the salaries, in addition to any other compensation received from the United States, of all commissioners, experts, and other persons employed under this act until the same have been fixed by Congress, the official salary of any official appointed or employed under this act to be deducted from the amount of salary or compensation fixed under the terms of this act. The chief of the Corps of Engineers of the Army shall be a member of such Commission, and the President is authorized to detail military engineers to the service of the Commission whenever such detail shall be consistent with their military duties.

SEC. 4. That such Commission shall make to the President annually, and at such other periods as may be required either by law or by the order of the President, full and complete reports of all their acts and doings and of all the moneys received and expended in the construction of works and in the performance of their duties in connection therewith, which reports shall be by the President transmitted to Congress; and such Commission shall furthermore give to either House of Congress such information as may at any time be required either by act of Congress or by order of either House of Congress.

The President shall cause to be leased or otherwise provided for the use of the commissioners and other employees under this act such offices in the District of Columbia and elsewhere as may, with the suitable equipment of the same, be necessary and proper in his discretion for the proper discharge of their duties.

SEC. 5. That if after such examination, survey, and estimate, such Commission shall determine that any project for the improvement or construction of an inland waterway or coastal waterway is practicable and desirable for the better regulation, protection, and development of interstate and foreign commerce, it may, when authorized by Congress, construct or execute, or cause to be let, contracts for the construction or execution of the same, in such portions or sections as it may be practicable to construct and execute as parts of the whole project: Provided, That the necessary moneys therefor are available in the inland waterway fund, or are otherwise appropriated by Congress.

SEC. 6. That such projects may include such collateral works for the irrigation of arid lands, for the reclamation of swamp lands, for the conservation or replacement of forests, for the clarification of streams, and for the utilization of water power as are in aid of navigation.

SEC. 7. That such Commission is authorized, with the approval of the President, and under such regulations and conditions as he may prescribe for the protection and future interests of the Government and people of the United States, to enter into cooperation with States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals in such collateral works as will aid in improving the navigability of the rivers and other waterways of the United States, and to make arrangements for the proportionate payment of the cost thereof out of the inland waterway fund and by the States, municipalities, communities, corporations and individuals benefited thereby, in such manner as to secure an equitable distribution of the costs and benefits: Provided, That the cost of such collateral works to be paid by the United States shall be paid, if practicable, out of funds provided therefor by Congress, but if sufficient provision therefor is not specially made by Congress, such Commission is authorized to pay for the same out of the inland waterway fund, but the total payments made on account of such collateral works from such inland waterway fund shall not exceed 10 per cent thereof, and provision shall be made, as far as practicable, for the reimbursement to such fund of such payments by the States, municipalities, corporations, or individuals benefited thereby.

polities, communities, corporations, or individuals benefited thereby: And provided also, That the inland waterways developed shall remain free for all the uses of navigation.

Sec. 8. That in carrying out the provisions of this act regard must be had, as far as practicable, to the equitable apportionment and contemporaneous execution of the projects contemplated under this act among the several waterway systems of the United States.

Sec. 9. That the President is authorized, whenever the inland waterway fund is reduced below five million dollars, to make up the deficiency in such fund by the issue and sale of bonds bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 2 per cent per annum, payable semiannually and running for a period not exceeding thirty years.

This bill is now under consideration by the full committee.

Realizing, however, that there was not time for action at this session upon this bill, which presented a full and comprehensive plan, I introduced a lesser bill, Senate bill 7112, which simply provides for the continuance of the commission appointed by the President and for a small appropriation of $20,000 for the expenses of the commission. That bill was amended by the Senate Committee on Commerce and reported favorably. The bill, with the amendments in italics, is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint an Inland Waterways Commission of not exceeding nine Commissioners, and to organize the same for the investigation of all questions relating to the development and improvement and utilization of the waterways of the United States with a view to navigation and the promotion of commerce among the States.

Sec. 2. That such Commission shall make to the President annually, and at such other periods as may be required either by law or by order of the President, full and complete reports of all their acts and doings, which reports shall be by the President transmitted to the Congress.

Sec. 3. That the President shall cause to be provided for the use of such Commission and its employees under this act such offices in the District of Columbia and elsewhere and such equipment as may be necessary for the proper discharge of its duties.

Sec. 4. That to carry out the purposes of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of the funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000, to be expended under the direction of the President, but no part of said appropriation shall be paid for salaries of Commissioners, except a salary of not more than $3,000 per annum for the secretary of the Commission.

Before this bill could be acted upon by the Senate, the House passed a bill, H. R. 21890, and upon its reference to the Senate Committee on Commerce I moved its substitution for Senate bill 7112 and a favorable report, but the committee preferred to amend it by the substitution of Senate bill 7112, and thus amended reported it favorably to the Senate. As amended it reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint an Inland Waterways Commission of not exceeding nine Commissioners, and to organize the same for the investigation of all questions relating to the development and improvement and utilization of the waterways of the United States with a view to navigation and the promotion of commerce among the States.

Sec. 2. That such Commission shall make to the President annually, and at such other periods as may be required either by law or by order of the President, full and complete reports of all their acts and doings, which reports shall be by the President transmitted to the Congress.

Sec. 3. That the President shall cause to be provided for the use of such Commission and its employees under this act such offices in the District of Columbia and elsewhere and such equipment as may be necessary for the proper discharge of its duties.

Sec. 4. That to carry out the purposes of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of the funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000, to be expended under the direction of the President, but no part of said appropriation shall be paid for salaries of Commissioners, except a salary of not more than $3,000 per annum for the secretary of the Commission.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I think I shall have to ask for the regular order.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will be through in a few moments. I shall ask to embody in my remarks extracts from the various documents to which I have referred. Now, I come to a statement regarding Senate bill 7112.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to me to make a report from a conference committee?

Mr. HALE. I have the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia to make a conference report.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state to the Senator from West Virginia that I will be through in about three minutes, and it will be a great convenience to me if he will allow me to finish this statement, so that it may be consecutive.

Mr. SCOTT. Very well.

Mr. HALE. I will yield to the Senator from Nevada for a few moments, but I can not yield to anybody else, Mr. President.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senate committee substituted Senate bill 7112 for the one of the House, and that bill, therefore, simply provides not for the continuance of an existing commission, but for the appointment by the President of a commission of nine and for expenses not exceeding $20,000.

Now, I wish to state to the Senate that at the very next session of Congress, which will be a short session, demands will be made upon Congress for the immediate authorization of projects of great importance, involving the expenditure of large sums of money; and it is of the highest importance that experts should frame a comprehensive plan for the execution of these projects. The President simply wishes this plan in order that, under his constitutional power, he may intelligently make a recommendation to Congress, and he asks information and aid in the discharge of that duty.

The President is a part of the law-making power through the power of recommendation and the power of veto, and that the Senate will certainly not deny to him the information which the Senate itself seeks through committees, experts, and other forms of procedure with reference to legislation which it proposes to enact. The mere purpose of this bill is to give the President the aid of the information of experts and to provide for moderate expenses, so that he can recommend to Congress a measure upon which Congress shall pass its judgment. I submit that this will vastly expedite the work of legislation in the future. The views of the President on this subject are given in his message to Congress (S. Doc. No. 325), dated February 26, 1908, transmitting to Congress the preliminary report of the Inland Waterways Commission.

The Commission was appointed to obtain information concerning our waterways as related to the general welfare. Much work was done, but more remains to be done before a plan for their development can be prepared in detail. We need additional information on the flow of our streams, the condition of channels, the amount of cost of water traffic, the requirements for terminals, the area in each watershed which should be kept under forest, and the means of preventing soil waste and the consequent damage to our rivers. But it is neither necessary nor desirable to postpone the beginning of the work until all the facts are obtained. We have suffered heavily in the past from the lack of adequate transportation facilities, and unless a beginning is made promptly we shall suffer still more heavily in the future.

Being without funds or an expert staff, the Commission has confined itself to principles affecting the whole problem and the entire country. Its report is a plea, in the light of actual facts, for simplicity and directness in dealing with the great problem of our inland waterways in the interest of the people. It submits no specific plans or recommendations concerning even the most important projects. The first of these of course concerns the Mississippi and its tributaries, whose commercial development will directly affect half our people. The Mississippi should be made a loop of the sea and work upon it should be begun at the earliest possible moment. Only less important is the Atlantic inner passage, parts of which are already under way. The inner passages along the Gulf coast should be extended and connected with the Atlantic waters. The need for the developing of the Pacific coast rivers is not less pressing. Our people are united in support of the immediate adoption of a progressive policy of inland waterway development.

Hitherto our national policy of inland waterway development has been largely negative. No single agency has been responsible under the Congress for making the best use of our rivers, or for exercising foresight in their development. In the absence of a comprehensive plan, the only safe policy was one of repression and procrastination. Frequent changes of plan and piecemeal execution of projects have still further hampered improvement. A channel is no deeper than its shallowest reach, and to improve a river short of the point of effective navigability is a sheer waste of all its costs. In spite of large appropriations for their improvement, our rivers are less serviceable for interstate commerce to-day than they were half a century ago, and in spite of the vast increase in our population and commerce they are, on the whole, less used.

The first condition of successful development of our waterways is a definite and progressive policy. The second is a concrete general plan, prepared by the best experts available, covering every use to which our streams can be put. We shall not succeed until the responsibility for administering the policy and executing and extending the plan is definitely laid on one man or group of men who can be held accountable. Every portion of the general plan should consider and so far as practicable secure to the people the use of water for power, irrigation, and domestic supply as well as for navigation. No project should be begun until the funds necessary to complete it promptly are provided, and no plan once under way should be changed except for grave reasons. Work once begun should be prosecuted steadily and vigorously to completion. We must make sure that projects are not undertaken except for sound business reasons, and that the best modern business methods are applied in executing them. The decision to undertake any project should rest on actual need ascertained by investigation and judgment of experts and on its relation to great river systems or to the general plan, and never on mere clamor.

With this statement I give notice that at the earliest practicable moment I will renew my motion for the present consideration of House bill No. 21890, with a view to bridging over the period between the present and the next session, and securing information necessary to legislation. At the next session I shall press the consideration by the full Committee on Commerce of Senate bill 500, in the hope that it will be accepted as a full and comprehensive measure for the active and efficient prosecution of the development and improvement of our waterways.

OMNIBUS PUBLIC BUILDINGS BILL.

Mr. HALE. I can not yield to any other Senator except for a conference report.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. SCOTT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21897) to increase the cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 6, 9, 18, 31, 41, 50, 55, 57, 58, 67, 78, 79, 81, 84, 92, 109, 111, 112, 125, 127, 126, 138, 169, 173, 174, 176, 183, 184, 197, 198, 199, 200, and 203.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 5, 7, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 22, 23, 24, 26, 30, 32, 35, 37, 38, 39, 40, 42, 43, 45, 46, 47, 49, 51, 52, 53, 59, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 70, 72, 73, 76, 77, 80, 88, 89, 91, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 106, 110, 116, 118, 120, 121, 126, 128, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 137, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 170, 171, 172, 177, 178, 179, 194, 201, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "United States post-office and court-house at Colorado Springs, Colo., fifteen thousand dollars, said increase to be employed in substituting granite for sandstone;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "Provided, That not to exceed six thousand two hundred and fifty dollars may be available for the acquisition of additional ground;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "United States post-office at Portland, Me., ninety thousand dollars: Provided, That not to exceed twenty thousand dollars may be available for the acquisition of additional ground;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment to read as follows:

"United States post-office and court-house at Duluth, Minn., $95,000, for additional ground: Provided, That if at any time should any portion of the ground now owned or hereafter to be acquired by the Government be used for street, park, or other purposes by the city of Duluth, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to sell to said city any part of such ground, on such terms as he may deem to be for the best interests of the United States, and to deposit the proceeds of said sale in the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt: Provided further, That in no case shall any portion of the ground now owned or hereafter to be acquired by the Government be sold for less than its fair market value."

(On page 7 of the bill strike out lines 1, 2, and 3, and on page 42 insert the above section after line 2.)

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "United States post-office and court-house at Cleveland, Ohio, $775,000."

Also, on page 9 of the bill, in line 4, strike out the word "eighty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred." And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that the same shall read as follows: "United States post-office at Toledo, Ohio, $50,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "United States post-office at Charleroi, Pa., $40,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "United States post-office and court-house at Salt Lake City, Utah, $175,000: Provided, That not to exceed $40,000 may be available for the acquisition of additional ground;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "Provided, That of the amount heretofore authorized so much as may be necessary shall be available for the acquisition of a suitable site;" and the Senate agree to the same.

(On page 11 of the bill strike out line 25; on page 12 strike out lines 1 to 9, both inclusive, and insert the above section on page 49 of the bill, after line 4.)

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that the same shall read as follows: "United States post-office and court-house at Wheeling, W. Va., twenty thousand dollars: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to sell the old post-office, court-house, and custom-house building, and the site thereof, situate at the corner of Market and Sixteenth streets, in the city of Wheeling, and State of West Virginia, at public or private sale after proper advertisement, at such time and on such terms as he may deem to be to the best interests of the United States, and to execute a quitclaim deed to the purchaser thereof, and to deposit the proceeds of said sale in the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt: Provided, That said building and site shall not be sold for any sum less than one hundred thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "United States post-office and court-house at Wilmington, Del., one hundred and twenty thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "United States post-office at Plainfield, N. J., one hundred thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 86, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "United States post-office and court-house at Roswell, N. Mex., one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "United States post-office at Wilson, N. C., sixty thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows:

"That for the purpose of beginning the construction of a suitable and commodious fireproof building for the accommodation of the United States post-office, United States courts, and other governmental offices at Muskogee, Okla., fifty thousand dollars: Provided, That this authorization shall not be construed as fixing the limit of cost of said building at the sum hereby named, but the building hereby provided for shall be constructed or planned so as to cost, complete, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, but exclusive of site, not exceeding two hundred thousand dollars.

"The Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter into contracts for the construction of a suitable building for said purposes, to be designated by said Department, within the ultimate limit of cost above mentioned: Provided, That of the amount fixed as the ultimate limit of cost not to exceed fifty thousand dollars may be expended during the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and nine."

On page 32 of the bill strike out all of lines 3 and 4 and insert the section on page 63, after line 25.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "United States post-office and court-house at Big Stone Gap, Va., one hundred thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 104, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "United States post-office and custom-house at Everett, Wash., one hundred and thirty thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 105, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "United States post-office and court-house at Walla Walla, Wash., one hundred and forty thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 107, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "Provided, That of this amount so much as may be necessary shall be available for the acquisition of a suitable site;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 108, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "The United States post-office at Rock Springs, Wyo., $75,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "United States post-office at Greeley, Colo., $15,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that the same shall read as follows: "United States post-office at Live Oak, Fla., seven thousand five hundred dollars.

"United States post-office at Lewes, Del., $5,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 115, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "United States post-office and court-house at Augusta, Ga., $35,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 117, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "United States post-office at Cartersville, Ga., $7,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 119, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "United States post-office at Chicago, Ill., $1,250,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 122, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "United States post-office at Abilene, Kans., $7,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 123, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "United States post-office at Bardstown, Ky., ten thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 124, and agree to the same with an amendment so that the same shall read as follows: "United States post-office at Cynthiana, Ky., ten thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 129, and agree to the same with an amendment so that the same shall read as follows: "United States post-office at Aurora, Mo., $10,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 145, and agree to the same with an amendment so that the same shall read as follows: "United States post-office at Bellaire, Ohio, $20,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 154, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "United States post-office at Brookings, S. Dak., $7,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 175, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows:

"SEC. 12. That the provision contained in the act approved June 30, 1906, authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, such additional land as he may deem necessary for the enlargement of the present site and to enter into contracts for the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of the United States subtreasury building at San Francisco, Cal., at a limit of cost of $375,000, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a suitable new site for, or to enlarge the present site of, the United States subtreasury at San Francisco, Cal., at a cost not to exceed the said sum of $375,000."

And the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 180, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "Provided, That such plans and estimates be prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 181, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows:

"Sec. 16. That a commission consisting of the Assistant Secretary of War, the general commanding the militia of the District of Columbia, the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds at Washington, D. C., and the superintendent of the United States Capitol building and grounds, be, and is hereby, created, which shall cause plans and estimates to be prepared for a suitable armory for the National Guard of the District of Columbia, and report the estimated cost thereof to the Congress: Provided, That such plans and estimates be prepared under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"And for the expense of said commission a sum not to exceed $2,500 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended on vouchers approved by the chairman of said commission."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 182, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "16" and insert "17;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 185, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "17" and insert "18;" and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 186, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that the same shall read as follows: "$250,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 187, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "18" and insert "19;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 188, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "19" and insert "20;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 189, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "20" and insert "21;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 190, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "21" and insert "22;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 191, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "22" and insert "23;" and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 192, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows: "$300,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 193, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "23" and insert "24;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 195, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "24" and insert "25;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 196, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "25" and insert "26;" and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 202, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 82, in line 16, strike out the number "thirty-one" and insert in lieu thereof the number "27;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 204, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows:

"Sec. 28. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, for the use and accommodation of the United States Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce and Labor the whole of squares numbered 226, 227, 228, 229, and 230, in the city of Washington, D. C., and the sum of $2,500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay for the land so acquired, is hereby authorized. That part of C street, Ohio avenue, D street, and E street, lying between the squares named herein, is hereby made a part of the site authorized by this act. That should the Secretary of the Treasury decide to institute condemnation proceedings in order to secure any or all of the land herein authorized to be acquired, such proceedings shall be in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890, providing a site for the enlargement of the Government Printing Office (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 26, chap. 837)."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 205, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 84 of the bill, in line 15, after the word "million," strike out the word "eight" and insert in lieu thereof the word "six," so that said section shall read as follows:

"Sec. 29. That for the purpose of beginning the construction of a suitable and commodious fireproof building for the accommodation of the United States post-office, United States courts, and other governmental offices at Denver, Colo., $50,000; Provided, That this authorization shall not be construed as fixing the limit of cost of said building at the sum hereby named, but the building hereby provided for shall be constructed or planned so as to cost, complete, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, but exclusive of site, not exceeding $1,600,000.

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter into contracts for the construction of a suitable building for said purposes, to be designated by said Department, within the ultimate limit of cost above mentioned: Provided, That of the amount fixed as the ultimate limit of cost not to exceed $50,000 may be expended during the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and nine."

And the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 206, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that same shall read as follows:

"Sec. 30. That the sum of ten thousand dollars be, and the same is hereby, authorized, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, to aid in the erection and completion of memorial structure at Point Pleasant, W. Va., to commemorate the battle of the Revolution fought at that point between the colonial troops and Indians October 10, 1774: Provided, That no part of said appropriation shall be expended until the site and plans for said monument or memorial shall be approved by the Secretary of War and the grounds on which said monument or memorial is to be located shall be dedicated to the use of the public and provision is made for opening and maintaining an open highway thereto."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 207, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the number "36," in line 14 on page 85, and insert in lieu thereof the number "31;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 208, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out number "37," on page 85, in line 21, and insert in lieu thereof the number "32;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 209, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 86, in line 6, strike out the number "38" and insert in lieu thereof the number "33;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 210, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 86, in line 22, strike out the number "39" and insert in lieu thereof the number "34;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 211, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 87, in line 15, strike out the number "40" and insert in lieu thereof the number "35;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 212, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 87, in line 24, strike out the number "41" and insert in lieu thereof the number "36;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 213, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 88, in line 1, strike out the number "42" and insert in lieu thereof the number "37;" and the House agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

RICHARD BARTHOLDT,
E. C. BURLEIGH,
W. G. BRANTLEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, your committee desires to state, in reporting this bill, that it has had before it 213 amendments. On these the Senate has receded on 33, the House on 105. The remaining amendments are verbal.

The bill has been cut materially on the larger items. The parks for the District of Columbia were stricken out and the saving of over a million dollars was made. The needs of the General Government in the District of Columbia, however, were looked after, first, by the authorization of the purchase of a site for the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce and Labor. The District of Columbia was given an addition to the District court of appeals and the authorization for a commission to prepare plans for a District armory, leaving out, however, any provision looking toward the securing of a site. The item to purchase an embassy in Paris was also stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ORDER OF BUSINESS FOR EVENING SESSION.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the agreement made in executive session be ratified in legislative session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request for unanimous consent submitted by the Senator from Maine will be read to the Senate.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, no business to be transacted during the evening session excepting the consideration of conference reports, questions in disagreement between the two Houses, and the consideration of such measures as may be unobjectionable to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

HOOR OF MEETING ON MONDAY.

Mr. HALE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet at 10 o'clock a. m. on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 23) to provide for the remission of a portion of the Chinese indemnity, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

H. R. 15641. An act for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 22009. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to remove certain obstructions to navigation from the main ship channel, Key West Harbor, Florida, and for other purposes.

CHINESE INDEMNITY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 23) to provide for the remission of a portion of the Chinese indemnity, which were, on page 1, line 13, to strike out "eleven" and insert "thirteen;" and on page 2, line 7, after "just," to insert:

Provided, That within one year from the passage of this resolution any person whose claim upon the Chinese indemnity, 1900, was presented to the United States commissioners or to the Department of State and disallowed in whole or in part may present the same by petition to the Court of Claims, which court is hereby invested with jurisdiction to hear and adjudicate such claim, without appeal, and to render such judgments de novo, or in addition to any allowance or allowances heretofore made, as in each case shall be fully and substantially compensatory for actual losses and expenses of the claimant caused by the antforeign disturbances in China during the year 1900, excluding merely speculative claims or elements of damage: And provided also, That the sum of $2,000,000 be reserved from the Chinese indemnity, 1900, for the payment of such judgments, the same to be paid by the Treasurer of the United States as and when they shall be certified to the Secretary of the Treasury by the said court, and any balance remaining after all such claims have been adjudicated and paid shall be returned to the Chinese Government in such manner as the Secretary of State shall decide, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to so return the same: And provided further, That all evidence furnished by the claimants, and statements made by them to the said commissioners or to the Department of State, shall be transmitted by the said Department to the said Court of Claims and considered together with such other additional testimony as may be presented by either side, and the Government of the United States shall defend the said claims in the said court by such attorney or attorneys as may be designated for such service by the Attorney-General of the United States: Provided further, That in no case shall the Court of Claims award a principal sum to any claimant which, together with the principal sums said claimant may have already received by decision of the United States commissioners and the Department of State, shall exceed the amount originally claimed by said claimant.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at the expiration of the recess, at 8 o'clock p. m.

PUNISHMENT OF EXTORTION.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to ask if, under the agreement had this afternoon, unobjectionable bills on the Calendar can be called up?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They are in order under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4062) to amend section 5481 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5481 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows: "SEC. 5481. Every officer, clerk, agent, or employee of the United States, and every person representing himself to be or assuming to act as such officer, clerk, agent, or employee, who is guilty of extortion under color of his office, clerkship, agency, or employment, or under color of his pretended or assumed office, clerkship, agency, or employment, and every person who shall attempt any act which if performed would make him guilty of such extortion shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, except those officers or agents of the United States otherwise differently and specially provided for in the subsequent sections of this chapter."

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask the Senator from Wyoming a question. The Senate has passed a bill by which there has been an entire revision of the penal code. There is a section in that revision upon the same subject as that provided for in this bill. I desire to know of the Senator from Wyoming whether this bill conforms to the corresponding provision of the bill which the Senate has already passed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have no definite knowledge as to the exact provisions of that bill. I can give to the Senator the exact change that this bill proposes to make in the present law.

Mr. BACON. That is not the point. The Senate, after very long and tedious consideration, passed on this very question and enacted a bill, which they sent to the other House. It is true that it also relates to a great many other penal statutes. I do not think we ought to pass a law on that subject unless we know whether it conforms to the general bill which we have already passed. Unless the Senator is prepared to say that he has compared it with the corresponding provision in the bill already passed I shall object to the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am unable to state; but I do not think we should have to wait for any needed amendments in the criminal law until the criminal code which was passed here shall become a law. I am unable to say whether the proposed legislation is identical with the provision of that bill or not.

Mr. BACON. I see in the Chamber one of the members of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, who was present during all of the consideration by the Senate of the penal code, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], and he can probably give me the desired information.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I desire to submit a conference report on the Military Academy appropriation bill.

Mr. BACON. I will ask the Senator from Wyoming to let the bill go over for a little while until I can confer with the Senator from Utah.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SCOTT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21875) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and nine, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 3, 8, 20, 21, 37, 61, 65, and 71.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 5, 6, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 38, 39, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 50, 53, 54, 55, 57, 58, 60, 64, 68, and 70, and agree to the same.

"Provided, That hereafter cadets shall be entitled to rations, or commutation therefor, as hitherto allowed under the act approved June twenty-eighth, nineteen hundred and two, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and three, and for other purposes.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out insert the following:

"The Secretary of War may detail an officer of the Medical Corps of the Army to the Military Academy as instructor of military hygiene."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert the following:

"For pay of one instructor of English and history, to be selected and appointed by the Secretary of War, three thousand dollars."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words proposed to be stricken out in said amendment insert, after the word "adjutant," in the line in which said amendment appears, the words "who shall not be above the rank of captain," followed by a comma, and retain the words "of his grade," inserted in said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount stated in said amendment insert "thirty-three thousand five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount stated in said amendment insert "eighty-three thousand nine hundred and ninety-six dollars and eighty-seven cents;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount stated in said amendment insert "eighteen thousand six hundred and sixteen dollars and eighty-seven cents;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That hereafter the Board of Visitors to the Military Academy shall consist of five members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate and seven members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the respective chairmen thereof, who shall annually visit the Military Academy on such date during the session of Congress or not more than thirty days prior thereto, as may be fixed by the chairmen of the said committees; and the Superintendent of the academy and the members of the Board of Visitors shall be notified of such date by the chairmen of the said committees, acting jointly, at least fifteen days before the meeting. The expenses of the members of the Board shall be their actual expenses while engaged upon their duties as members of said Board, and their actual expenses for travel by the shortest mail routes: Provided further, That so much of sections thirteen hundred and twenty-seven, thirteen hundred and twenty-eight, and thirteen hundred and twenty-nine, Revised Statutes of the United States, as is inconsistent with the provisions of this act is hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert the following:

"For the expenses of the members of the Board of Visitors, two thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount stated in said amendment insert "seventeen thousand three hundred and sixty-eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Divide the sum, $12,000, into two parts—$8,400 for policing of barracks and bath houses, and $3,600 for supplying light and plain furniture to cadet barracks, so that the paragraph in which the amendment occurs will read as follows:

"For the policing of barracks and bath houses, eight thousand four hundred dollars; and for supplying light and plain furniture to cadet barracks, three thousand six hundred dollars."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount stated in said amendment insert "fifty-two thousand nine hundred and thirty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount stated in said amendment insert "seven hundred and eighty-eight thousand nine hundred and fourteen dollars and eighty-seven cents;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of said amendment strike out the words "to continue" and insert the word "for;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "fifty-seven" insert "fifty-six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment strike out "seven" and insert "four."

And in the same line, after the word "designated," insert "one for each class," preceded and followed by a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

N. B. SCOTT,
J. A. HEMENWAY,
J. B. FRAZIER,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the names of the conferees be read. The Secretary read as follows:

N. B. SCOTT,
J. A. HEMENWAY,
J. B. FRAZIER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
RICHARD WAYNE PARKER,
A. B. CAPRON,

I agree to the above report except as to the Senate amendment 69, that provides for the appointment of Philippine cadets at the United States Military Academy.

JAMES L. SLAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HALE. That shows the importance of reading the whole report and the names of the conferees. The clerks frequently do not do that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Before it is agreed to I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill to explain to the Senate more fully the discrepancy in the agreement of the conferees. I myself do not understand it, and I do not think many Senators do.

Mr. SCOTT. What discrepancy does the Senator refer to?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. When the Senator from Maine asked that the names of all the conferees be read, it appeared that one of the conferees signed it, but signed it with a reservation. I did not myself understand it, and I should like to know about it.

Mr. SCOTT. That is in reference to the appointment of Filipinos to the Military Academy. The original amendment of the Senate provided for seven and the House conferees finally agreed to four, but the gentleman who signed separately, I understand, put on that note, not agreeing even to the appointment of four. But I have not seen him since he made that reservation, and so I am only making this statement from what I have understood.

Mr. WARREN rose.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from Wyoming can probably make a fuller statement.

Mr. WARREN. I will state to my colleague on the committee that the first proposition was not for Filipino cadets as such, but for Filipino students who upon graduation were to contract for service a certain number of years. So the word "cadet" used by Mr. SLAYDEN in his note is not quite like the report itself. The conference report itself provides that there shall be one Filipino in each class for the next four classes, who enters as a student and contracts at the end of his time for four or eight years' service, as the case may be, to serve with the Philippine Scouts.

Mr. HALE. I do not understand that the reservation in any way affects the strength of the report.

Mr. WARREN. Not at all.

Mr. HALE. Even if it was opposed to the report, two of the conferees on the part of the House have signed it, and the conferees on the part of the Senate having signed it makes it a complete report.

But it is a monition that when conference reports are offered here they should be read to the Senate, and the names of the conferees should be read, and if any reservation has been made the Senate should know what it is, important or otherwise. I hope that hereafter the clerks in reading the reports, instead of saying "signed by the conferees," so and so, will read the names of the conferees and any reservations that are made in the report. Before this I have called the attention of the clerks to it, but I have never been able to convince them of the importance of reading the full report and the names of the conferees and every suggestion made by them.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I shall object to the further consideration of the report to-day.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator from West Virginia will move to proceed to the consideration of the report.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand that an objection carries it over.

Mr. HALE. Not a conference report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous consent agreement, the motion of the Senator from West Virginia is in order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is the ruling of the Chair?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is in order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then we can discuss it.

Mr. HALE. The report of a conference committee is privileged, and if objection is made to its consideration a Senator may move that the Senate consider it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And it is subject to debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no doubt about the practice. That is correct.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask that the report be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

AFFAIRS IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, to be frank about it, I had no objection to the conference report going through, except that we should consider also other business here before adjournment. It is nothing in which I or any member of my committee is personally interested, but a bill was brought up here this afternoon and read. I was called away, as was kindly explained by the Senator from Maine, and it was the understanding of everybody, I thought, after having conferred with as many Senators as possible, that the bill would go through.

That legislation is needed by the Territories. Most of the provisions that are included in this omnibus bill had already passed the Senate. There are two provisions that are included in it that had not passed the Senate, but should have been properly considered by another committee of the Senate. The reason why they were all included in the omnibus bill was owing to the state of business existing in another place. They were all included in one bill in order that it might not be necessary to have a separate vote taken on each.

If provisions of this bill have not properly come to this committee in the Senate, it was the intention of the committee, and the report was so prepared, to refer them to the appropriate committee first, which was the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico. The chairman of that committee was ill, therefore in order to get this needed legislation in the Territories, including court-houses in some places where they have very poor buildings, and other urgent legislation, it was reported to the Senate after the Senators upon that committee who were in the Chamber had been consulted concerning the provisions that related to Hawaii, about which the committee of which I have the honor of being chairman knew nothing. After those Senators had considered it they all approved of the measure.

So here is a measure which passed the House embracing many bills which have passed the Senate and which have been carefully considered by the committee, and, except the provisions named, reasonably and carefully considered by our committee.

This measure I have attempted now faithfully to have considered. I called a meeting of my committee immediately that the bill came to us, so that we could expedite business and get it in the Senate for passage. It was gotten up this afternoon, and it was the understanding that it would be passed. I think it was the understanding of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and every Senator who had, when I attempted to get it up before, raised objection and to whom I had explained that this measure should pass.

It is not a matter in which any member of my committee is in the least interested except as we are interested in measures that come before our committee. When a piece of necessary legislation like this is brought up, which no person can possibly have any interest in delaying, was delayed, it strikes me that we ought to pause a little in our rapid progress of the public business, of which I do not complain, until we can consider and pass it.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that if we are going to adjourn soon this bill must be gotten into conference, because the Senate committee have made certain necessary amendments. That is the state of affairs at the present time.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Indiana is not possessed with the idea that we did not attempt to pass the bill after he had been called away from the Senate. The Senator can not now know everything that happened in the Senate, because he will not see the report in the RECORD until to-morrow morning. The Senator desired to leave the Chamber for good and sufficient reasons and he made an appeal to other Senators about him to help pass the bill. I for one said freely, if the Senator goes, as it was entirely proper he should, we will pass his bill. It may be that the assurance was too plenary and carried too much authority. Other Senators immediately in the neighborhood of the Senator from Indiana said the same thing, that we would endeavor to pass the bill. When its consideration was continued, objection arose in many quarters of one kind and another. At last I stated that if any Senator objected to the consideration of the bill on his own responsibility and knowledge, that that would end it, as of course it would have done if the Senator had been here.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; certainly.

Mr. HALE. I do not know that the Senator makes an intimation that the statement we made, that we would pass his bill if we could, was not carried out in good faith. I do not think if the Senator himself had been here that any result different from what was reached could have been reached.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not the least.

Mr. HALE. I knew nothing about the bill; but as it came to be considered objections, one after another, arose from Senators, old Senators, and we were obliged for the time being to give the bill the go-by. We did all we could to pass the bill. I do not object to the Senator calling it up now; but I do not want him to feel that we did not carry out to the best of our ability any intimation made that we would try to pass his bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I have no doubt in the world that everything the Senator from Maine has stated is true, and I wish to state that he is entirely correct in saying that there should not be any imputation whatever upon him, or any Senator who has objected. I had seen every Senator who had objected when I attempted to bring the bill up before.

There is just one thing I wish to say, and that is that the Senator must not refer to the bill as "my bill." It is an omnibus bill. I am not the author of any one of the bills it embraces. It came to the committee, of which I am chairman, in the usual course. I think it has been the case pretty generally that bills coming to the Territories Committee have been pretty promptly taken up and acted upon and an earnest effort made to pass such as were proper and necessary pieces of legislation.

There are other bills which that committee has just as thoroughly considered and refused to report until it could have further investigation. There is before us now a bill of that character which we were urged to pass as we passed the rest of these bills.

Mr. President, my object in making the objection, which I did not for a moment mean to follow up unless it became necessary, has been accomplished, and that is this: I see very clearly that there is no disposition to delay this bill at all, and at a later hour, or on Monday morning, when it suits the convenience of the Senate, I shall again move that we proceed to the consideration of that measure.

Mr. KEAN. Why not do it now, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am not able to do it now, because data are asked for, and I am looking them up so as to find out just what is asked for. I want to find out just what the points are that are asked about. I have not them now. I am sending down to my office, so that I can ascertain, so far as I can, how to answer any reasonable questions that may be asked. I do not desire now that those questions, I will say to the Senator from Montana, shall be put until I move to take up the bill, as I now see the disposition of the Senate is to pass this necessary measure. No person can have, I think, any substantial objection to it. There may be some defects in it; and if there are, I shall accept amendments to the bill on the floor. I shall later on this evening, or on Monday morning, as may best suit the convenience of the Senate, move to proceed to the consideration of the bill. The object, as I say, has been accomplished by calling attention to the fact at this point.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] has the floor. I will ask if he will yield to me for a statement?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the bill under consideration prior to the recess, to which the Senator referred, was not treated in any light manner, so far as any Senator present is concerned. Within the bill was found, on page 11, a section repealing section 1955 of the Revised Statutes; and also repealing the proviso of an act providing a civil government for Alaska approved in 1884. It occurred to me, upon the reading of the bill, that prudence required that we ascertain what we were repealing. I found upon close investigation that the proviso in the act of 1884 prohibited the importation of liquors into Alaska. The repealing of that proviso, in view of the provisions of the bill then pending, appeared to be entirely proper; but, upon reference to section 1955 of the Revised Statutes, expressly repealed by the bill pending, I found that that section related to two subjects.

In one part of the section authority is given to the President of the United States to prohibit—and therefore, of course, to regulate—the importation of firearms into the district of Alaska. Another portion of the section relates to the prohibition of the importation of liquors into Alaska.

Under the provisions of the bill we were called upon to vote for or against, the repeal of that portion of section 1955 prohibiting the importation of liquor seemed appropriate, because the bill provided a local-option law for Alaska. But I did desire to know why it was that in an Indian country the President of the United States was deprived, or was to be deprived, of an ancient, wholesome, and proper statutory provision authorizing him to prohibit the importation of firearms into the Indian country. Now, it may be, Mr. President—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator right there what is the language of the law the Senator read? Does the language of that statute authorize the President to prohibit the introduction of firearms?

Mr. CARTER. Section 1955, which the pending bill repeals, in the first line says:

The President shall have power to restrict and regulate or to prohibit the importation and use of firearms, ammunition, and distilled spirits into and within the Territory of Alaska.

They are pretty closely combined, it will be observed. Now, I have no doubt that the portion of section 1955 of the Revised Statutes which authorizes the President to prohibit or regulate the introduction of firearms into Alaska should remain the law, and the Senator will agree with that, I think.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, in view of the fact that my understanding is—and if it is wrong, the Senator can correct me—that the President never exercises that authority at all, that it was done solely when Alaska was an Indian country, and so it is now obsolete and archaic. It has no application to the country that is now well filled up, considering its character and its distance, with citizens from the Senator's State and from the States of every other Senator upon this floor, and as the nature and character of the population has totally changed, I think the Senator will see why no harm can be done and why it is more in consonance with the American ideas that that ancient section of the Revised Statutes—the power under which has, as I understand, never or but rarely been exercised—should be repealed.

That is a part, as the Senator must have observed as he listened to the reading of the bill, of rather a comprehensive act concerning Alaska and its government, affecting not only liquor licenses, where the licenses are put very heavily on road houses, but the whole government of the Territory; all of which, I will say to the Senator, was very earnestly, urgently, and insistently recommended by the present excellent governor of Alaska.

Those are sufficient reasons; and if the Senator, I will say, in order to get this necessary legislation into conference, is not pleased with it and wants to offer an amendment, I think the committee will accept his amendment. It seemed to us to be very wise. Would the Senator say for his State, were it still a Territory, that he would like to have a law upon the statute books of this country authorizing the President to prohibit the introduction of firearms into Montana because there were some Indians there?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I observe that the Senator has given consideration to the subject of the prohibition of firearms amongst the Indians of Alaska. I supposed that this section was, in so far as the introduction of firearms and the regulation of that introduction into the district of Alaska might be concerned, an oversight. If, on the other hand, the Senator has given the matter serious consideration, and with his committee has reached the deliberate conclusion that it is wise and prudent to permit the use of firearms within the Indian country in Alaska without restraint, I have nothing whatever to say about it. I shall offer no amendment on that subject. I will leave that to the committee, which has considered the matter very fully, no doubt. I think, however, it would be well to amend the bill in that particular, because nothing in the measure indicates that any part or portion of the bill requires that that wholesome and necessary provision of law should be repealed in order that the bill may operate without any difficulty in any direction.

Mr. President, the law of the United States to-day enables the Indian Department to regulate the use of firearms by Indians in the State of Montana; and I am very glad that that is the law.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But, Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the law now, or did the law ever, authorize the President of the United States to prohibit, in his discretion, the importation of firearms into the entire Territory of Alaska, regardless of the Indian country? That is the effect of the statute.

I have been misinformed. I understood that there was objection to the consideration of the bill.

I did not know why, but I meant to find out, and now I have found out, and I intend to call up this bill again. When it is called up, if the committee is not able to give the Senator from Montana or any other Senator a satisfactory explanation of our action—we have reported these bills now twice, once in this omnibus form and once in single form—I shall be very glad at the time when I do call it up to accept any amendments, and then the matter may be taken care of in conference. Will the Senator tell me in what year the law was passed that we propose to repeal? I do not recall it.

Mr. CARTER. The law to which I referred, section 1955 of the Revised Statutes, was passed in 1868.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes. At that time the Senator will recall that there were hardly any white men in Alaska. It was just immediately after we had taken Alaska over from Russia. It was full of Indians. It was practically unsettled. We had merely a few officers there; and that was true for a very long number of years thereafter. It is utterly inapplicable, as the Senator will perceive, to conditions there now.

Mr. CARTER. According to my view, it is applicable to the Indian country, but since the bill is not now before the Senate I will forego, according to the Senator's intimation, any further observation on the subject at this time.

PUNISHMENT OF EXTORTION.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I now renew my request for unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4062) to amend section 5481 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator from Wyoming, who has charge of the bill, to explain it briefly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The purpose of the measure is this: The present law provides that any officer of the United States who is guilty of extortion under color of his office shall be subject to a penalty. It is now proposed to provide that every officer, clerk, agent, or employee shall be subject to a penalty; in other words, there is a well-defined judicial determination of the word "officer," but it does not include agents and employees, who have the best opportunity, if they are so disposed, to practice extortion.

Mr. President, with reference to the position of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] I will say that the section that we passed in the criminal code is identical with the section proposed in this bill, except for the transposition of two or three words. In order to meet the objection of the Senator from Georgia, I move to amend the bill, after line 5, by striking out the remainder of the bill and inserting what I send to the desk, which is in words the provision that was passed in the criminal code.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming proposes an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 5 it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the bill and insert:

SEC. 5481. Every officer, clerk, agent, or employee of the United States, and every person representing himself to be or assuming to act as such officer, clerk, agent, or employee, who, under color of his office, clerkship, agency, or employment, or under color of his pretended or assumed office, clerkship, agency, or employment, is guilty of extortion, and every person who shall attempt any act which if performed would make him guilty of extortion, shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming whether this is a Senate or a House bill?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator from Wyoming expect the bill to be passed at this session by the other House?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I hope it will, but in the event that it does not pass I hope that it will be far enough advanced on the House Calendar so that it will not be at the foot of a congested Calendar at the short session.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was going to suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that the bill as now proposed to be amended is in identical terms the provision as found in the penal code. That penal code has already passed the Senate and is now pending in the other House. I have been assured that it will be taken up for consideration immediately upon the reconvening of Congress next autumn; that it will be passed upon by the House as rapidly as possible; and perhaps the penal code will be adopted as soon as this bill can be passed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In that event, of course, there will be no necessity for this bill to pass the House, but in case that expectation should fail, I am anxious to get this as a law on the statute books as soon as possible, for there is almost a weekly necessity for exactly this sort of legislation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I make no objection to it. I merely suggest that for the consideration of the Senator.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, with the Senator's permission—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I could not hear the Senator clearly, but if I caught the explanation, the law as it stands now provides that any officer of the Government of the United States guilty of extortion shall be punished as described in the section.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. And the committee proposes to amend it by including clerks, agents, or employees of the Government. Then, if this bill shall pass as it came from the committee, any officer, agent, clerk, or employee of the Government guilty of extortion will be subject to punishment as provided in the act.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Anyone who is guilty of extortion under cover of his office.

Mr. CLAY. That is the only change made?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is the only change made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXPENSES OF OKLAHOMA CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

Mr. GORE. If there is no conference report ready to be taken up, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 5329) to provide for an appropriation to defray the expenses of the constitutional convention and State election in Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the sum of $215,393.28 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to pay the unsettled expenses of the constitutional convention of Oklahoma and for the elections held therefor and thereunder; said deficit to be paid upon vouchers approved by the governor and secretary of state of the State of Oklahoma, in such manner and form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. KEAN. Is there a report accompanying that bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a report.

Mr. KEAN. Let us have the report read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report, as requested by the Senator from New Jersey.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. BEVERIDGE May 21, 1908, as follows:

The Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5329) "to provide for an appropriation to defray the expenses of the constitutional convention and State election of Oklahoma, and for other purposes," having had the same under consideration, report it back to the Senate with the recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the sum of $215,393.28 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to pay the unsettled expenses of the constitutional convention of Oklahoma and for the elections held therefor and thereunder; said deficit to be paid upon vouchers approved by the governor and secretary of state of the State of Oklahoma, in such manner and form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

There are numerous precedents for the payment of the unsettled expenses of constitutional conventions by the National Government, as note the following:

North Dakota:

Original appropriation (act February 22, 1889, 25 Stat. L., sec. 20, p. 682)-----	$20,000.00
Additional or deficiency appropriation to pay balance of expenses (act September 30, 1890, 26 Stat. L., p. 511)-----	10,854.71

South Dakota:

Original appropriation (act February 22, 1889, 25 Stat. L., sec. 20, p. 682)-----	20,000.00
Additional or deficiency appropriation (act September 30, 1890, 26 Stat. L., p. 511)-----	14,850.80

Washington:

Original appropriation (act February 22, 1889, 25 Stat. L., sec. 20, p. 682)-----	20,000.00
Additional or deficiency appropriation (act September 30, 1890, 26 Stat. L., p. 511)-----	6,076.27

Montana:

Original appropriation (act February 22, 1889, 25 Stat. L., sec. 20, p. 682)-----	20,000.00
Additional or deficiency appropriation (act May 13, 1892, 27 Stat. L., p. 34)-----	7,231.09

Utah:

Original appropriation (act July 16, 1894, 28 Stat. L., sec. 18, p. 111)-----	30,000.00
Additional or deficiency appropriation (act June 8, 1896, 29 Stat. L., pp. 277-278)-----	17,241.50

There are precedents in the enabling acts of Wyoming and Utah for the payment of the expenses of the constitutional convention and for the State elections as well.

In the case of Wyoming (26 Stat. L., 225, sec. 15) an appropriation was made for the expenses of the constitutional convention "and for the elections held therefor and thereunder."

In the case of Utah (26 Stat. L., 217, sec. 15) in like manner funds were appropriated for defraying the expenses of the constitutional convention "and for elections held therefor and thereunder."

In the case of Arizona and New Mexico (34 Stat. L., 285, sec. 41) funds were appropriated—

"for defraying all and every kind and character of expense incident to the elections and conventions provided for in this act; that is, the payment of the expenses of holding the election for members of the constitutional convention and the submission of the question of joint statehood and the election for the ratification of the constitution, at the same rates that are paid for similar services under the Territorial laws, respectively, and for the payment for the mileage for and salaries of members of the constitutional convention at the same rates that are paid the said Territorial legislatures under national law, and for the payment of all proper and necessary expenses, officers, clerks, and messengers thereof, and printing and other expenses incident thereto: Provided, That any expense incurred in excess of said sum of $150,000 shall be paid by said State."

In the case of the Territory of Oklahoma and the Federal district Indian Territory (34 Stat. L., 270, sec. 5) it was provided as follows:

"That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the defraying of the expenses of the elections provided for in this act, and said convention, and for the payment of the members thereof, under the same rules and regulations and at the same rates as are now provided by law for the payment of the Territorial legislature of the Territory of Oklahoma, and the disbursements of the money appropriated by this section shall be made by the secretary of the Territory of Oklahoma."

On the 8th of February, 1907, the secretary of state of Oklahoma, Charles E. Filson, and the president of the constitutional convention and other officials submitted an estimate of a deficiency amounting to $135,240.

The constitution of Oklahoma was subjected to numerous assaults by the liquor interests of that State attempting to defeat the constitution because of its prohibitive clause which had been incorporated by the Congress of the United States and then extended to the entire State by the constitutional convention itself, subject to the vote of the people. These controversies took the matter into court and compelled the constitutional convention to extend its sessions and meet from time to time until these controversies were settled, causing an additional deficiency of $80,153, which was estimated by Hon. W. H. Murray, president of the constitutional convention, March 1, 1908.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WARREN. Let the bill be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the bill, at the request of the Senator from Wyoming.

The Secretary again read the bill as proposed to be amended by the Committee on Territories.

Mr. WARREN. I do not mean to object to the bill, but I should like to ask a question.

Mr. CURTIS. I object to the consideration of the bill, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will go over.

COLLECTION DISTRICTS IN OREGON.

Mr. FULTON submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate S. 6788, "A bill to amend sections 2586 and 2587 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the acts of April 25, 1882, and August 28, 1890, relating to collection districts in Oregon."

Mr. FULTON. I now enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion will be entered.

REFERENCE OF CLAIMS TO COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. FULTON. I ask leave to report from the Committee on Claims the resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution reported by the Senator from Oregon will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the claims of Annie E. White Shipp (S. 1205); the Pillager band of Chippewa Indians in Minnesota for additional compensation for land ceded to the United States by treaty of August 21, 1847, and for other purposes (S. 3203); the estate of William H. Peyton, sr., deceased (S. 4152); Genevieve Griswold Kennon (S. 5242); the heirs and estate of William B. Miller, deceased (S. 7214); and John H. Gray, administrator of John W. Gray (S. 4074), together with all accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the "Tucker Act." And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator from Oregon if this is an additional reference to the Court of Claims?

Mr. FULTON. It is, Mr. President. I will say that these few claims mentioned were left out of the original resolution.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is this in addition to the quota that has been allowed under the general resolution?

Mr. FULTON. The claims were omitted by mistake.

Mr. CULBERSON. Does it amount to an addition to the quota of any Senator?

Mr. FULTON. It does not amount to an additional quota—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. FULTON. The Senator from North Carolina, and perhaps some other Senators, came to me and said they had gone over the list, and these had been left out. Upon investigation I was informed they had been omitted, and so I included them. I had not had time to check up the matter myself.

Mr. CULBERSON. There are several claims which have been referred to the Committee on Claims quite lately, among others by myself, and the answer has been usually, at least, that no additional reference could be permitted, as the list was full. Until I can examine it, I object to the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. CULBERSON subsequently said: Mr. President, I have examined the resolution, and I have talked with the Senator from Oregon in reference to it. He assures me that these matters, according to the information he has, were left out of the original resolution. In view of that fact, I have no objection to its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Oregon.

The resolution was agreed to.

AFFAIRS IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask unanimous consent that we may proceed with the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21957) relating to affairs in the Territories.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not press the consideration of this bill to-night. The bill deals with Alaska—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It does.

Mr. CLAY. And New Mexico—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It does.

Mr. CLAY. The Hawaiian Islands—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It does.

Mr. KEAN. And Arizona.

Mr. CLAY. And there are embodied in the bill several bills that were introduced in the House pertaining to these Territories, dealing with different subjects.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. They all passed the Senate except the Hawaiian matter.

Mr. CLAY. The Hawaiian bill, I understand, was never even considered by the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No.

Mr. CLAY. Take New Mexico. New Mexico has a legislature and a Territorial form of Government. We deal there with a question of issuing bonds in aid of the construction of bridges. Take the Hawaiian Islands. We deal there with the question of furnishing electric lights to the city, and prescribe what company shall do it. I do not say there is anything wrong in any of this legislation, but it seems to me a right serious matter to take up here the day before we intend to adjourn a bill embracing twenty-seven pages and dealing with three distinct Territories and with subjects in those Territories.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. CLAY. With a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Has there been any agreement to adjourn a day from now?

Mr. CLAY. No; I can not say—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No.

Mr. CLAY. But it is generally understood we will adjourn on Monday.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. We are likely to be here longer. The Senator from Georgia has presented his grounds of objection. I hope he will let me reply as far as I can.

Mr. CLAY. I will say to the Senator that if we take up this bill to-night, we ought not to act upon it to-night. I have had only a few moments to examine it. I have been sitting here reading it through hurriedly, as of necessity. If we take it up to-night, it at least ought to go over so that Senators can examine it and pass upon it on Monday.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator objects, of course I have nothing further to say. He is within his rights if he does. But the Senator has made some statements, and as far as I am able I should like to explain the matter.

Mr. CLAY. I have no objection to that. I was not quite through, but I am willing to hear the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think it will relieve the Senator's mind on everything except one point. With the exception of the item regarding Hawaii, it has all passed the Senate. It came back in omnibus form—

Mr. CLAY. Which is a bad way of legislating.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Pardon me a moment.

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. These bills passed the Senate separately, as they ought to have done, and they come back in omnibus form, because it was necessary to put them in that form in another place, as I understand, due to a certain parliamentary condition there. If they had been brought up separately it is quite likely none would even have gotten through, whereas all put in one bill—and there was really no objection except the parliamentary situation, which would consume time—they could be gotten through. That is the reason they come here in omnibus form, to which I object as much as the Senator does. I think it a very pernicious way of legislating.

In reference to Arizona and New Mexico, the Senator speaks about bridges. He might have mentioned court-houses. In every one of these instances it is to legalize the act of the legislature or authorize the municipality to do the thing for the reason that the Federal statutory limitation on taxation would be exceeded or had been exceeded.

Mr. CLAY. With the Senator's permission on that point, I want to ask him a question. The Senator is chairman of the Committee on Territories.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. What is the rule or custom in regard to legislating in the Territories? Where Territories have legislatures, is it not true that we simply legalize their acts?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; or authorize—

Mr. CLAY. Is it not customary first for the Territorial legislature to act and then for their acts to be submitted to Congress and to be approved? Do we originate legislation for the Territories?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very frequently.

Mr. CLAY. We can originate it. Is it not the better practice always to let the legislatures governing those Territories initiate, and to refer the act to Congress for our approval?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is my opinion, very decidedly.

Mr. CLAY. That is my idea.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think the Senator is quite right about that; but of course the other plan has been followed, and in fact quite frequently in Territorial history. There are sometimes reasons for it. If I remember rightly, for there is such a multitude of things in the bill, there is provided here for taxation by a municipality for a bridge. The bridge is in the county in which Albuquerque is located. It is rapidly filling up with people. The legislature does not meet for some time. There are cases like that which demand the immediate attention of Congress.

The Senator will find that in all these cases relating to the Territories that has been the situation, and the Senate committee have been so careful in reference to those things, because I think they should be very seriously scrutinized, that they held up in committee for further investigation, much to the chagrin of the Territorial Delegate and much to the chagrin of men who came on here, a bill which had passed the House legalizing an act of the legislature of Arizona approving warrants that had been issued for various municipal expenses. We wanted to find out where those warrants were held. I think we ought to find out those things.

There are two or three court-houses provided for here. We found out before we reported the bill favorably that those court-houses were absolutely necessary. One court-house in one county we rejected because we found there really was no public demand for it, the county was so thinly populated. There are matters of that kind which constitute the legislation concerning Arizona and New Mexico.

There is only one thing in here about which the committee does not claim to know anything, and that is as to Hawaii, and therefore, as I explained before the Senator came into the Chamber, we first made a report referring that portion of it to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, where it properly belongs. But the Senator from Ohio, who is chairman of the committee, was ill and, therefore, if we got the bill through at all, unless all of this legislation for these Territories was denied at this session, it became necessary for us to consult the members of that committee, which was done for several hours. Some of the members of that committee, who were familiar with that subject, examined it and came to the chairman of the Committee on Territories and said they approved it. For that reason we reported the whole omnibus bill favorably.

I have made as short a statement as I could to the Senator about these various things. I have no further interest in it than any other Senator. Neither has any other member of the Committee on Territories, except that this is really necessary legislation which should go through.

Mr. CLAY. I had no personal objection, except that I thought it was a matter embracing so many matters and pages—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator is quite right.

Mr. CLAY. That it was a very difficult thing to grasp it in a minute.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator will remember that most of these items have already passed the Senate as separate bills.

Mr. CLAY. Does the Senator desire to pass the bill to-night?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes. I understood there would be not the slightest objection to the bill this afternoon. Otherwise I should not have left the Senate Chamber.

Mr. CLAY. Was the committee report unanimous?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It was.

Mr. CLAY. I have my doubts, but—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask unanimous consent, and if there is objection, that will settle it.

Mr. CLAY. I do not want to be captious.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator objects, and if, as he says, we are to adjourn Monday, it will kill the bill. I can not agree that Congress will adjourn with serious legislation needing attention.

I can merely present this matter to the Senate as chairman of the committee. That is all it is permissible for me to do, and it is for the Senate to say whether it will pass the legislation or not.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] is mistaken in his construction of this bill. The bill simply confirms, in the main, the Territorial acts of the legislatures of Arizona and Hawaii. It also provides for an amendment to the Alaskan code. Alaska has no legislature and can act only through Congress. If the Senator will turn in the bill to the provision with respect to Hawaii to which he referred, he will find that it simply legalizes an act of the legislature of that Territory. For instance, section 34, on page 20—

That the act of the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric light and power within the district of Walluku, on the island and county of Maui, Territory of Hawaii," passed by the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii on the 24th and 25th days of April, A. D. 1907, be, and is hereby, amended, and as so amended is ratified, approved, and confirmed, as follows, to wit:

Mr. CLAY. The Senator will find that that act to which he has referred was vetoed by the governor of the Territory. I do not know; it may have been passed over his veto by a two-thirds vote, but I know the report here shows that the governor vetoed the very legislation we are trying to approve.

Mr. PILES. With that I am not familiar at the present time.

Mr. CLAY. I have here the veto.

Mr. PILES. I mean whether or not it was passed over the veto, I do not know. But this is simply confirmatory of the legislation that has taken place in the several Territories.

Mr. CLAY. Not entirely so.

Mr. PILES. In what respect is there any difference?

Mr. CLAY. Part of this bill simply approves and affirms legislation heretofore passed by Territories, and some of it is original legislation by Congress granting certain privileges.

Mr. PILES. Where does the Senator find any?

Mr. CLAY. I think I can find two or three features of that kind.

Mr. PILES. I think the Senator is mistaken in that respect, as I now recall the bill as it was before the committee. The legislation with respect to Arizona is to ratify certain acts of that Territory as to some indebtedness that was incurred in the Territory, and it provides that before this indebtedness shall be paid by the people of the Territory or of the cities which have received the benefit of the moneys expended under the warrants issued it shall be submitted to a vote of the people of the city, and if they ratify this indebtedness then the bonds shall be issued. My idea has always been that it is safe to leave to the people of the Territory the ratification of their own indebtedness.

I myself lived for a long time in a Territory, and I know how difficult it has been for the people of the Territory to get legislation, and when an act was questioned as being in violation of the organic act providing for the organization of the Territory, people who had money would not invest it in the Territory until Congress had ratified the act or until it had been tested in every court in which it was proper to test the question.

So I feel in this case that if the people of these Territories find that acting, as they thought, within the scope of the law they have exceeded the powers conferred upon them by the organic act, and they want to ratify that indebtedness—in other words, if they want to pay the money which they have borrowed and that question is to be submitted to the vote of the people who have had the benefit of the money—they should have that right and Congress should grant that right to the people of the Territories. This bill goes to that extent.

When we had this matter before the Territorial Committee, of which I have the honor to be an humble member, these questions were fully submitted to the committee, and the facts I have mentioned were submitted and called to the attention of the committee, and we felt it was nothing more than a matter of right that they should have the right to pay this indebtedness if they saw fit to vote at a general or special election held for that purpose. I think the Senator from Georgia will find on examination that this bill goes merely to the extent I have stated.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18347) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, and adheres to its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 63, 76, and 77 to the bill.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives adhering to its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 63, 76, and 77 to the bill (H. R. 18347) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 63, 76, and 77.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNHAM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16268) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

1. That the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendments numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

2. That the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that the same may read as follows:

"For salaries of agents for the payment of pension at four thousand dollars each, seventy-two thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

And that the Senate agree to the same.

3. That the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 4, and agree to it with an amendment, striking out in line 2 thereof the word "thirty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten," and after the word "dollars," in the paragraph, add the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary," so that the paragraph as amended will read:

"For clerk hire and other services in the pension agencies, $410,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the amount of clerk hire and other services for each agency shall be apportioned as nearly as practicable in proportion to the number of pensioners paid at each agency and the salaries paid shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House agree to Senate amendment numbered 5 with an amendment, adding thereto the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary;" and that the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 6, and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out the word "forty" and inserting the word "sixty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 8, and agree to the same.

HENRY E. BURNHAM,
REED SMOOT,
H. M. TELLER,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. WARREN KEIFER,
WASHINGTON GARDNER,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

RAINY RIVER DAM—VETO MESSAGE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the President having returned to the House of Representatives in which it originated, the bill (H. R. 15444), extending the time for the construction of a dam across Rainy River, with his objections thereto, the House proceeded in pursuance of the Constitution to reconsider the same and that the bill was passed, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the action of the House be laid before the Senate. It is a privileged matter.

I desire to say, by way of explanation to the Senate, that some time ago the Senate passed a bill for the extension of the time for the building of a dam across the Rainy River on the border of Minnesota and Canada. The President, under a misapprehension, vetoed the bill. The bill has been carefully considered by a committee of the House of Representatives. They have conferred with the President, and the President has expressed his willingness that under the circumstances the bill shall be passed over his veto. His veto was founded on a misapprehension. The company began the work and expended over $700,000 in constructing a dam. Its time is about out, and unless an extension of time is given it can not secure more money to complete the dam.

The passage of the bill over the President's veto is satisfactory to the President, and the House has accordingly passed it, and I ask the Senate to pass the bill.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have the floor. I yield to Senators.

HOOR OF MEETING MONDAY.

Mr. HALE. I desire to make a statement as to the order of business.

The conference committee on the deficiency bill was engaged in perfecting that report, expecting to bring it in this evening, and that the House would take up the conference report on the sundry civil bill and pass it to-night, so that we might pass both of those bills. I think I may say, to the surprise of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that word has just come that the House has adjourned to meet Monday morning at 11 o'clock, so that no progress can be made with the appropriation bills this evening. Therefore I move to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate agreed to meet at 10 o'clock on Monday, because it would be to no purpose to meet at that time, for the reason that under the action of the House nothing can be done this evening to expedite the appropriation bills.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Could not other bills be passed in that time?

Mr. HALE. The agreement was that no bills should be passed except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now and Monday also?

Mr. HALE. Monday also.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to ask whether the Senator from Indiana has not already secured unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill regarding the Territories?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I beg pardon.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to ask whether the Senator from Indiana has not already secured unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill regarding the Territories?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am now occupying the floor upon the recognition of the Chair asking for that unanimous consent, and I have had a colloquy with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], which I trust is sufficiently satisfactory that the Senate may go on with its consideration.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have made the motion. I should not have asked the Senate to do this, except upon the view that during this long evening we should pass both of these appropriation bills. We can pass neither of them, and therefore the conditions do not obtain which existed when I made the motion. Therefore I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to meet at 10 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would ask the Senator whether the evening can not be well spent—

Mr. HALE. I am not speaking about the evening.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And Monday morning, too.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understood the Senator's—

Mr. HALE. I am not talking about the evening.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understood the Senator's motion to involve—

Mr. HALE. The session for to-night is in the hands of the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. Under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. HALE. Under the unanimous-consent agreement. But there is no point in meeting at 10 o'clock Monday when we can not proceed with the appropriation bills.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to meet at 10 o'clock on Monday next. The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. It has been suggested that we might agree to meet at 11 o'clock for general business. I do not object to that. So I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. CLAY. Does that change the rule of procedure as heretofore fixed by the Senate under the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not at all.

Mr. HALE. It does not interfere with that at all.

Mr. CLAY. When we meet at 11 o'clock on Monday we can consider nothing except conference reports or matters pending between the two Houses, and such matters as may be taken up by unanimous consent.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Was that the unanimous-consent agreement this afternoon?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There was no unanimous-consent agreement to that effect.

Mr. CLAY. I so understood.

Mr. HALE. That applied to this evening.

Mr. CULBERSON. I simply want to call the attention of the Senator from Maine, in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, to the fact that the unanimous consent does not apply to Monday. It applies only to this evening.

Mr. HALE. Only to this evening.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have the floor, and I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota rises to a privileged question.

Mr. NELSON. I yield for a vote on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Then let us have a vote on my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I am very sorry to say that the hope we had of final adjournment has, under the action of the House, disappeared. We can not adjourn on Monday.

RAINY RIVER DAM—VETO MESSAGE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
May 12, 1908.

The President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, the bill H. R. 15444, "An act extending the time for the construction of a dam across Rainy River," with his objections thereto, the House proceeded in pursuance of the Constitution to reconsider the same; and

Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

Attest:

A. McDOWELL, Clerk.

I certify that this act originated in the House of Representatives.
A. McDOWELL, Clerk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. NELSON. I have stated to the Senate, and I want to state again, that this is satisfactory to the President. The President of the United States, through the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Garfield, has written a letter to that effect. The Secretary of the Interior says:

These conditions having been fulfilled, the President feels that it is safe, from the viewpoint of the public interest, and equitable to the Rainy River Improvement Company, to enact the bill into law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question of the passage of the bill, notwithstanding the veto of the President, must be taken by yeas and nays. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ALDRICH responded to his name.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. GALLINGER and others. Too late.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada rose in time.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from Nevada is out of order, as the roll call has begun.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada rose to address the Chair before the roll call commenced.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator from Minnesota made a statement regarding the President of the United States in connection with this matter. May I ask him to repeat what it was? I did not understand it.

Mr. NELSON. It is to this effect: That the President of the United States makes known through the Secretary of the Interior, that under the circumstances, having vetoed the bill under a misapprehension, it is satisfactory to him to have the bill passed over his veto.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the calling of the roll.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NIXON] and vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to announce my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY].

Mr. CLAY (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. CLAY. In order to maintain a quorum I will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 0, as follows:

YEAS—49.

Aldrich	Clay	Hopkins	Simmons
Ankeny	Crane	Johnston	Smith, Md.
Bacon	Culberson	Kean	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Curtis	Long	Smoot

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senators, on this question the yeas are 49 and the nays are 0. Two-thirds of the Senate having voted in the affirmative, the bill is passed, notwithstanding the objections of the President, and the title will be agreed to, if there be no objection.

AFFAIRS IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I now renew my request for unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 21957) relating to affairs in the Territories.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOPKINS. The bill, I find, has been on the Calendar only two days.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is true.

Mr. HOPKINS. My attention was not called to it until today, and indeed the feature of the bill to which I desire to have a little time for investigation was not called to my attention until this evening. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that it relates to the practice of medicine in the district of Alaska. A bill of this character was before Congress at the last session, and before the Senate embarks upon the consideration of the bill I desire to have a little time to investigate the various provisions of it. For that reason I shall be compelled to object to its consideration to-night.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that I have no objection to taking up the bill on Monday or at any time, because between this and Monday I can examine the provisions of the bill relating to the practice of medicine, and if I think any amendments are necessary I will submit them to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to state to the Senator before he takes his seat the situation as I understand it, so that he will know what his objection means. This is the third time I have made the explanation to Senators who have come in later.

First of all, this bill passed the House in the form of an omnibus bill, because of the parliamentary situation existing there at this time. Most of the bills had already passed the Senate separately, after having been considered by the committee and having been sent to the House. That is the way it happens to be in an omnibus form.

Now, at the rate at which things are speeding forward, unless the bill is passed to-night it is quite likely that it will fail. It has encountered one objection after another, and all of them have been overcome when it was explained. I will state that this legislation involves exceedingly necessary legislation for the district of Alaska, which the governor of Alaska has been here a long time urging, and which the Department has very carefully considered and recommended, as well as several bills for Territories, for instance, some bills for absolutely necessary court-house buildings in one or two counties of Arizona.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the Senator I am not going to antagonize the bill on the proposition he urges. If the Senator will eliminate the provision in the bill relating to the practice of medicine in the district of Alaska, I will have no objection to it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator will not ask me to do that, because there is now no regulation whatever of the practice of medicine in Alaska, and this is an exceedingly mild provision.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the Senator that in December we could take it up as a separate bill and consider it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, if the Senator will move an amendment striking out that provision, I will accept it.

Mr. HOPKINS. If I can have an assurance that it will not go out, I will have no objection.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will accept the amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. Very well.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That will put it in conference.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator will not—

Keep the word of promise to our ear,
And break it to our hope.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I can not speak for the conferees of the other House, I will say. But I will say this to the Senator: He ought not to ask me or any other member of the committee to say what it is our duty to do, for whenever a subject like this goes into conference it becomes the duty of the conferees to stand by the action of the Senate so far as they may; and in cases where Senators have been defeated and were appointed on the conference they have, against their own convictions, stood by the action of the Senate. The Senator ought not to ask for such an assurance as that. I can not answer for the House conferees.

Further, I will state what I think the process will be. I think, in view of the necessity of getting this legislation through, this will probably be the course. The Senator can guess about it as much as I can, but the House will probably pass the bill when it gets there, and it probably will not go to conference. I can not answer for that, but I think that course is likely.

Mr. HOPKINS. All I desire upon the part of the Senator from Indiana is, as I said, that the word of promise shall not be broken, with me on this proposition in the conference by putting back this provision in the bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator ought not to use quite that language. It touches one pretty delicately. I say it becomes the duty of the conferees on the part of the Senate and the House to stand by the action of their respective Houses.

Mr. HOPKINS. I recognize that. I understand, also, and so does the Senator, that in legislation of this kind it depends largely upon the spirit with which the Senate conferees adhere to their amendments. I feel that if I were in the Senator's place and one of the conferees the bill would pass with this provision eliminated.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly; and I am perfectly willing that it shall be taken out. The Senator must know that this is the case where a provision placed on a bill is seriously contested by the conferees. So where I was one of the conferees and we were beaten, as one of the conferees I with the other members of my committee stood out firmly for the action of the Senate against our own conviction.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is what I want the Senator to agree to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; the Senator has no right to ask it and I do not want him to do it. I will accept the amendment, and he can depend upon the members of the committee doing their duty.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is all I want.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. They will do that without anybody's request.

Mr. HOPKINS. I move on page 11, commencing with line 6, to strike out all of page 11 and—

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to inquire if the bill has been read?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I should say it had.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill was read in full, but consent to its consideration has not yet been given.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is the next question I was about to ask. Does the Senator from Illinois object to its consideration?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. He does not.

Mr. HOPKINS. I stated to the Senator from Indiana that I would not object if the provisions relating to the practice of medicine in the district of Alaska should be stricken out, and I understand from the Senator from Indiana in charge of the bill that that is entirely agreeable to him and to his committee. I am now making my motion in pursuance of the suggestion made by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It begins on page 11, line 11.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand, then, that the Senator from Illinois does not object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not, under the statement of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, as soon as the Senator will move his amendment I will accept it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CLAY. As I understand the Senator from Illinois, he will move to strike out section 11, beginning on page 11.

Mr. HOPKINS. And section 10.

Mr. CLAY. And section 12.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Sections 10 and 11.

Mr. CLAY. Yes; sections 10 and 11, and section 12, on page 12; also section 13, on the same page, and sections 14 and 15, on page 13.

Mr. HOPKINS. Down to "Arizona."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. All of the medicine-practice act. That is what the Senator from Illinois moves to strike out.

Mr. CLAY. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that this bill changes four or five sections of the penal code of Alaska.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It does.

Mr. CLAY. Since I have been in the Senate we passed a penal code for Alaska the consideration of which consumed several weeks.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to correct him in one respect?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. The provisions he refers to are part of the penal code, but there are portions of it that relate to liquor licenses in Alaska, and it is those portions of the law relating to the granting of liquor licenses in Alaska that are amended. It refers only to those portions of the penal code.

Mr. CLAY. I am not going to object to the immediate consideration of the bill, but in my judgment the practice pursued is a bad one. When you undertake to deal with five or six distinct subjects in one bill and call it an omnibus bill you are almost sure to have dangerous legislation.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. CLAY. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I explained to the Senate a few moments ago that all of the bills, except the Hawaiian portion, I believe, passed the Senate as separate bills. They come back from the House in the form of an omnibus bill, because of the parliamentary situation in the House, in roll calls and other things of that kind. The Senator is absolutely right about the proposition of omnibus bills of every kind. They are always dangerous. But this is the only way of getting any legislation for those Territories. It is not the fault of the Senate. The Senator knows whose fault it is.

Mr. CLAY. We are dealing with Arizona, New Mexico, the Hawaiian Islands, and one of these measures has never been considered by a committee.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; they have been considered.

Mr. CLAY. I have given my views about it. I have nothing more to say.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, Mr. President, I make my motion to strike out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The bill is not before the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I said that I had no objection to the amendment.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21957) relating to affairs in the Territories.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois proposes the following amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. On page 11, commencing in line 11, I move to strike out all on that page and all on pages 12, 13, 14, and 15 down to the word "Arizona."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, after line 10, strike out all down to and including line 17 on page 15.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to say, so that the Record will show it, that I accepted the amendment only because I had to do so. I do not believe we ought to have stricken out those provisions.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think that the Senator has acted wisely and well in accepting the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Record will show that the Senate accepted it, not the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is quite true. When I said that I accepted the amendment it was a mistake. I want to correct the Record.

Mr. HOPKINS. I want to say if the Senator desires to suggest that I have coerced him into anything, my answer is that the coercion results in the best kind of legislation on the part of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That may be.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I want to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee, who, I think, has assumed some personal interest in the measure. I am only seeking to get information. I want to get information in regard to section 34 and the following sections. I will ask the Senator whether that part of the bill was ever considered by a committee of the Senate except in connection with this omnibus bill?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have explained that to the Senate three times. I cheerfully explain again that that is a portion of the bill about which the Committee on Territories, which is not the appropriate committee for it to go to in the Senate, does not profess to be informed at first hand. It comes here from another place where there is but one committee for all legislation affecting all Territories and districts of the United States, including Porto Rico and the Pacific Islands, as well as Arizona, New Mexico, and the district of Alaska. But in the Senate there are two committees—the Committee on Territories and the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

So when the bill came in omnibus form to our committee, first we examined all those provisions of it with which we are familiar. We then made a report, intending to refer the other part to the appropriate committee, the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, but we found the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], ill and at home. We then took it back to our committee and made a report favorably, provided the members of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico would examine the matter and approve it. That was done, and upon their assurance that they approved it, a favorable report was made from the Committee on Territories. That is as full a statement as I can possibly give the Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I understand the parliamentary situation of the bill perfectly. I also understand perfectly that it is an omnibus bill, containing matters which should have been referred to two distinct committees of this body, and but one committee has taken jurisdiction of it. I want to inquire in regard to the matter which they report to the Senate. I ask the Senator whether the committee in considering his omnibus bill considered the very important matters that should have gone to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Again I state to the Senator that the Committee on Territories considered it only in the way I have said; that is to say, none of us knew anything about it. It belonged appropriately to the other committee. I at first made a report so that I could present it here, referring it to the other committee. It was not done, because the chairman of the committee was ill, whereupon the matter was submitted to the other members of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, who examined it and expressed to the chairman of the Committee on Territories their approval of it. Now, that is as far as we can go.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Then, Mr. President—

Mr. NELSON. Will both the Senators allow me to make a statement in this connection?

When this bill came before the Committee on Territories we discovered that certain provisions relating to the Hawaiian Islands as to the right of certain electric companies was a subject-matter that did not belong to the Committee on Territories, but properly belonged to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico. Our committee decided in respect to those matters that unless the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico would favor the proposition we would report against those two provisions relating to Hawaii. The bill was referred to that committee in reference to those matters, and informally I am advised by at least two members of the committee that they were opposed to those provisions and they did not believe they ought to be considered. I think those provisions in reference to Hawaii should be eliminated from the bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Later on, I will say to the Senator, I was informed that they were approved and the bill should be reported favorably. Am I right? I ask the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT].

Mr. FLINT. I do not know that any member of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico is opposed to this bill. I polled the committee at the request of the chairman and made a statement of what the omnibus bill contained that had been heretofore referred to that committee, and they all favored it. If any member of the committee was not in favor of it, I was not aware of it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That was my understanding, Mr. President.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I observe, in looking over the provisions of the bill regarding Hawaii, the act seems to have been vetoed by the governor of that Territory, and then was passed over his veto. May I ask what the status is in regard to that part of the bill?

Mr. PILES. I can explain that to the Senator. The first act referred to, set forth on page 20, was vetoed by the governor of the Territory of Hawaii, and that bill was passed over his veto by both houses of the legislature of the Territory.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am very much interested in this matter, and I would like to hear the Senator from Washington.

Mr. PILES. I beg the Senator's pardon, I will repeat my statement.

The first act contained in the bill concerning the Territory of Hawaii was passed by the legislative body of that Territory and vetoed by the governor. It was then passed over the governor's veto by two-thirds of both branches of the Territorial legislature.

The act provides that before it shall become a law it shall be approved by the governor and also by the Congress of the United States. So it becomes necessary, in the first instance, that Congress shall approve this law. Section 10 of the bill, on page 24, provides that—

This act shall go into effect and be law from and after the date of its approval by the governor of the Territory of Hawaii, subject, however, to the approval of the Congress of the United States.

So by the terms of the Territorial act it became necessary for two things to take place before it could become a law. First, it must be approved by the governor, and, second, it must be approved by Congress. The governor vetoed the bill, but it was passed over his veto, and therefore became in law approved, and now it is presented to Congress for its approval.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Probably the Senator can answer the question for which I sought to get information from the chairman of the committee. I am entirely in the dark in regard to this legislation in reference to Hawaii. I think the chairman of the committee is no less in the dark, as I think is the Senate of the United States, unless it is enlightened by the Senator to whom I am addressing my remarks.

The Senate is entirely in the dark. There are three very important provisions here affecting very large interests, individual interests and interests of the Territories. I want to know, if I can get the information, how the act passed by the Territorial legislature is amended by this bill?

Mr. PILES. It is not, as I understand it, amended at all by this bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The bill specifically says that it is amended.

Mr. PILES. Where? Will the Senator point it out, please. I am not aware of it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is what I want to understand. I want to know something about the measure we are passing.

Mr. PILES. I shall try to explain it to the Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In section 34, on page 20, line 14, after reciting the statute of the Territory, it says:

Sec. 34. That the act of the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric light and power within the district of Wailuku, on the island and county of Maui, Territory of Hawaii," passed by the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii on the 24th and 25th days of April, anno Domini 1907, be, and is hereby, amended, and as so amended is ratified, approved, and confirmed, as follows, to wit:

The Territorial legislature passed an act of franchise for these electrical companies, and the governor vetoed that act. We are not asked here to pass a law which the Territorial legislature passed, but another and a different one as amended by the Congress of the United States. What I want some information on is, as to how and in what particulars the law as it appears in this bill is different from the act which was passed by the legislative assembly of Hawaii?

Mr. PILES. I will confess to the Senator—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If there is any Senator who can explain anything about this provision, I wish he would do it, for it is very important legislation. I have no doubt that legislation of this sort is needed for the Hawaiian Islands, but I do not think we want to go stone-blind here in legislation because this is an omnibus bill or because we are in the closing hours of a session of Congress. I should like to have some little information from some Senator, and certainly from some member of one of these two committees, if they can give it—the one committee having jurisdiction and the other taking jurisdiction.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I am not at all familiar with that provision. I do not recall its having been presented to the Committee on Territories of the Senate. If so, it was not when I was present. I am, therefore, unable to enlighten the Senator from Wyoming upon this particular provision—that is to say, wherein the Territorial act is proposed to be amended by Congress.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I do not want to move to strike this out, as it may be very necessary and important legislation for those islands, but I do not think it is fair to this Senate for a committee to present an important bill like this for passage with important items, no member of either committee being able to inform the Senate as to what the provisions are and what necessity for them exists.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, the trouble is that this amendment in relation to Hawaii was inserted in the other House.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Does that relieve a committee of the Senate from considering it?

Mr. PILES. Not at all.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Does it furnish any light to those of us who have got this bill under consideration?

Mr. PILES. This matter has never been presented to the Committee on Territories, so far as my knowledge goes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But the Committee on Territories reported the bill, and they say they have considered it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wyoming will permit me, I have explained the exact situation with reference to it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I understand that perfectly, but unfortunately the Senator was absent from the Chamber when I asked my questions.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I explained it once before. The Senate Committee on Territories when it came to a subject as to which it was not usual for the committee to treat—the whole omnibus bill, including this matter, came to our committee because it was the proper committee for most of it to go to—immediately prepared to refer it to the proper committee of the Senate. The chairman of that committee [Mr. FORAKER] was sick. It was then referred to each member of the committee, and the committee was polled by the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT], who is the next ranking member of that committee, and, upon his assurance, the chairman of the Committee on Territories, after considering the matter informally in the committee, reported it in order that we might get the bill before the Senate and that the legislation should not fail.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I must confess that this is the first piece of legislation of this importance I have ever known to be brought before the Senate on the recommendation of a committee when the committee acknowledge that they did not consider it at all.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. PILES. I do.

Mr. FULTON. I will state to the Senator from Wyoming that probably the Senator from California, a member of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, can explain wherein the act of Congress proposes to amend the act of the Territory.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I asked for an explanation, and would be very glad to get it, because I have no doubt that there is an explanation for it, and I have no doubt that it is needed legislation; but at the same time I should like to know what we are doing and why we are doing it. I will ask the Senator from California, who is upon the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, wherein the bill presented by the Committee on Territories differs from the law proposed by the legislative assembly of Hawaii—that is, if the Senator is advised?

Mr. FLINT. I did not hear the Senator, as my attention was diverted for a moment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I suggest that, if the Senator from Wyoming thinks the legislation is objectionable—although I think it would be seriously a bad thing to adopt the amendment rather than kill the legislation—if he wants to take the responsibility, he can move to strike it out.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I am taking no responsibility—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then move to strike it out.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Except for my vote; and before I give my vote in the Senate I want to know why I vote. When a committee recommend to the Senate of the United States important legislation, it seems to me they ought to be able to give me some information.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator move to strike this out?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. We are asked solemnly to enact into law here—

Mr. PILES. If the Senator will pardon me, I will move to strike out sections 34, 35, and 36, in order to put the whole thing in conference, because it came from the House and not from the Committee on Territories in the Senate. In that way we will get the matter into conference. Now, I think I can explain to the Senator the other provision.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Washington will permit, the amendment proposed by the Senator will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, beginning with section 34, in line 6, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including section 36, on page 34.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Before voting on that, I may be allowed to express the hope that the committee will be as well informed on this in conference as it seems to be in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, as I understand that amendment now, it is to strike out every feature of this bill relating to Hawaii.

Mr. NELSON. Yes; everything relating to Hawaii.

Mr. CLAY. Beginning in line 6, one page 20, and including the remainder of page 20 and pages 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26—

Mr. NELSON. Clear down to New Mexico. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLAY. And 37, down to New Mexico. Is that right?

Mr. PILES. Down to New Mexico.

Mr. CLAY. That convinces me more than I ever was convinced before of the danger of including so many different subjects in one bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator is quite right.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator from Indiana insisted that we ought to pass this bill to-night. I begged that it go over until Monday that we might critically examine it; and now the Senators in charge of the bill have admitted that two-thirds of the bill ought to be stricken out. I am inclined to think, Mr. President, if we consider it a few more minutes the balance of it will be stricken out. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEVERIDGE. With reference to what the Senator has said, I wish merely to say that if the Senator had not agreed to what he states is a sort of general understanding that this Congress should adjourn before the week is out, when important legislation is still to be enacted, we would not be in such a predicament as we are now in an effort to pass this bill. Mr. President, I will inquire if the question on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] has been put?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. On page 5, line 4, I desire to move an amendment for my colleague [Mr. CURTIS]. I move to strike out the word "white" in that line.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 4, before the word "male," it is proposed to strike out the word "white."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the Secretary read the three or four sentences containing that phrase.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from Texas.

The Secretary read as follows:

Sec. 464. That before any license is granted, as provided in this act in relation to intoxicating liquor, it shall be shown to the satisfaction of said court that a majority of the white male and female citizens over the age of 21 years, other than Indians, within 2 miles of the place where intoxicating liquor is to be manufactured, bartered, sold, and exchanged, or bartered, sold, and exchanged, have, in good faith, consented to the manufacture, barter, sale, and exchange, or the barter, sale, and exchange of the same.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the fact that this provision is a part of existing law in Alaska. It relates to the matter of a petition for leave to sell liquor. The object of the provision is that white inhabitants, male and female, shall have the right to express their opinion, and unless there is a given number of signers to a petition no license can be issued. If you strike out the word "white," it makes it ambiguous, for up in that country there are not only a lot of Indians, but a lot of Eskimos; in fact, there are more Eskimos than Indians; and then there are many people of mixed blood up there. I think in the interest of good government in Alaska we ought to leave the provision just as it is.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, as I said, I made this motion at the request of my colleague, and I understand the amendment was agreed to by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I told the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] that I would accept, so far as I could, any amendment he might offer. As the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] very well said, it is not within the power of the chairman of the committee to accept an amendment. The Senate itself must accept or reject; but, so far as I can, I certainly accept the amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "noes" have it.

Mr. LONG. I ask that the motion be again put. I think the Senate did not altogether understand the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will again put the question. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG] on behalf of his colleague [Mr. CURTIS]. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "noes" have it.

Mr. LONG. I ask for a division.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 5, noes 17.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Texas will withhold that motion for a moment, unless the Senator from Texas wants absolutely to kill all legislation respecting Arizona and New Mexico and this necessary legislation concerning Alaska, because if the Senator intends to agree to final adjournment on Monday or Tuesday—

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I know that; but I am asking the Senator from Texas to withhold the motion.

Mr. CULBERSON. If I believed this bill could be disposed of in a short time—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It will be, most certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. Then I will withdraw the motion temporarily.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] withdraws his motion. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] demands the yeas and nays on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG] in behalf of his colleague [Mr. CURTIS].

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to announce my pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Owing to my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—9.

Beveridge	Gallinger	Penrose	Warner
Carter	Long	Piles	Warren
Curtis

NAYS—16.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 23, 1908.

[Continuation of legislative day of Tuesday, May 12, 1908.]

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 11 o'clock a. m.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the reprint of the bill (H. R. 21735) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents in fee to purchasers of Indian lands under any law now existing or hereafter enacted, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments numbered, so that we can have the bill for use in conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

JERRY MURPHY.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 1991) granting an increase of pension to Jerry Murphy, and I ask that the statement be read instead of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey calls up the conference report on the bill H. R. 1991, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can not consent to that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the report as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1991) granting an increase of pension to Jerry Murphy, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the Senate amendments, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

On page 6 of the House amendment, line 23, strike out the words "thirty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

On page 7, line 24, strike out the word "fifteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

On page 11 strike out lines 10, 11, and 12.

On page 12 strike out lines 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12.

On page 13 strike out lines 8, 9, and 10.

On page 15 strike out lines 12 and 13.

H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,

WM. H. DRAFER,

WILLIAM RICHARDSON,

Managers on the part of the House.

HENRY E. BURNHAM,

REED SMOOT,

H. M. TELLER,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1991) granting an increase of pension to Jerry Murphy submit the following detailed statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the conference report, namely:

This bill was originally a single private House pension bill. It was amended by the Senate by adding numerous other House pension bills which had been passed by the House with amendments. These amendments of the Senate were agreed to with an amendment carrying the names of persons embraced in sundry House and Senate bills. This amendment was disagreed to by the Senate and a conference held. After full conference the conferees agreed to the amendment of the House, with sundry amendments, as follows:

In the case of Augusta L. B. Curry, page 6, line 21, etc. This bill passed the Senate at $50 per month, but was amended in the House to $35 per month. After full conference your conferees have agreed to the rating of $50 per month.

In the case of Richard M. Robinson, page 7, line 22, etc. This bill originally passed the House at $15 per month, but was amended in the Senate to $12 per month. Your conferees have agreed to the rating of $12 per month.

In the case of Elemon Boles, page 11, lines 10 to 12: This bill originally passed the House at $10 per month, but was stricken out in the Senate, and your conferees have agreed to such action.

In the case of Nannie E. Lenderman, page 12, lines 8 to 12: This bill originally passed the House at $12 per month and was stricken out in the Senate, which action your conferees have agreed upon.

In the case of Charles J. Tribble, page 13, lines 8 to 10: This bill originally passed the House at $8 per month, but was stricken out in the Senate, which action your conferees have agreed upon.

In the case of Carl Roepke, page 15, lines 12 and 13: This bill originally passed the House, but was stricken out in the Senate, which action your conferees have agreed upon.

H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,

WM. H. DRAFER,

WILLIAM RICHARDSON,

Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I will not call for the yeas and nays on this bill.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 19355) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio calls up the conference report on the fortification appropriation bill. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the report as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19355) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 7, 10, 12, 16, 17, 18, 19, 23, and 24.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, 8, 9, 11, 13, 14, 15, 20, 21, 25, 26, 27, and 28; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Secretary of War is directed, by a suitable board, to investigate and report fully to Congress as to the advisability and necessity of sea-coast fortifications for the protection of the harbor at San Pedro, Cal., and the cities in that vicinity, and if such fortifications are deemed advisable or necessary furnish an estimate of the cost of sites and fortifications separately."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the said amendment the words "not to include Subig Bay or Olongapo;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "twenty-three thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the said amendment the words "not to include Subig Bay or Olongapo;" and the Senate agree to the same.

WALTER I. SMITH,

JOSEPH V. GRAFF,

SWAGAR SHERLEY,

Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. C. PERKINS,

F. E. WARREN,

A. S. CLAY,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point that there is no quorum.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members. All those in favor of agreeing to the conference report will, when their names are called, answer "aye," those opposed will answer "no," those present and not voting will answer "present." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 148, nays 61, answered "present" 13, not voting 165, as follows:

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, call up the conference report on the bill (S. 6155) to provide for an enlarged homestead, and agree to the same.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.
 The Clerk read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6155) to provide for an enlarged homestead, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to House amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert:

"SEC. 6. That whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall find that any tracts of land subject to entry under this act do not have upon them such a sufficient supply of water suitable for domestic purposes as would make continuous residence upon the lands possible, he may, in his discretion, designate such tracts of land, and thereafter they shall be subject to entry under this act without the necessity of residence: Provided, That in such event the entryman on any such entry shall in good faith cultivate not less than one-eighth of the entire area of the entry during the second year, one-fourth during the third year, and one-half during the fourth and fifth years after the date of such entry, and that after entry and until final proof the entryman shall reside within such distance of said land as will enable him successfully to farm the same as required by this act."

And that the House agree to the same.

F. W. MONDELL,
 A. J. VOLSTEAD,
 JNO. W. GAINES,

Managers on the part of the House.

REED SMOOT,
 C. D. CLARK,
 A. J. McLAURIN.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The House amendments to which the Senate agrees are as follows:

Amendment No. 1 inserts the words "California, Idaho."

Amendment No. 2 strikes out the word "North Dakota."

Amendment No. 3 strikes out the words "arid and semiarid."

Amendment No. 4 strikes out the words "Provided, however, That arid and semiarid lands mentioned in this act are to be deemed lands that will not successfully produce annual crops, other than native grasses, without artificial irrigation."

Amendment No. 5 strikes out the words "now occupying" and inserts the word "of."

Amendment No. 6 strikes out the word "hereinafter" and inserts the word "herein."

Amendment No. 7 strikes out the words "heretofore entered by him."

Amendment No. 8 strikes out the words "lying within 5 miles of" and inserts the words "contiguous to."

These last three amendments of the House extend the privilege of securing additional acreage, not to exceed 320, to the homesteader who shall in the future take a less acreage under this act, but confines the additional entry in every case to lands contiguous to the former entry.

Amendment No. 9 throws additional safeguards around the selection by the Secretary of the Interior of the lands which shall become subject to the provisions of this section, and confines residence within such distance of the lands as will enable the entryman to successfully farm the same.

F. W. MONDELL,
 A. J. VOLSTEAD,
 JNO. W. GAINES.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas demands a second. Under the rule, a second is ordered. The gentleman from Wyoming is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Kansas to twenty minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that since the conference report was printed in the Record there is a slight change in the report as it is now before the House. As reported originally the Senate agreed to House amendment numbered 1. The final agreement resulted in the House receding from that amendment. Otherwise the report is exactly as printed.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I wish the gentleman would please explain that amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand that the report as read from the Clerk's desk is not the report that the conferees intended to make to the House?

Mr. MONDELL. The Clerk read from the Speaker's desk the printed conference report, but the conference report as it is on the Speaker's table differs from that printed report as regards the first amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is an indication of the haste with which we are doing business and lack of consideration.

Mr. MONDELL. I think not. The report is in proper form as agreed to by the conferees.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But was not read to the House by the Clerk.

Mr. MONDELL. It was read to the House exactly as it is, except as to amendment numbered 1.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Which was the reverse of what the Clerk read.

Mr. MONDELL. The Senate conferees at one time agreed to House amendment numbered 1. Subsequently there was a disagreement and the House receded from its amendment numbered 1.

Mr. REEDER. At another conference?

Mr. MONDELL. That amendment is a House amendment, which brought the States of Idaho and California within the provisions of the act. As now agreed to the States of Idaho and California are not within the provisions of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the real state of the conference report now?

Mr. MONDELL. The conference report is complete.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do we bring them in or leave them out?

Mr. MONDELL. It leaves those two States out; the House left them in.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The report as read to the House regarding amendment numbered 1 was exactly the opposite of what was really agreed upon by the conferees.

Mr. MONDELL. That is true, because, instead of reading the conference report as it lies on the table, the Clerk read the printed report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How are we going to untangle that? It seems to me you will have to have unanimous consent to read the right report.

Mr. MONDELL. The conference report is in proper form on the Speaker's desk. The Clerk read from the printed conference report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He read the wrong report.

Mr. MONDELL. And the only difference in the report is that the House recedes from its amendment, including those two States—

Mr. WILLIAMS. You had better get permission to correct the Record to-morrow to show it.

Mr. PADGETT. May I ask the gentleman a question? Do I understand you to say you submitted a report first in which the Senate receded from amendment numbered 1? Now, then, how or by what authority did the conferees take up the question a second time and submit a second conference report after they had filed a statement in the House of the conference?

Mr. MONDELL. Because that may properly be done. Under the rules of the House a conference report is simply submitted for printing, and is still in the hands of the conferees until called up, and, as has been done on other occasions, the conferees made a change in the conference report.

Mr. PADGETT. In the second report?

Mr. MONDELL. In the report before the House.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask a question as to the condition of this report. I wish to insist that this report is not properly before the House and can not come before the House in this form without unanimous consent. The conferees met and made a report. That report was printed. There is no knowledge on the part of the House that there was any change in the report; but without any authority from the House this conference committee met again and changed that report and now make the second verbal report, and I insist that this can not be done without unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. One moment.

Mr. PAYNE. It is competent for the House to take up the report under the special rule without being printed if he calls up the original report; there can not be any question about that.

Mr. REEDER. But he does not call up the original report.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman from Wyoming what is the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. It is the report on the greater homestead bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The conferees have agreed on it?

Mr. MONDELL. The conferees have agreed on it; yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, what is the matter with the report?

Mr. REEDER. The report has not been printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One report was read in the House, and they agreed on a different one.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not know about that. I did not hear the reading.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear from the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, the point I make is this, that here is an important measure and the conferees make a report. That report is printed and read. That is all the information the House has about the matter. After that report is read and the matter is thus brought before the House as contained in that report, a second verbal report is made which, I think, is out of order and could not be made without unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to see if the Chair understands the real point of the matter to which the gentleman calls attention. The Chair has in his hand the conference report which speaks—

Mr. REEDER. And that is the report that was read.

The SPEAKER. The report for the first time was read this morning. The Chair will state the understanding of the Chair touching the matter. The gentleman from Wyoming presented a conference report to the House for printing under the rule; subsequently, before the report was called up, the House conferees took the report, as they had a right to, and with the assent and concurrence of the Senate conferees struck out the following words in the draft as originally presented for printing: "That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1," and substituted the words, "That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1." The amended draft of the report is now presented, and a motion is made to suspend the rules and agree to it. The report, under this motion, is in order, although it has never been printed in the Record in its present form.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, if the Speaker will hear me for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the statement of the Speaker is incorrect in this respect: The conference report which the Speaker has just referred to and in which occurs the language to the effect that the House recedes from amendment numbered 1 was not the report which was read by the Clerk to the House. That is the first point.

The SPEAKER. On the contrary, it is the report that was read by the Clerk to the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Upon the contrary, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] subsequently stated that the Clerk had by error read the wrong report, and that the right report meant that the House receded and not that the Senate receded. Now, then, I wish to submit this to the Chair independently of that statement: The rules require conference reports to be printed twenty-four hours in advance. By a familiar ruling of the Speaker the other day a motion to suspend the rules does not suspend all the rules. It does not suspend the rules for the orderly carrying on of business. For example, it can not suspend the rule that the House must be in order. It can not suspend the rules so that a Member can not make the point that the House is not in order. It can not suspend the rule that the real report read to the House shall have been lying on the Speaker's table twenty-four hours.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule on the matter as presented. The Chair again states that he holds in his hand the report which has been read to the House, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] moves to suspend the rules and agree to that report. Now, then, as a matter of fact, which may be said to be only aliunde, as the Chair is informed, the gentleman, the chairman of the conference committee on the part of the House, reported as it appears in the Record for printing under the rules—that is, the ordinary rules of the House—a conference agreement, which conference agreement, as printed under the rules of the House, read as follows:

That the Senate recedes from its amendment numbered 1.

Now, then, it was only printed under the rule for the information of the House. The Chair is informed that the conference committee on the part of the House, discovering the clerical error, took the report from the Clerk's desk for correction. It seems to the Chair that they had a right to do this, as the rule requiring a conference report to be printed in the Record before action thereon does not contemplate that the report passes out of the custody of the managers. Having taken the report the House managers met the Senate managers, and then corrected the error by striking out "Senate" and inserting "House."

Now, under the ordinary rules of the House it may be that it should again be submitted to the House for printing. But suppose that this report was presented this morning, as the Chair will assume the case to be, in fact presented for action by the House for the first time. It is not necessary to print under the rules of the House, because this is the motion to suspend the rules of the House and agree to the conference report. And the motion to suspend all rules means the suspension of such rules as otherwise would stand in the way of immediate consideration of the report. The rule requiring printing would stand in the way, but the motion now offered removes that obstacle.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I just wish to make one remark, if the Chair pleases, and that is that the Chair is mistaken as to the fact. There was no statement made by the gentleman that this was a misprint. It was simply an after-conclusion and an after-conference. There is a mistake in fact, which may not have any effect, however, in the matter of suspending the rules, but it is a mistake in the fact.

The SPEAKER. Well, the House is fully informed, first, by the official conference report which has been read to the House, and it is to that report that the motion to suspend the rules and agree applies.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the House I ask that the conference report be read.

The SPEAKER. It has been read.

Mr. MONDELL. Very well. Now, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, and the gentleman desires, it can be read in his own time, or if there is no objection it can be read again anyhow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think it would be better to have it read again, and read right.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask that it be read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the only way the House knows by the Record what we do.

The SPEAKER. The report will again be read.

[The conference report was again read.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, by this conference report the Senate conferees agreed to all the House amendments to this bill except the first, which included the States of Idaho and California. The Senate insisted to these two States going out of the bill. With that exception, the bill is as it passed the House, with the exception of an amendment which constitutes section 6, and, with these two exceptions, the bill is as it passed the House.

Mr. CHANEY. What is section 6?

Mr. MONDELL. Section 6 is a provision carrying out a recommendation made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office in his last annual report. By the terms of the section the Secretary of the Interior may, if he finds any tracts of land subject to entry under the bill that do not have upon them a sufficient supply of water suitable for domestic purposes, as would make continuous residence upon the lands possible, designate such lands, and as to these particular lands the settler is required to cultivate double the area required under the general provisions of the bill—that is, he must continuously cultivate at least one-half of the area of the entry—but he is not required to live upon the land, but must live near enough to it to enable him to farm it in accordance with the provisions of the act.

Mr. CHANEY. So that he does not have to reside on the land, but near it?

Mr. MONDELL. In these particular localities, as selected by the Secretary, containing no drinkable water.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I desire to say to the House, as one of the conferees, that this is what is known as the "320-acre homestead bill." The bill increases the amount that may be taken in a homestead, 160 acres, to double that amount. The plan it proposes is to permit the proposed homesteader to live on this arid land if he can, but he can not, because there is no water on it. But he is required to live just as near it as he can to "successfully" farm it, which he must do. The land is selected first by the Interior Department. It is also left with the Department as to whether or not he is living near enough to "successfully" farm it. But his rights depend upon whether or not he "successfully" runs the farm, and the Secretary of the Interior is the judge of the fact. Now, I voted against the bill when it was up in the House. We have made the best out of a bad bill that we could—to open this land to homesteads and make this Sahara add to the possible wealth of the land.

Mr. SULZER. What States does it apply to?

Mr. MONDELL. It applies to States west of the Dakotas and Oklahoma, except Idaho and California.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The bill gives 320 acres as a homestead.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Why was the ordinary homestead doubled?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It takes 320 acres of nothing out there to make a little something; that is about as near as I can tell my friend. You may find 320 acres of dust where there is absolutely no water. The man who is going to hold it may be 25, 50, or 100 miles away from water. We give him a little more of nothing, and he is supposed to make a little something out of it by "dry farming," but he must work and succeed. He may live 50 miles away, and, with his hogsheads of water, go Monday to his farm and work four or five days, and when he gets out of water he gets on his water wagon and comes back to the well and gets more water and returns.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. So this is a water-wagon proposition?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; and I stand by that all the time.

Mr. SULZER. Then it relates only to arid lands?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The lands are so dry that sometimes a whole acre will blow off in dust. Now, Mr. Speaker, this conference report is the best we could do with that bad proposition the House passed. It is this, or let this land lie idle and do no one any good.

Mr. MONDELL. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman a question with reference to his bill.

The SPEAKER. Nothing will be done until the House is in order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask the gentleman from Wyoming a question with reference to the merits of this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. I have reserved the balance of my time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will ask if the effect of this bill will not be to enable large cattle owners—

Mr. MONDELL. I have no time to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will it not enable the large cattle companies to secure double the amount of land in that country, making it a great deal easier for them to control the entire range by their cowboys, and for them to prevent the settlement of the lands as they have done heretofore?

Mr. MONDELL. No; it will not. Its effect will be quite the contrary. It will make farms of what is now cattle and sheep pasture.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That will be the result of this bill?

Mr. MONDELL. I will consume sufficient time to answer the gentleman. Not at all. In the first place, this is the first five-year homestead law we have ever had on the statute books. Now, let me answer your question.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman from Tennessee said that it did not require residence for settlement.

Mr. MONDELL. This is the first five-year homestead law we have had. The man must live on the land five years and cultivate the land five years, which is not required now. There is a section now before the House which was decided upon by the conferees that follows the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, made in his annual report, that on certain limited areas to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior that do not contain any water, so that residence is impossible upon them—on those lands—by requiring double the amount of cultivation, the settler may reside sufficiently near the lands so as to make their farming possible.

Now, that applies only to such very limited areas as may be selected by the Secretary and be controlled by him on lands which could not be resided on.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How much land has to be cultivated? One acre?

Mr. MONDELL. One-half of the entire area, continuously.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Cultivated in crops and farming?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Before they are entitled to a patent?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then you might as well not pass any law, because that is impossible in a great deal of that country.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman criticises without knowing what the provisions of the bill are.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I know that country, though.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman criticises because the provisions are not severe enough, and then he criticises because the provisions are too severe.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think the bill should require actual residence on the land.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This bill as it passed the House, as I recollect, restricted these homesteads to the arid and semiarid lands.

Mr. MONDELL. No; it did not. It restricted them to non-irrigable, nontimbered lands.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that under the present law it has been possible for cattle companies to control all the water in a great many ranges? And will not this double the facilities they have heretofore had for controlling these ranges? In the case of a stream running down from a mountain they will take up a little homestead upon that, and then they will control the outside country. The cowboys will be at the headquarters ranch upon this stream, and you are enabling them to hold 320 acres of the stream on the arid lands without any settlement under this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. The provision to which the gentleman refers is entirely within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That does not make it right.

Mr. MONDELL. It is a recommendation of the Commissioner in his last annual report. There are very many gentlemen who always want to know what the Department recommends. This is the particular part of the bill that the Department recommended in the last annual report; in certain limited localities, to be determined by the Department to be localities where it was impossible to live on the land for lack of water, by cultivating one-half the land continuously and residing in the vicinity for five years the entryman can obtain title to the land. Now, the gentleman knows, just as well as I know, that no cattle company and no one attempting to acquire land for speculative purposes is going to cultivate continuously one-half of a piece of land.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They will not cultivate it at all.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. As this bill passed the House it was limited to nonirrigable, arid, and semiarid lands.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is mistaken. As it passed the House it was in that regard exactly as it is now in this conference report.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. What is the condition at present as to arid or semiarid lands?

Mr. MONDELL. It is confined to nonirrigable lands which do not contain merchantable timber, and which are nonmineral.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. So that it is not confined to arid or semiarid lands?

Mr. MONDELL. There is practically no land in the States embodied in the bill, except arid and semiarid land.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The words "arid or semiarid," are not in the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. No.

Mr. TAWNEY. Why do not you put those words in?

Mr. BONYNGE. The lands must be either arid or semiarid, if they are nonirrigable, in that country.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. This law does not require the homesteader to live on the land, because he can not; but it does require him to live near enough to it, in the judgment of the Department, to successfully cultivate it; and if he does not successfully cultivate it, he does not get any patent.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman's remarks refer only to those provisions of section 6, which will be confined probably to a few townships in the United States.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not know anything about that, but I am talking about the way the provision works.

Mr. FULTON. Suppose a man settles on this land, and he does not cultivate it the first year and does not cultivate it the second year, what can be done under the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. The entry would be subject to contest and to cancellation. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be notified when I have used ten minutes. I desire to say to gentlemen of this House that this is essentially a bad bill. It should be written that this is a bill to secure large ranches, and nobody knows that any better than my friend from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS]. It will not have the effect of getting people to live on the land, for the simple reason that they can not live on this class of land. It came before the House and was passed with a provision absolutely that they must live upon the land, but even with that provision they would not live upon the land, because they can not sustain themselves; it is absolutely impossible. They can not support themselves on this class of land.

Mr. POLLARD rose.

Mr. REEDER. I desire not to be interrupted unless I am interrupted in the time of gentlemen on the other side. I have noticed that gentlemen on the other side manage to take up a good deal of my time, but if anybody chooses to ask me a question in the time of the other side, I am quite willing to answer it. As I say, this will not have the effect of compelling people to settle and live upon the lands, but the effect will be that they will settle on it, their stock will starve, their families will starve, until some ranchman comes along and says "I will give you $50 for your chance." If the homesteader is honest, he may say that it is not worth anything, for they have to prove certain things before title can be had. The ranchman will say "I will take my chances on that. I have a lot of cowboys here, and I will take care of that." Now, some of you Western people know this, but Eastern and Southern people do not know about it.

I would like to talk to you Eastern and Southern Members about this bill, because it is the final move to open up a loophole in the land laws and get rid of all of the Western land, and it will get rid of it in large tracts.

I wish to quote to you what the Senator from Idaho said about this measure when he had his State cut out from the provisions of the bill. He said at that time on the floor of the Senate that this bill would include land that would produce 50 bushels of wheat to the acre, and that is more wheat than land in any Eastern or Southern State will produce one year with another. He said also that this would take in such projects as Twin Falls, in Idaho, where men live on small tracts of land and make the surest and best living of any farmers in the world. That same land will be taken into large ranches under this bill; and if you people knew it, I know you would not vote for it. If the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] had any thought as to what this bill would do and as to what would be done with these lands, I know that he would not be in favor of it. He wishes this land for the people who need homes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REEDER. I can not yield unless I yield in the gentleman's time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have not any time.

Mr. REEDER. I wish to tell you a story of a settlement made in Kansas and what we did with the fellow—I think we sent him out to the State of Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. We have a lot of bad people in our State from Kansas. [Laughter.]

Mr. REEDER. This was a pretty smart fellow, and I wonder they do not send him to Congress. [Renewed laughter.] The law under which this man was taking land required him to build a home thereon, and contained a provision that he must have a board floor and a board roof. He did not have the funds, I guess, or maybe he wanted to save them to go West with, and so he dug into the bank a space about 3 feet wide and 6 feet long and put poles across the top for a roof, put some brush on these poles, and then some hay over the brush, and put some sod over that. Then he sharpened a stick, went into the dugout, bored holes in the ground and then bored holes up through the roof, and made an affidavit that he had a bored floor and a bored roof. [Laughter.]

I wish to assure you that if you allow this bill to become a law, through this loophole all the public lands of any value will be taken, and generally they will go into large ranches. These people are shrewd enough to get it in spite of what is written in law.

Some of you may say, "How are we to know about this?" Well, if you do not know, I want to give you a safe rule to go by. Do not vote any more loopholes in the land laws if you do not know the effect of them. It is no harm to keep the public domain until people can settle on it. I wish to say further that men in the West seldom send men here who do not vote for what they want, and I presume the citizens who advocate this bill have hundreds of thousands of acres of Western land, and they have the American disposition of wanting everything that adjoins them.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. REEDER. I object. I do not want this taken out of my time.

Mr. MONDELL. But the gentleman has referred to me specifically.

Mr. REEDER. All right, go ahead, make your objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to know which gentleman has the floor.

Mr. REEDER. I have the floor. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming for a moment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman's words be read.

Mr. COOK of Colorado. It is an outrage.

Mr. REEDER. Very well.

Mr. MONDELL. I want them read, Mr. Speaker; I did not quite understand them.

Mr. REEDER. He can have them read, or I will state them again.

Mr. MONDELL. What the gentleman said was that the gentleman from Wyoming and his friends—

Mr. REEDER. Probably.

Mr. COOK of Colorado. The gentleman did not use the word "probably."

Mr. MONDELL. Did have hundreds of thousands of acres and desired to get all the land adjoining.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire the words read?

Mr. REEDER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. They will be here in a moment. In the meantime the gentleman will suspend. While the stenographer is writing out what was said the Chair will have read clause 5 of Rule XIV.

The Clerk read as follows:

If a Member is called to order for words spoken in debate, the Member calling him to order shall indicate the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's desk and read aloud to the House; but he shall not be held to answer, nor be subject to the censure of the House therefor, if further debate or other business has intervened.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman was called to order and a demand was made that the remarks be taken down. The Clerk will read the words.

The Clerk read as follows:

Men in the West seldom send men here who do not vote for what they want, and I presume that the men who advocate this bill have hundreds of thousands of acres of western land, and they have the American disposition of wanting everything that adjoins them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read the words again:

Men in the West seldom send men here who do not vote for what they want, and I presume that the men who advocate this bill have hundreds of thousands of acres of western land, and they have the American disposition of wanting everything that adjoins them.

The words speak for themselves. In the opinion of the Chair, they do not, as they stand, reflect upon a Member of the House [applause]; still it is for the House to say.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am rather inclined to the view expressed by the Chair of the words as read, and yet, as the words fell on my ear, there was included in the statement of the gentleman some words that do not appear in the record as written out. I may have been mistaken.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I consumed?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I would like the attention of the House. I hope that this bill will not become a law. I earnestly hope this because the public domain is fast disappearing. We are not improving our land laws, but we are opening up a method by which other lands can come into the hands of great corporations. When this law passed I regarded it as very bad legislation. I do not think, with mature consideration and in the usual course of business, it would have passed the House, but it has now gotten into conference and the conferees have added to it the largest hole that has been left in the public land laws recently.

It is provided that a man, and I guess I will mention the cowboy, can live on a ranch where they have got control of the water and can farm ostensibly some land at some distance from camp, and by that means hold it, and if they can swear properly to prove up on that land they can thus secure a great ranch. This is put in in the conference report, and I do say we ought not to let this provision remain in the bill, that a man can control and finally prove up on land that he does not live on, because the effect will be to get this land out of the hands of the people before they can improve it under the different laws that have been passed for the purpose of irrigating the public land. As I said a moment ago, the Senator from Idaho objected to this because he said it would include lands that would raise 50 bushels of wheat to the acre. What kind of land would you call that in Illinois or Indiana that would raise 50 bushels of wheat to the acre one year with another? Then I say to you it will have this effect, because they can not live on this land in one case out of ten. I believe I will say of the remainder of the public domain, that is nonirrigable and is really desert land, that they can not in one case out of a hundred live on the land and sustain a family therefrom, and if a man is foolish enough to be inveigled into trying it and goes there with his family, it is only a question of time when he will take $25- or $50 to leave the land and go somewhere else, because he can not stay there.

But he can stay just as well on 320 acres as on 640 acres; he can not stay on either. If he could stay at all, he could turn the cattle out and pasture them and live on 160 acres. But they say it is for dry farming, because you have to farm the land twice as much as you would have to do in one of the older States. If a man had 80 acres under any system of farming that required twice as much work as the ordinary method of farming, he would not need more land, but less. The fact that he can not farm that land without twice as much labor shows he only needs half the land. It is all folly to say the more labor an acre requires the more acres a man needs. I wish now to show you that this report does not quite represent to you people the facts in the case. Here it says on the first page of a report, numbered 1300, this:

In the message of the President of the United States, communicated to the two Houses of Congress at the beginning of the present session of Congress, in speaking of the present land laws and of the conditions of the country to which they apply, he said:

"The land-law system which was designed to meet the needs of the fertile and well-watered regions of the Middle West has largely broken down when applied to the drier regions of the Great Plains, the mountains, and much of the Pacific slope where a farm of 160 acres is inadequate for self-support."

Now, I have a copy of that message, and I wish to read what follows this statement. I am not sure which one it is, but here it is, page 29, which gives his exact words.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asked the Chair to notify him when ten minutes had expired.

Mr. REEDER. I will occupy just a moment or two more to finish this.

The land-law system which was designed to meet the needs of the fertile and well-watered regions of the Middle West has largely broken down when applied to the drier regions of the Great Plains, the mountains, and much of the Pacific slope, where a farm of 160 acres is inadequate for self-support. In these regions the system lent itself to fraud, and much land passed out of the hands of the Government without passing into the hands of the home maker. The Department of the Interior and the Department of Justice joined in prosecuting the offenders against the law, and they have accomplished much, while where the administration of the law has been defective it has been changed. But the laws themselves are defective. Three years ago a Public Lands Commission was appointed to scrutinize the law and defects and recommend a remedy.

They did not recommend any 320-acre homestead law, and, indeed, every one of them are now against that law, but they recommended that the commutation clause should be taken from the homestead law, so that the effect of the first part of the statement would naturally be to convince the Members that the President favored a bill for a 320-acre homestead when the judgment of the Commission appointed by the President is against such a law.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Four minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I expect to vote for this bill. I expect to vote for it because it will have the effect of bringing people, not cattle, to these Western lands. The bill is amply safeguarded. It applies, as I understand it, only to nonirrigable lands. For three or four years from fifty to one hundred thousand farmers each year are crossing our northern boundary to settle upon the wheat lands of Canada. We want to keep some of them at home and we can only keep them at home by making it possible to farm these dry, nonirrigable lands in our mountain States.

A man can not make a living upon 160 acres of nonirrigable land; but if you give him 320 acres, ultimately he will farm one-half of it one year and one-half the next year, under what is called "the system of dry farming," a system under which one year you break up the land and by repeated harrowing keep it covered with a dust blanket, thus breaking up the capillary attraction, and keeping the moisture in the ground until the next year. Some moisture falls each year upon all these lands, not much, but enough, if it is retained within the soil for two years, to produce a crop. This is a bill, as I understand it and as I read it, that will prevent great ranches in the West.

If the system of dry farming upon these nonirrigable lands can not be made a success, then there is nothing in the world that will prevent these lands from going back into sheep pastures. Already the ranchmen of the West are endeavoring to get legislation here that will give them long leases on the public domain, and the only way to prevent it is to pass an act of this kind which makes this kind of farming possible. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REEDER] is recognized.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, the speech of Mr. RAINEY was on the other side of this question, and I am entitled to the closing.

The SPEAKER. No; the gentleman in charge of the report is entitled to the closing.

Mr. REEDER. Then I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DOUGLAS].

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, my objection to this bill is this: I believe that it is designed to put cattle and not men upon the semiarid lands of the West. I voted against this bill when it was before the House. I do not see how any man who voted against it then can vote for it now; and it seems to me that as it comes before us in this report it is far worse now than it was then.

I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that this conference report does not require residence on a "homestead." If that is not a contradiction of terms, I do not know what is. Here is a report which authorizes, I say, this state of things, and therefore I say it is designed to put cattle and not men onto this land. This conference amendment provides if there is not sufficient water for domestic purposes on the land, then the man who enters it does not have to live on it. That is exactly what is here provided. Now, what is the result? I submit that any employer of twenty cowboys can enter thousands of acres of this land, and nobody has to live on it. I can not vote for the conference report. [Applause.]

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I wish for just a moment now to answer the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY]. He says that this bill is amply safeguarded. I have said to you, and as every other Western Member that knows something of what can be done in the way of getting Western lands will tell you, that if a man does not live on 320 acres of land he does not become a settler. Somebody else gets the land. That is all there is to that. There is another thing: The Senator from Idaho says it will take in such tracts of land as the Twin Falls project. It would take in tracts of land in which 10 acres would make a home for a family. On this land, I wish to say to you people—

Mr. PARSONS. In regard to Twin Falls, does that mean what the land in the Twin Falls Reservation would yield before it had been irrigated?

Mr. REEDER. No; what it would yield now under irrigation.

Mr. PARSONS. After irrigation?

Mr. REEDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PARSONS. May I ask the gentleman this: Supposing this bill should pass, and later it should prove possible through a pumping system to irrigate some of the high mesa land that could be taken in 320-acre homesteads, then would not the irrigation law apply and compel the reduction—the size of the holdings?

Mr. REEDER. Not after they had proved up. Land may be nonirrigable to-day and to-morrow that land may be capable of irrigation. If irrigated it would make a home for a family in the southern part of the United States from a tract of 10 acres, and make the safest and surest proposition of farming that can be had anywhere, while of this land that would come under this law, 40 acres of it would not support a steer. A steer could not find enough grass on 40 acres to live on, and four families probably could live on it later. As to keeping citizens from emigrating to the Canadian possessions, that if you will permit these lands to be taken up in large tracts, men can not live on them; but if we hold this land in the Government's possession until we can irrigate it, we will keep a vast number of these people here as citizens. So that this bill will not have the effect that the gentleman from Illinois thinks it will, and I hope that all of you people who would like to see homes upon the land will say, "Let us retain the public domain until we know that we are making a useful disposition of it."

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. REEDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAINEY. Does the gentleman think the farmers who are now emigrating to Canada would wait around here forty or fifty years to see if something does not change so that they can use the land?

Mr. REEDER. No, sir. But we can not prevent them from going to Canada more than one or two years by putting them on these desert lands. They can not stay there. They will take their four or five hundred dollars and go there and squander it trying to make a living and then take $50 and go on to Canada; but shortly after that we may be able to irrigate that land and keep twenty to thirty families on every 320 acres.

Mr. RAINEY. Does the gentleman claim that a man can not make a living on 100 acres of this land?

Mr. REEDER. I say that he can not make a living on 640 acres of it, nor 1,280 acres. There is the trouble. If he could make a living on 320 acres, it would be all right; but there is where people are deceived. They can not make a living on 640 acres, in most cases. In other cases, like that referred to in Idaho, they could probably do so on 320 acres. I desire to ask you not to put this loophole into our public-land laws, by which 320 acres of land can be had on one transaction. It would be a great mistake, and I hope you will not make such a mistake, because land is getting scarce and valuable.

Mr. PARSONS. Is it not true that under the irrigation laws a person may even take their 20 or 40 acres without living on the land?

Mr. REEDER. Must live on irrigated land in every case.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do you say that a man can not make a living on 320 acres of this land, and yet you want to make him live on it?

Mr. REEDER. Let the land alone.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But the House decided that they would not let it alone.

Mr. REEDER. If you let the law alone the land will be let alone.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I say, in behalf of the conferees, that we made the best we could out of the proposition. I voted against the bill when it was before the House.

Mr. REEDER. It is of no use, except, possibly, for pastures.

Mr. GILLESPIE. How is it used for pasture?

Mr. REEDER. I do not think I can describe it at this time. I want the gentlemen to understand that, while this land may be absolutely nonirrigable to-day, it may become very valuable to-morrow. Out in the West I know myself of places where twenty-five years ago there was no water within 500 feet and later it was found within 25 to 30 feet of the surface. I trust no one will vote to put this loophole into the land laws. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am always disinclined to reply to personal references, and had the gentleman from Kansas in his remarks said what I understood him to say, it would have been proper for "the gentleman from Wyoming" to say that so far as he is concerned he is the proud possessor of 40 acres only—and that is a tract of semiarid land of but limited value—and 160 acres of practically worthless arid land that he bought at a tax sale that he will be glad to sell for $100; and that constitutes his sole landed possessions, save a few town lots and a modest home for his wife and babies. Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. REEDER rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. MONDELL. I have only about two minutes.

Mr. REEDER. I would like simply to say that I do not own a foot of land.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But would like to.

Mr. REEDER. Would like to, but do not.

Mr. MONDELL. This is the most amply guarded homestead law ever drawn. It is drawn along lines recommended by the President of the United States. The added matter included in the conference report follows the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. It is confined entirely to nonirrigable, nontimbered lands. It can not by any possibility include any lands that may be irrigated. If, by any possibility, a man should reside for five years and successfully cultivate a tract of land that might afterwards be irrigated, no harm would certainly be done to anyone. There would be five years of cultivation. But there can be no irrigable land taken under the law, because for five years there is allowed a contest, there is opportunity to cancel if the question be ever raised.

Mr. Speaker, this law will prevent that strong flow of sturdy American citizenship into the Canadian Northwest and make thousands of homes on lands which are to-day but sheep and cattle pastures.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

The question was taken on suspending the rules and agreeing to the conference report, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 100, nays 150, answered "present" 15, not voting 122, as follows:

So the conference report was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

For this session:

Mr. BRADLEY with Mr. GOULDEN.

Until further notice:

Mr. VREELAND with Mr. BURLISON.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia with Mr. BRUNDIDGE.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan with Mr. GORDON.

Mr. FAIRCHILD with Mr. SAUNDERS.

Mr. LOWDEN with Mr. ROTHERMEL.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER with Mr. LAMB.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio with Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey.

Mr. GILLIAMS with Mr. CRAIG.

Mr. KAHN with Mr. GILL.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan with Mr. FERRIS.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio with Mr. BRODHEAD.

Mr. BOUTELL with Mr. GRIGGS.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York with Mr. ASHBROOK.

For this vote:

Mr. JENKINS with Mr. SMITH of Texas.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, and that the House further insist upon its amendments to the bill S. 6165 and ask for a further conference thereon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to suspend the rules and further insist. Is a second demanded?

Mr. REEDER. I demand a second.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, is this the same bill that we have just voted on?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the House has failed to agree on the conference report.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It will fail again, so what is the use? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The House has rejected the conference report. This is a Senate bill, and the gentleman from Wyoming moves to suspend the rules and that the House further insist upon its amendments to the Senate bill and ask for a further conference.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is there any rule of the House now by which a vote upon this motion has any effect other than upon the mere motion itself? In other words, does a vote of "no" agree to the Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER. No; it does not. There are no Senate amendments. The Senate passes a bill, and the House amends it. The conference report is made, and the House rejects the conference report—that is, the House fails to agree to it—and this is a motion to suspend the rules and that the House further insist upon its amendment to the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. And if the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming does not prevail, the bill is before the House for any other action?

The SPEAKER. Precisely.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is a motion in order to lay the Senate bill on the table?

The SPEAKER. Not with a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I wish the House would give me the chance to do it; I am against the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Kansas to twenty minutes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair please enlighten my ignorance on the parliamentary situation of this bill?

The SPEAKER. This is a Senate bill, and the House amended it. The conferees met and came to an agreement between the two bodies. The House refuses to agree to the conference report. That leaves the bill before the House. This is a motion to suspend the rules and further insist upon the House amendments and ask for a further conference.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Another parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Why is not a motion, before the rules are suspended, in order to lay this on the table?

The SPEAKER. Such a motion has not been made, and this is a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a motion to lay the whole thing on the table.

The SPEAKER. There is already a motion before the House to suspend the rules, and the gentleman from Wyoming has been recognized for twenty minutes and the gentleman from Kansas, who demanded a second, has been recognized for twenty minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill which, as amended by the House Committee on Public Lands, passed the House by a large majority. As amended by that committee, as I have stated on several occasions here, it was the most carefully guarded homestead law—the only real homestead law—that has ever been presented to the House. The bill went to the Senate. In the Senate the only change made in the bill—excepting a change dropping two States from its provisions—was to add a provision which the House had stricken out authorizing or allowing homestead entries on certain limited areas to be designated by the Secretary without fixed residence immediately upon the entry, but requiring double the cultivation in that case.

Now, evidently the House does not approve of that provision. I am of the opinion that in conference, if this bill shall go back to conference, we shall be able to strike from it every objectionable feature, every feature that anyone could possibly object to. It is universally admitted that for the settlement of the dry lands of the West we must have a larger homestead. I live in a land where for nearly thirty years I have looked out over a vast cow range and sheep pasture. Occasionally we have been able to bring a settler upon these lands, but only occasionally, and one of the principal reasons is that on land of that character the homesteader feels that he is not justified in making the effort, in undergoing the hardships, and only obtaining 160 acres of the second or third or fourth class land for five years' residence. If this motion shall carry and the bill be sent back to conference, I am of the opinion that every feature of the bill that any gentleman can take exception to will be eliminated.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not expect to occupy the five minutes' time, nor to discuss the merits of the proposition. The bill passed the Senate. It came to the House, if I remember rightly, and all after the enacting clause was stricken out.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. It was amended in the House and then it passed the House, not by a large majority, but by a fair majority. It went to conference. On the vote just now had on agreeing to the conference report the ayes were 98 and the noes were 148, a decided vote against it on the merits of the proposition. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the House has indicated its desire that at this time there shall be no legislation along these lines, and having indicated that desire, the proper method for the House to now pursue, it seems to me, is to vote down the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming to further insist and ask for a conference, and then, having voted down that motion, the bill will be before the House and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REEDER] will be entitled to recognition on a motion to lay the Senate bill on the table, where it belongs; and if the gentleman desires to bring the matter before Congress at a subsequent time, with a better considered piece of legislation, that will be the privilege of the gentleman or of his committee. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say just a word or two and then I will be ready for a vote. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] makes as the principal point in his argument that they will strike out all the objectionable features. If they will do that, as I said before, if they would guarantee that settlement would be had under this bill, I would be for it, and if they would strike out all the objectionable features they would have to commence before the enacting clause and finish up at the end of the bill, and especially cut out the 320-acre provision. That is the objectionable feature. So I say it is not possible that he means what he says, or, at least, I would not define it in that way. What we hope to do is to strike this bill out entirely.

I wish to say one thing further to the House, and that is this: If you will vote as you did before, and we do finally lay this bill on the table, we will have this land left, will we not? It is always safe to keep your money. You can always buy something with it. It is equally safe to keep the public domain, and if we have made a mistake, and next year we desire to give this land to the cattle people, we can do so. We can do it then just as well as now, and it will be just as acceptable, and more so, as it will then be more valuable.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Is it not a fact that the cattlemen have it now?

Mr. REEDER. No. The title is in the United States now. They have the use of it. They desire the title. Let us not give them the title. The gentleman from Texas made a statement since the other vote was taken that if he were permitted 4 miles of creek and a good big herd of cattle, and some other man equally smart was 30 miles away from him on the creek, under this law they could get all the land between the two, and I would undertake to get it for them within a reasonable time—not only the use of the land, but the title to it. They say nonirrigable. What do you suppose that means? That may mean land which to-day can not be irrigated, and it may mean land which can be irrigated to-morrow and be worth possibly $500 an acre. I have a friend who went to Colorado and took up land, and he questioned whether it was worth $50 an acre, and within three years ago he sold it for $800 an acre.

Mr. BONYNGE. Whereabouts was this land?

Mr. REEDER. At Grand Junction.

Mr. BONYNGE. Oh, fruit land.

Mr. REEDER. Yes.

Mr. BONYNGE. And under irrigation.

Mr. REEDER. The land that can be taken under this bill, if it becomes a law, may be fruit land and worth a thousand dollars an acre within five years. I know of cases in Kansas where thirty-five years ago a man took up land and bored wells 500 feet deep and found a dry bottom. They continued dry for twenty years. Later on it developed that in certain places on that same land water in plenty was found within 27 feet of the top. This same kind of land would have gone in under this bill, and I want to emphasize again the fact that if we make a mistake by keeping this land now, we can remedy that mistake at any time by turning it over to whomsoever we wish to give it to, and I want to emphasize again the fact that nonirrigable land to-day may be irrigable land to-morrow. I wish to cite another case from Colorado. There is being gotten up, so the papers state, an immense organization over at Canyon City to manufacture electricity and take it to the western line of Kansas and do it so cheaply that they can light all of the towns and furnish heat and motor power for towns and so cheaply that a man can afford to use it to pump water on lands which within fifteen years were not worth 50 cents an acre, while some of them are now worth $200 or $300 an acre—about Garden City. All I am pleading for is, even if some cattlemen do use the land, let us not let them get title to it, but let us keep it so that people can make homes for themselves thereon. If this can not be done this year, if it can not be done next year, it may not be done in ten years from now, but we may be able to make homes of this land in twenty years from now. These young men that are growing up in the East are entitled to homes, and we should not make them subject to the speculator of the West when they are ready to establish a home on the public domain.

If no one wishes to speak further on this subject, Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned, I am ready for a vote.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Wyoming yield me three minutes?

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman favor the bill?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am dead against the bill.

Mr. REEDER. I will yield the gentleman three minutes; I have that much time to yield myself.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before the House I voted against it, because I wanted to save the public lands as they were, and I quite agree with the gentleman from Kansas. Then it went into conference and the conferees brought out the only possible bill that could be brought out of the conference. We met on three different dates and spent twelve or fourteen hours of time in conference trying to get to an agreement, which we reported. Now, this land is absolutely useless, unless some such provision is made as will allow a man to homestead it and work it and live where he can get water, because there is no water on it. It is impossible to live on the land.

The only thing that induced the House conferees to agree to the conference report was that this worthless land produces absolutely nothing; it is uninhabitable and can only be worked by letting a man live out in the country somewhere, where there is water, and going down on the farm and working it. We put in the provision that he must "successfully" work it. Some men live on a farm and do not "successfully" work it, so if he does not work it successfully, in the judgment of the Department of the Interior and officers of law, he can not get a patent. I do not believe that the 320-acre proposition is a proper one, and I am opposed to the bill and want to do anything by honorable means in this House to defeat it, but being one of the conferees, of course it was my duty to sign the report to the House. I am going to vote against another conference, because I am against the bill, and then if we get that done I am going to make a motion to lay the whole thing on the table, because I do not believe in the proposition.

[Mr. COLE addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GILLESPIE].

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Speaker, I have always supported the proposition to enlarge the homesteads out on lands of the character described in this bill. I never have believed that a man with a family can go out on land of that kind and on 160 acres make a living.

Mr. REEDER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GILLESPIE. Well, I have but three minutes.

Mr. REEDER. All right.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Go ahead and ask the question. Now, of course, you might go out in the West and discover a mine or an irrigation proposition, and individuals largely profit by them, and you can cite these individual instances where men have profited from owning 160 acres of these lands, but the fact remains that vast acres of this territory remain unsettled, and doubtless hundreds of instances could be cited where individuals have lost all they had in undertaking to live upon these lands.

It is being used now by somebody. Somebody is getting the use of that land for practically nothing, and somebody wants to continue the use of that land in the same way. I want to favor a proposition that will give the man with a family who wants a homestead an opportunity to go out there and settle and make a living. I believe this bill accomplishes that result. I never saw a more carefully guarded proposition, careful that the land may be kept out of the hands of anybody but the actual settler, the man that goes with his family and settles upon the land and actually puts it under cultivation—I believe one-half of the 320 acres of land at the end of four years. I do not believe that the actual settler can make a living on less than 320 acres of this land. I want our people to go there and establish homes upon this land, and I shall therefore gladly support this bill, as I have always done when the proposition came up before this House.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE].

Mr. BONYNGE. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] requested the House to vote down this motion in order to defeat the bill and gave as his reason that when the bill passed it passed by a very small majority. The Record shows that the bill passed on the 11th day of May and that there were 141 yeas and 74 nays. The bill passed the House by a vote of nearly two to one. The proposition therefore before the House now is whether we shall insist upon the bill that we passed by a vote of nearly two to one.

Mr. Speaker, I live in the city of Denver, and I have lived in that city for twenty years. I have never taken up a single acre of land under any of the public-land laws of the United States, nor has any member of my family for me. I have never lived on any land of the character described in this bill. I only know it as I have traveled over it time after time and year after year and from an intimate acquaintance of twenty years with the people who live upon it. Some gentlemen have referred to special cases in Colorado. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REEDER], in referring to land near Grand Junction, refers to land that is under irrigation, and some of the very best land to be found anywhere in the United States. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COLE] spoke about his brother who lives in Morgan County. Morgan County is one of the counties in my district, and I know the gentleman's brother. The land he refers to is along the Valley of the Platte and is rich and fertile land. Such land is not included within the terms of this bill, because land in the valley of the Platte or in the Valley of the Arkansas is irrigable land, and this bill refers only to nonirrigable land. The kind of land which is covered by the terms of this bill is that which is devoted to pasture and grazing purposes. This is a contest to-day, Mr. Speaker, between those who want to keep that land as large cattle ranches and the people who want to go upon the land and settle it, making homesteads upon it. That is the contest that is now being waged upon the floor of this House.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONYNGE. No; I have but three minutes, and I can not yield. You can not find a large cattleman or cattle company in the West that would favor this bill. There is no opportunity for speculation under it as it passed the House. It requires that the settler shall live upon the land for five consecutive years. Think for a moment, if you will, gentlemen, of a man going out upon the arid plains of the West, overcoming all the hardships and the obstacles that he has to meet, living upon that land for five consecutive years and cultivating the portion of it that he is required to cultivate under the terms of this bill in order to speculate. Where will you find an American who is willing to spend five years of his life upon land of this character with the hope of making a speculation? Knowing as I do, Mr. Speaker, the hardships that these worthy and strong characters and hardy pioneers have undergone in reclaiming the desert of the West, in making it possible to have habitation upon those arid plains, I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the Members of the House, that in my judgment any man who will comply with the terms of this bill will have earned, and dearly earned, the 320 acres that he would acquire. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire whether the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REEDER] wishes to consume the balance of his time?

Mr. REEDER. I would like to inquire how much time I have?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has nine minutes remaining.

Mr. REEDER. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] two or three minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if it had been the intention of the gentleman behind this bill, as the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] suggests, to insist upon the bill as it passed the House, there was an easy parliamentary method of doing that, and that was to further insist upon the House amendment and let it go back to the Senate. Ah, no! This is to send it back to conference, where the same identical proposition can come.

There was an easy parliamentary method to adopt—simply to say that the House agreed to what it would agree to, and nothing more. This goes back to conference, if it goes at all, for the purpose, and the sole purpose, of the House yielding something. There is no other object in sending a bill to conference except to yield something for the yielding of something on the part of the other body. If the House had desired to "stand pat," if the gentlemen behind the bill had wished to insist that if it become law it should become law as it passed the House, there was a proper parliamentary method remaining open, and that remains open even after this motion should be disposed of. [Applause.]

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming if his remaining time will be occupied in one speech?

Mr. MONDELL. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. MONDELL. No; I think I will not use it all in one speech.

Mr. REEDER. Then I would like to have you consume some of your time.

Mr. MONDELL. How much time has the gentleman from Kansas remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. MONDELL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HAMILTON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the proposition now before the House is to send this bill back to conference and insist upon the House amendment—that is, that we insist that the bill become a law as passed by the House.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman state the parliamentary status correctly? I think he does not state it correctly.

Mr. HAMILTON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I understand we are voting upon a proposition to send this bill to conference and insist on our amendment, and I am in favor of the motion. I am in favor of the bill as it passed the House, giving 320-acre homesteads, and I would rather, much rather, pass it as it passed the House than to make the concession made by the House conferees as to the nonresidence of homesteads. It was passed by the House, as stated by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE], by an overwhelming majority in the first instance—nearly 2 to 1—and I believe it is but fair that it be sent back to conference and see if we can not have that bill passed as it was originally passed by the House.

It is not to the interest, as my information leads me to believe, of the cattlemen of the West, but in the interest of the actual homesteader, and against the wishes of the cattle and sheep men, who do not want it settled.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Has the gentleman any reason to believe that any other conferees except those that have already acted, and whom the House has already voted down, will be appointed by the Speaker?

Mr. HAMILTON of Iowa. I do not know anything about that proposition. I believe that if we send this bill back under the motion before the House now that the conferees upon the part of the House will insist upon the House amendment. If they do not secure that, the House will then have the opportunity to vote it down. Therefore I shall vote to send the bill back to conference.

Mr. MONDELL. Now I ask the gentleman to consume his time.

Mr. REEDER. I desire to ask the gentleman if he will use all of the remainder of his time in one speech?

Mr. MONDELL. I think not.

Mr. REEDER. I do not know of anyone who wants to say anything further on this matter at this time, but I am going to speak for a few moments and will then reserve the balance of my time, until the gentleman from Wyoming has the purpose of concluding in one speech.

It was said by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] that this was favored by large ranchers. Speaking for myself, and so far as I know, that is not true. I do not know of any rancher who wants any such legislation.

Mr. BONYNGE. I said just the reverse.

Mr. REEDER. Then, what did you say?

Mr. BONYNGE. I said exactly the reverse. What I said was that the cattle ranchers wanted the land to stay as it is, and opposed this bill, because they want the free use of the range, and what we wanted was that a man might stay on the land and make a home. [Applause.]

Mr. REEDER. In answer to that, I assert that so far as I know that is not the case.

The cattle ranchers may continue in the use of the land, but what he wants is the title, and all I desire to do is to prevent his getting the title, because I think that in time it can be and will be used by people for homes. But if we pass this law I am satisfied that the cattlemen will not only get the use of the lands, but the title, and that is what I am opposed to. I would prefer, of course, that they did not even have the use, and would prefer that there should be a settler located on each 160 acres.

Mr. SMITH of California. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. REEDER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of California. If the cattlemen want to get the title, under which law could they get it best? Under the present law, which allows the homesteader to commute in fourteen months, or this law, which requires an absolute residence for five years? [Applause.]

Mr. REEDER. Knowing the ingenuity of the Western cattleman, I should say that he could get it twice as fast in 320-acre blocks as he could in 160-acre tracts. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of California. It takes five years' residence.

Mr. REEDER. No; it does not take two years. I have dwelt upon this phase of the question, and I think you should consider it: If a man goes upon this land with his family and undertakes to live there for five years, he simply can not do so; that is all there is to it. He can not get the money to pay his expenses without raising some crops, and he can scarcely raise any crops on this land. The result is that he must do something else, and for a small amount he turns the land over to somebody who takes his chance on getting the title, or at least getting the use of the land for several years, for a small amount. The final effect is that the settler gives it up and goes to Canada or some other place to find a home, and the cattle rancher gets the use of the land and prevents its future irrigation.

You can not make a mistake in keeping the land. You may make a mistake in turning the title over to some one, but you can not make a mistake in keeping the land, because I will insure you that every man on this floor who favors this bill to-day will favor it in the future, and if the rest of us get so we desire to favor it, we can turn the land over at any time. Public land now is like money; you can get rid of it at any time. The only trouble is in keeping it. Let us keep it. This is essentially a bad law. The very thought that was conveyed by the gentleman last upon the floor, that we want to pass this as it passed the House before, is just what I want to defeat, if I can; I do not want to pass it at all. I want to see this bill tabled. We are considering this matter of wasting our national resources every day more and more, and if Congress finally make up their mind that it is advisable to turn this land over in 320-acre blocks, I will guarantee you the support of every man who supports this bill now at any time in the future, because they are made up of the same stuff that we are. They would like to get the land. I would not mind getting four or five thousand acres of it myself, if they would let me have it.

Now, if we vote against the bill, I hope the effect of it will be to defeat the bill. If it is wrong to defeat it, we can take it up in the next session with a better understanding.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. KEIFER. The ruthless killing off of the great herds of buffalo that used to roam over the Western country extended, on scientific principles, the rain belt in Kansas and Nebraska and perhaps in States north and south of these States westward about 300 miles, until it passed what used to be, on the old Mitchell's Atlas, the center of the Great American Desert, where the rain now falls to about the same depth annually as in Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. But there is a large region still on the high plains farther West that has not been reached by this rain belt and probably never will be. If we can pass a law that will induce agricultural people to go and settle on 320 acres of that arid land, it will be a great blessing to the country and to the people everywhere. It will take that region out of the situation in which it now is, practically a desert, and convert it into an agricultural region. If the complaint against this bill is that it is generous to the agriculturist who will go there, that makes me ardently in favor of the bill. The new method of dry farming that is being well tested and is proving a success in the West requires twice as much land as the old system. Crops have to be alternated every two years, the land has to be prepared and to lie fallow for a period of time, perhaps over one season; and if it is possible to work out the system of dry farming at all, it will require 320 acres in each farm, in order to enable a man to successfully compete with the farmer and homesteader who settles in a region where there is the ordinary rainfall and who lives upon 160 acres. If this will secure the settlement of this vast region of the Northwest, if it will result in putting a family on every 320 acres all over these now arid, almost desert plains, it will be a great benefit to this country. I am in favor of the principle of the original bill, which requires actual settlement to perfect title.

I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to answer a few of the arguments made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. Speaker, this region that the gentleman from Ohio speaks of, that when many of us were boys was marked on the map as the "Great American Desert," will finally be the greatest crop-producing section in the world. It is coming to that gradually and surely. I have lived in that section thirty-seven years now. It will finally produce the greatest crops in the world, probably by rainfall, though when the gentleman from Ohio says that there is as much rain there now as in Ohio and the Central West he is mistaken by about 50 per cent. That is all. I looked it up the other day, and we have about one-half to two-thirds as much rainfall. That is one good reason why we should not vote the land away from the Government. Even they who talk about it most do not seem to know much about it. And even if it does not rain in this section, we will irrigate it, and then, instead of a homesteader requiring 320 acres to make a living on, 20 acres will make him a home. Then where, as they say now, it will only be enough for one family, it will be enough for eight families to live and support themselves on, whereas, according to their theory, only one family can be supported now, and in fact it will only afford a cow pasture for four to six steers.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has six minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the proposition, it is a motion to send this bill back to conference. I take it that the conferees of the House would assume that the vote by which the conference report was rejected was in effect an instruction to them to insist upon the bill as it passed the House. I will frankly state that I do not like the proposition which was put on by the Senate—a proposition to allow an entry under the homestead law without a settlement. I believe the conferees will insist upon the bill as it passed the House by a substantial majority.

The gentleman from Ohio said it was a bill to place cattle on the lands, and not men. That was answered by the question of the gentleman from California a moment ago, showing that under the present law the cattlemen can put their cowboys on the lands and get 160 acres with a residence of only fourteen months, while under the bill as it passed the House a continuous residence for five years is required, and it will be very difficult to keep a cowboy on the land continuously for five years. If he lives on it for five years, he will keep it. It must not be overlooked that there is no commutation allowed under this bill.

Mr. MANN. This does not change the existing law as to homesteads.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It does, so far as the lands described in the bill are concerned. Of course the lands that this bill applies to can be entered under the present homestead laws as well as under this law, but they have not been so entered.

Mr. MANN. Certainly they can; there is no difference at all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This requires cultivation, in addition to continuous residence. I want to say that a man earns every acre of land he gets of the character and description of these lands in the bill if he lives on it five years and cultivates it; and if he does not do it, he is subject to contest, and he will be closely watched through the entire time. This bill, in my judgment, means a home. The man who lives on a tract of land for five years has lived there long enough to make it a home and will make it a home and will retain it as a home. There are considerable areas in the West—not so much in my State as in others—where now a homesteader can eke out but a mere existence on 160 acres of land. There is some land which can not be cultivated except every other year. In other words, if the homesteader has 160 acres, he can cultivate only 80 acres in one year, and out of that comes his house and his garden, and so forth; and he can probably get 15 or 20 bushels of wheat to the acre. That is not enough. A man who lives on these lands wants a little bit more than a mere existence and wants to be able to make something in order that his family can have some of the comforts of life, that his children may be educated properly, and a place where he can cultivate more than 80 acres.

I remember when the debate was had upon this bill before the gentleman from Illinois said a man could not cultivate more than 80 acres. They may not be able to cultivate more than 80 acres in Illinois, but on land of this sort they can cultivate more than that because, as a general thing, the land is level and there is a longer season for cultivation. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this is a motion to send this bill, which passed by a vote of nearly two to one through the House, back to conference. I want to say to the House that if this motion shall carry and the bill go to conference, as one of the conferees I shall not agree except on the bill as the House passed it. I shall insist on striking out these features that the House has objected to. Mr. Speaker, it has been reiterated here that this is a bill in the interest of the cattle companies. If any man anywhere has heard of any large stockman especially favorable to this legislation or who imagines it will enable him to secure large areas of land, let him now say who he is. On the contrary, the great cattle outfit of the West are pressing us for a lease law. They are insisting that we shall favor legislation under which they can control ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, or one hundred thousand acres in single blocks. We want this legislation to put homes upon those grazing lands, in order that we may have settlers on the lands that can be farmed, instead of dividing the lands up in large blocks among the stockmen.

We want settlement, we want homesteaders, and we propose to make the homestead large enough on those dry lands that the homesteader will not only come from your States, but having come, will have a tract sufficiently large that he can establish and maintain a home upon it. The gentleman talks about this applying to irrigable lands. Not over 5 per cent of the lands of any of the Western States can be irrigated. Irrigation is limited by the water supply, and the highest estimate ever made of the irrigable lands of the West is something like 5 per cent. Those lands are well known. They can not be taken under this bill. If a man should settle upon them, he is subject to contest for five years; he is subject to the cancellation of his entry on notice of a Government agent, and for six years after he makes his final proof the title could be challenged and the title canceled.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the motion will carry, and that the House will send this measure, which it passed by a 2-to-1 vote, back to conference to be perfected. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming to suspend the rules and that the House do further insist on its amendments to the Senate bill and ask for a conference.

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 105, nays 129, answered "present" 14, not voting 139, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 21735) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents in fee to purchasers of Indian lands under any law now existing or hereafter enacted, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CLAPP, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. PAYNTER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1991) granting an increase of pension to Jerry Murphy.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution 44.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk be authorized, in enrolling the District of Columbia appropriation bill, to transpose the word "hereafter," in the second proviso in the matter inserted by the conference report in connection with Senate amendment No. 141, so as to follow and not precede the word "teachers."

PORTO RICO PROVISIONAL REGIMENT OF INFANTRY.

Mr. LARRINAGA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 18618) fixing the status of the Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry, and that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Porto Rico asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the following bill with Senate amendments and concur in the Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the title of the bill and read the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (H. R. 18618) fixing the status of the Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia objects.

Mr. LARRINAGA. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules—

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman is not recognized for that purpose at this time.

Mr. LARRINAGA. I thought I had been recognized.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DENBY].

REMISSION OF A PORTION OF THE CHINESE INDEMNITY.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate resolution No. 23 as amended by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves to suspend the rules and pass the following Senate resolution, with committee amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 23) to provide for the remission of a portion of the Chinese indemnity.

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to consent to a modification of the bond for $24,440,778.81, dated December 15, 1900, received from China pursuant to the protocol of September 7, 1901, for indemnity against losses and expenses incurred by reason of the so-called "Boxer disturbances" in China during the year 1900, so that the total payment to be made by China under the said bond shall be limited to the sum of $13,655,492.69 and interest at the stipulated rate of 4 per cent per annum, and that the remainder of the indemnity to which the United States is entitled under the said protocol and bond may be remitted as an act of friendship, such payments and remission to be at such times and in such manner as the President shall deem just: Provided, That within one year from the passage of this resolution any person whose claim upon the Chinese indemnity, 1900, was presented to the United States commissioners or to the Department of State and disallowed in whole or in part may present the same by petition to the Court of Claims, which court is hereby invested with jurisdiction to hear and adjudicate such claim, without appeal, and to render such judgments de novo, or in addition to any allowance or allowances heretofore made, as, in each case shall be fully and substantially compensatory for actual losses and expenses of the claimant caused by the antforeign disturbances in China during the year 1900, excluding merely speculative claims or elements of damage: And provided also, That the sum of $2,000,000 be reserved from the Chinese indemnity, 1900, for the payment of such judgments, the same to be paid by the Treasurer of the United States as and when they shall be certified to the Secretary of the Treasury by the said court, and any balance remaining after all such claims have been adjudicated and paid shall be returned to the Chinese Government in such manner as the Secretary of State shall decide, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to so return the same: And provided further, That all evidence furnished by the claimants, and statements made by them to the said commissioners or to the Department of State, shall be transmitted by the said Department to the said Court of Claims and considered together with such other additional testimony as may be presented by either side, and the Government of the United States shall defend the said claims in the said court by such attorney or attorneys as may be designated for such service by the Attorney-General of the United States: Provided further, That in no case shall the Court of Claims award a principal sum to any claimant which, together with the principal sums said claimant may have already received by decision of the United States commissioners and the Department of State, shall exceed the amount originally claimed by said claimant.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman on the committee? The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized as demanding a second.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. That is already done under the rule. The gentleman from Michigan is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Wisconsin is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Speaker, to lay this bill before the House of Representatives I must refer, but very briefly, to the so-called "Boxer uprising" in 1900. The Boxer disturbance constituted an episode quite unique in human history, and it can be compared only to the Indian mutiny of some fifty years before. To attack the ministers of friendly powers is the blackest crime in the calendar of nations, and of that crime the unhappy Chinese were guilty. And yet they will not stand alone at the judgment seat of history as taking the entire blame for the horrors of 1900. No one can say at whose door lies the greater blame, the Boxer leaders, who madly attacked all the world, or the representatives of Western civilization and religion who drove them to those deeds by their jealous greed and their aggressiveness. The United States has always stood, however, to all the people of China in an attitude of friendliness. Always have we treated China with justice, and generally, and wherever possible, we have treated her with generosity. During the Boxer movement itself the Secretary of State of the United States proclaimed that great doctrine which is destined to be as important and as rigidly adhered to as the Monroe doctrine. The Hay doctrine of the open door was proclaimed by John Hay, Secretary of State of the United States, during the Boxer uprising in 1900. In 1905, during the heat of the Russo-Japanese war, it was the United States that secured from the belligerent powers a promise that they would respect the territorial integrity of the Chinese Empire, and now once more the Government of the United States seeks to do an act of supreme justice, if not generosity, toward that great people emerging into modern civilization. After the uproar in China in 1900, after all the murders and destruction of property, the foreign powers met together and agreed to ask China for indemnities for the losses that they had sustained. The United States did all she could to keep those indemnities down to a small figure, and her own portion of them is disproportionate to that of other powers. However, it was discovered when the indemnities had been allowed that that demanded by the United States was far in excess of what the losses of the United States entitled her to receive.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DENBY. With great pleasure.

Mr. FINLEY. Is the gentleman satisfied that the amount provided to be retained is sufficient to cover the fair, legitimate, and equitable losses of the people of the United States in the Boxer troubles in China?

Mr. DENBY. If the gentleman will permit me, I will answer his question by explaining a little further what this bill proposes to do. It was discovered by the United States Government that the amount asked for from China, $24,400,000, was greatly in excess of the amount of our losses, and we have determined to return to them—or at least to ask permission of Congress to return to China—the difference not required, or everything in excess of about $13,000,000. The gentleman asked me whether or not enough has been retained to pay all losses that may be held to have been sustained by American citizens. I answer him yes. The computation has been very carefully made.

Mr. FINLEY. One question just there. How was that computation arrived at?

Mr. DENBY. That computation was arrived at by the appointment of commissioners to sit at Tientsin and Peking to receive the claims of American citizens. Those claims amounted to some $3,300,000, and some $1,500,000 of those claims were allowed by the commissioners plus more than $400,000 by the Department of State, leaving a balance of $1,300,000-odd unpaid. The amendment of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs in this bill provides for retaining $2,000,000 of the amount proposed to be exempted to China for the payment of those $1,300,000 of claims. It also provides that the balance—

Mr. FINLEY. What money has been paid by China to the United States on this indemnity claim?

Mr. DENBY. About $6,000,000 has been paid by China, of which $4,000,000 remains in the Treasury of the United States unappropriated at present.

Mr. FINLEY. What has been done with the other $2,000,000?

Mr. DENBY. The other $2,000,000 has been paid to American claimants.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, the other part of it?

Mr. DENBY. The other part is in the Treasury. The other part is that portion which is due on the cost of the Army and Navy during the invasion of China and the allied march to Peking.

Mr. FINLEY. About how much is that?

Mr. DENBY. That was seven million odd for the Army and two million and one half for the Navy, and that has not yet all been paid by China, but some $4,000,000 are in the Treasury.

Mr. FINLEY. The allowances have been made by this commission to American citizens for losses incurred. Now are the adjudications made by the commission satisfactory to the claimants, who are American citizens?

Mr. DENBY. Adjudications made by the commission were in many instances not satisfactory to the claimants. By that I do not mean to reflect in the slightest degree upon the commission or the Department of State, but merely to say that in their determination that no false or improper claims should be allowed they adhered to a rigid technicality of ruling which threw out, in my opinion, many good claims which should have been allowed. We are simply reserving now enough to cover the balance still claimed by American citizens not paid under the original allowances.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, is there enough retained, do I understand the gentleman, to pay the people who are dissatisfied?

Mr. DENBY. Absolutely, sir; enough to pay them every penny in case the Court of Claims should hold that all the money is properly due.

Mr. BURLESON. There is one controverted claim in behalf of a cotton firm. Is there a sufficient amount of money retained to pay that claim?

Mr. DENBY. That is the China and Japan Trading Company, some five hundred and fifty odd thousand dollars, and it was reimbursed only about $57,000. The amount that they still claim is about $500,000, one-quarter of the amount retained to pay all claimants.

Mr. Speaker, I will ask to be informed when I have consumed ten minutes of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Was there a time limit fixed within which all the claims must be filed?

Mr. DENBY. The commission gave notice that it would close its hearings upon a certain day. That was all the time limit that was given.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DENBY. With pleasure.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have been informed that some of this money that was paid by China to the Government of the United States has been expended by the Government in certain war expenditures. Now, I would like to know what sum has been expended, if the gentleman knows, and for what purpose?

Mr. DENBY. Certain of the expenditures?

Mr. SHERLEY. That some of the money paid by China to the United States has been expended by the Government on certain Army expenditures.

Mr. DENBY. I have no information to that effect.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman has just stated that all of this money is now in the Treasury of the United States except some paid for claims. Now, I think the gentleman is mistaken in that. Is he positive about the correctness of that statement?

Mr. DENBY. I stated that claims had been paid to the amount of about $2,000,000; that China had paid to the United States about $6,000,000, and that the difference between $2,000,000 and $6,000,000 does remain in the Treasury of the United States to-day, which is over $4,000,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is not the gentleman mistaken? Has not some of that balance been expended by the Administration in certain war expenses in the Army?

Mr. DENBY. I have absolutely no information to that effect, and I am informed that it is in the Treasury now.

Mr. WALDO. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DENBY. I would like the gentleman from New York to withhold any question until the other side have consumed some of their time, as I have only ten minutes remaining.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish the House to understand that I am opposed to the generous policy that is embodied in the Senate resolution, and that was proclaimed last June by the President, that after reimbursing the Government for the expenses we were put to in suppressing the Boxer revolution and in restoring order in China, and in reimbursing the claimants the amount determined by the American commissioners that adjudicated all the claims presented, that the balance of the indemnity fund, amounting to $13,400,000, should be returned to China. But I am opposed to the House amendment that proposes to lessen this amount $2,000,000 after the State Department last June had notified the Chinese minister that the full amount would be returned to the Chinese Government, and give claimants whose claims have been already adjudicated another chance to maintain their claims after they had full notice and opportunity to be heard and after the State Department had again passed on the claims and decided that they were without merit. The question before the House is whether Secretary Root should be upheld or whether some claimants shall have a further opportunity to loot the Treasury.

Now, I take the position that we stand in good faith with the Chinese people, and return to the Chinese Government the $13,000,000 instead of $11,000,000, as embodied in the House provision, and not give these claimants who have had their day in court further opportunity to prosecute their unmeritorious claims. I want to read to you a letter from Secretary Root, addressed to Mr. Denby—

Mr. BURLESON. Do you claim that these claimants have no claim?

Mr. STAFFORD. Secretary Root says that they have been examined fully by the authorized commissioners and reviewed by the Solicitor of the State Department. They were reviewed again by the Secretary of State, and wherever there was any merit in the claimant's position, on appeal, it was allowed, and where it was without merit it was turned down. Now, gentlemen of the House, after three years from the award by the State Department, without any protest whatever from the claimants, and waiting until last June, when the President announced his policy that the balance would be returned to the Chinese Empire, these claimants for the first time filed objections to the last findings of the State Department that had been considered final. I wish to read to you what Secretary Root said in a letter to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DENBY], dated February 20 last, which is in this language:

Any legislation which treats the action of the Department of State at that time as a nullity is without justification. Such action can not be maintained upon any theory which would not absolutely prevent the Government from receiving ever, under any circumstances, the protection of the maxim that there must sometime be an end of litigation. If such a course is to be taken in this case, no final judgment can ever be a protection to the Treasury of the United States.

Very sincerely, yours,

ELIHU ROOT.

I make the claim right here, and I wish gentlemen on the other side to refute it if they can, that after they have had their day in court they should be given permission to present their claims to the Court of Claims. Now, I have here a decision on identically the same question arising out of Chinese indemnity for outrages perpetrated on parties fifty years ago, whom the Chinese Government should have protected. In that case, where a portion of the claim, as here, had been allowed by commissioners and Congress had subsequently referred the remainder of the claim to the Court of Claims to determine according to the principles of justice and international law, the Court of Claims held that it was without authority to determine whether the claim was properly a charge against the indemnity fund, and was to determine alone the amount of the injury, without regard to the question of the original liability to pay said claim from the fund. I wish to read to the House two of the syllabi from that decision in the Caldera case, which is found in the fifteenth volume of the Court of Claims' reports, page 547. I will read the fifth syllabus:

V. Where an act authorizing the reexamination of certain international claims, act 19th June, 1879 (21 Stat., L.), was passed with full knowledge on the part of Congress of every fact which ever transpired in regard to them, it must be supposed that Congress regarded them as valid claims according to the principles of international law.

Further, I will read the sixth syllabus.

VI. Where an American vessel was destroyed by Chinese subjects, and it appears that damage to the ship and cargo had been caused by the perils of the sea immediately before capture, the amount whereof has not been established by either party, it must be held that the owners should recover out of the Chinese indemnity fund the full value of their property.

I have read that decision, and I say to the House that under an identically similar resolution as embodied in the House amendment to the Senate resolution the Court of Claims would have no right to pass upon the merits of the claim, but if the claimants proved they have suffered any damage whatsoever, regardless of the justice of their claims or their rights to recover under the treaty or under international law, the Court of Claims would be obliged to find that amount for the claimants.

I have examined every claim, numbering several hundred, that was presented to these commissioners, who were worthy men, appointed specially by the Secretary of State, with full knowledge of the situation, one being a member of the embassy and the other a lawyer of high standing.

I could cite to you where the claims were fabulous in amount, and yet the Government of the United States allowed, for the loss of life of any person, to the heirs the amount of $15,000, and now at this late day two trading companies, one with a claim of half a million dollars and another in the amount of several hundred thousand dollars, and although their claims have been once passed upon by commissioners to hear and determine, and in the opinion of the Secretary of State, after review by the Solicitor of the Department, to have been found without merit, asking that they be given another opportunity to come before the Court of Claims to have them allowed. I say to the House that it would be far better for this Congress to stand by the President and the Secretary of State in carrying out the policy that he announced last July, that this Government would return to them every cent of the money that was not required for reimbursing the Government and reimbursing the private claimants to the extent of the $2,000,000 which have been heretofore allowed and paid, and make a direct appropriation to pay all claimants the balance of their pretentious claims than to deduct this from this Chinese indemnity fund that we have stated would be surrendered.

What we desire more than anything else at the present time is to establish a kindly feeling toward us in the Chinese Empire. You are all acquainted with the feeling that has existed heretofore. The trade there is of the utmost value to this nation, and I say to you from my own knowledge of this case, even if these claims, which I believe are unmeritorious, have merit, it would be far better for us as a governmental policy to keep our faith with the Chinese Empire, as stated by President Roosevelt last June, than now to convey to them the idea that we are breaking faith and taking from them $2,000,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. How much time have I consumed, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman say that these claims have already been tried and adjudicated by the commissioners?

Mr. STAFFORD. The claims were presented before these two commissioners, who were appointed by the Department of State.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Where did they hold their court?

Mr. STAFFORD. In China. They were persons conversant with the conditions there; and that is one of the strong arguments in this case that is made by Secretary Root—that they were men acquainted with the conditions, who knew exactly what liabilities should be compensated.

Mr. DRISCOLL. And were they both American commissioners?

Mr. STAFFORD. Both American commissioners; acting as a court of inquiry.

Mr. DRISCOLL. And they passed on these claims?

Mr. STAFFORD. Passed on each and every one of them. And these claims were reviewed again by the solicitor of the State Department, and afterwards passed on by the Secretary of State at the instance of those who had complained about them.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yet now it is proposed to bring them up again?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is proposed to give them another opportunity to get at this excess fund, which I claim the American Government never intended to exact from China. I am told by Secretary Root, who was present at the meeting between President McKinley and Secretary Hay to determine this nation's policy in joining with the other nations in exacting punitive damages from the Chinese Empire, that it was never intended that this Government should retain this indemnity, but as we had joined in concert of action with other governments to suppress the insurrection, they believed we should take the full amount and manifest our humanitarian spirit afterwards, when we had ascertained the amount the Government had directly suffered, and had paid those claimants who had valid claims.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I am with the gentleman on his proposition. I want to ask one more question. How was the original bond made out, how was the amount made up in this case, if the gentleman knows?

Mr. STAFFORD. That was a joint bond that was entered into by the Chinese Empire with all the other nations, agreeing to pay during the course of forty years by installments the amount of the indemnity to each Government; and of that amount the Chinese Government has only paid up to the present time to this Government, of the total $24,400,000, something like $7,000,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. How was the amount arrived at which is reduced here to dollars and cents?

Mr. STAFFORD. By estimating the direct expenses for our Army and Navy and damage to private parties, and a lump sum for punitive damages.

Mr. COCKRAN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COCKRAN. What is the gentleman's alternative proposition to the one submitted by the committee?

Mr. STAFFORD. My position is that we should vote down this measure, and then it will be presented to us in the form that it was presented in the Senate resolution, to reimburse the Chinese Empire to the extent, or rather to only deduct from the indemnity fund $11,000,000, which will be adequate to reimburse the Government and private claims heretofore allowed, instead of $13,000,000, and refuse to the claimants a rehearing after they have been adjudicated.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman show us how that result can be reached? Because if he can, I am with him. To vote down the resolution offered by the gentleman from Michigan, as I understand it, will leave the situation so that no refund will be made at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that as soon as we vote this down, there being no dispute as to the amount of $11,000,000 named in the Senate resolution, there will be unanimity of opinion upon that point.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman is building his argument on the faith and justice of the Speaker.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the only alternative before the House at this time, and we have to trust in the future as to the way it will be carried out.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Why may not this follow: That if we vote for this and the money is not used, we can return the balance?

Mr. STAFFORD. I take the position that the claimants have no right to these funds at all, that having once presented their claims they ought not to have another chance, and if any person will examine these claims he must come to the conclusion that nearly all of them are outrageous. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan has ten minutes and the gentleman from Wisconsin has nine minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to use these three minutes not for discussion of the pending resolution, but in order to make a statement that I believe should be made in justice to the Members on this side of the House and to myself.

From the beginning of the consideration of the fortification bill there has never been the slightest friction among the House members of the subcommittee having that bill in charge, and that was equally true of the work in conference. That being so, I made a request of the gentleman from Iowa that he notify me when the fortification bill would be taken up for consideration, and he agreed so to do. This morning, during his absence, and during my absence, the bill was called up by a member of the Committee on Appropriations, who was not a member of the subcommittee on fortifications, and not a member of the conference, and in consequence of that fact neither the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] or myself were able to make a statement to the House as to what was done in conference.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him? I made the motion because you were not present.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not reflecting on the gentleman from Ohio at all; I am stating the fact. As a result of that fact it was impossible for me to give to my side of the House the information that they were entitled to in regard to that conference report. And inasmuch as my failure to do that grew out of no fault of mine, and no fault of the gentleman in charge of the bill, but out of the unprecedented calling up of a bill without the knowledge of the gentleman having it in charge, or without suggestion from him, he at that time being engaged in a conference on the sundry civil bill, I felt it was due to the members of that conference that this statement should be made.

Many Members on this side of the House voted against the bill, and properly voted against it, in the absence of any statement, and I do not believe that the exigencies of the political situation should bring about this method of legislating.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a misapprehension about this bill, which I will take one minute to explain. There was no promise made to China to return her any portion of this money. After the President discovered that we did not need it all, he told the Chinese Government, through the Secretary of State, that he would ask the permission of Congress to return a certain stipulated amount, which was what he considered in excess of all we could use for our legitimate claims. That is all there is in regard to a promise to the Chinese Government. They have absolutely no standing in the matter, except that we desire to show them that our civilization means justice as well as battle ships. But it is better to be just and even generous to our own people whose markets and establishments were ruined in China before we begin to be generous to a foreign power, and that is all that is being asked here. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, as I understand this proposed legislation, there is only one question at issue, if the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] represents all of the opposition to the joint resolution. It is proposed to remit to China an amount of money agreed by China to be paid to the United States in excess of actual damages sustained by the United States or citizens of the United States and the cost of the American military expedition sent to China for the purpose of suppressing the Boxer rebellion.

Mr. DENBY. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment to say that it is not to pay back to China, but to exempt China from paying a certain amount, extending over a period of thirty-nine years?

Mr. HOWARD. I fully understand that to be the condition.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is, to reduce the indemnity.

Mr. HOWARD. To pretermitt; it is not to exact it; it is to permit China to keep it in her own treasury and never take it out of her realm. That is the proposition. Mr. Speaker, it will be understood that the only question at issue—and that is put in issue by the amendment offered to the Senate resolution by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs—is to retain of this amount the gross sum of $2,000,000. This sum of $2,000,000 is not withheld to be appropriated to claimants without judicial determination of the rights of the claimants to that sum, but is to be withheld until the courts of the United States can pass fully and thoroughly on the character of the claims, the rightfulness of the claims, and to whatever extent they are adjudged to be just, within the limit of the $2,000,000 reserved, they are to be paid. If these claims are established by our courts as amounting to a million dollars of this reserved two millions, and no more, then an additional million dollars is to be pretermitted to China, not taken from her. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] seems to suggest that good faith and a proper regard for our relation to China should dictate that no part of this money should be taken away from her in excess of the actual cost of the military expedition. No conceivable—

Mr. STAFFORD. And also paying $2,000,000 to the claimants whose claims have been allowed by the commissioners and approved by the Secretary of State.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Already allowed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. Gentlemen will understand that China did not undertake to pass on the validity of one single dollar of these claims. China agreed in the protocol with the allies that a gross sum of money should be paid by her as indemnity, that indemnity to cover certain specified elements of damage. She agreed to pay the total amount of $333,900,000 to all of the allies, and for these purposes:

Private property of merchants.

Real estate destroyed or damaged, including temporary housing and repairs, expert surveys for determining amount of damages, etc.

Furniture.

Usual and inevitable salary of employees whose services could not be turned to account.

Unavoidable office expenses not made good in consequence of the events.

Stock in trade, goods, provisions, samples possessing pecuniary value, destroyed or deteriorated.

Extraordinary cost of storage and reshipment.

Debts recognized as valid which can no longer be recovered.

Bank notes lost or which can not be cashed.

Specie, bills payable at sight.

Broken contracts of all descriptions, losses suffered in consequence of the nonexecution of contracts entered into for articles of exportation or importation.

Deposits of money in telegraph offices or in banks.

Advances to Chinese merchants who have become insolvent in consequence of the events.

Extraordinary cost of insurance rendered necessary by the events referred to.

Goods requisitioned for foreign troops for defensive works.

Those were the elements of damage which China by her protocol agreed with the allies should be compensated for out of the gross sum of $333,900,000. The allies got together and by agreement apportioned $24,000,000 as the necessary part for the United States. The United States—when this sum was allotted to her to be paid in annual installments, to be collected annually out of the revenues of China until paid, extending over a period of some thirty-odd years—appointed an expert commission to inquire into the amount of American damages, American claims, and American losses. This commission ascertained by its own rules that about one million and a half dollars were justly claimed and payable out of this fund.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. I will ask the gentleman from Michigan to yield me two minutes more.

Mr. DENBY. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. HOWARD. This commission allotted to these claimants about a million and a half of dollars. The Secretary of State, reposing confidence, justly, in the intelligence and expertness of the commissioners, stands by their award, and says that it is a just and a fair one and ought to be ultimate. That is the position of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. He says the additional claims are unjust, are unfair, are an effort to rob the Treasury, and ought not to be paid. Let me remind gentlemen that this fund agreed to be paid by China was paid to the United States in part in trust for these claimants. It is not Treasury money. No dollar of it is Treasury money until the just and legal claims against it have been allowed for.

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg to challenge that statement. Every dollar that is paid under it goes directly to the Treasury.

Mr. HOWARD. Goes directly to the Treasury in trust for the claimants [applause], because the protocol between China and the allies agreed that all claims of every character and description of citizens, of individuals, whatever the nature of them, should be included in the lump sum, and China was not thereafter to be bothered with any single detail concerning them. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON].

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I support the generous side of this question for the reason that it is in keeping with the precedents of the United States in its dealings with weaker powers. In the early sixties, if my memory does not fail me, there was a joint demonstration at Shimonoski, Japan, by Great Britain, France, the Netherlands, and the United States, because of an interruption of commerce passing to and from the inland sea, resulting in the exaction of $3,000,000 indemnity from the Japanese Government, the money being divided equally between the four powers. Seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars were transmitted and placed in the Treasury of the United States. In due course of time, by the unanimous vote of this Congress America returned the last dollar of it to the Japanese Government.

I recall another parallel. After the war with Spain, Spain was a defeated country. She was helpless. I remember well that after the battle of Santiago our fleet was prepared to cross the Atlantic, destroy Camara's fleet, bombard Cadiz, and drive the war home. Then America under the laws of nations would have been justified in demanding hundreds of millions of dollars of indemnity from the Spanish Government. On the contrary, we invited Spain to send peace commissioners to France to meet our commissioners, and then ended that war by paying a conquered foe $20,000,000 for what was already ours by process of war, and then we voluntarily transported the Spanish soldiers back to Spain. [Applause.]

I recall another precedent. All the world expected us to keep Cuba, not only because she was ours by the right of conquest, but because we had poured out hundreds of millions of dollars, which under the precedents of the world we had the right to claim that Cuba should pay us back if we should ever set her free. On the contrary—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, to clear up in the minds of Members some doubts that have arisen during the consideration of this proposition, I wish to repeat that the question before this House is whether Secretary Root, whether the President, shall be upheld; whether the position of the Department of State shall be upheld when Secretary Root notified the Chinese minister that he would urge Congress to release the Chinese Government and return all the indemnity that was not necessary to reimburse our Government for its actual expenses and pay to private parties the claims as allowed.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not yield at this time. The question is whether that balance should be returned or whether we should allow these claimants, who have had their day in court, to have the right to have their claim allowed to the full amount whether they are righteous or vicious claimants. No one contends that China has any right to this fund, but I repeat that it was the understanding at the meeting with President McKinley, Secretary Hay, and Secretary Root that the Government would return the amount to China and would not exact any punitive damages from the Chinese Empire.

Now, I ask you to try to create good feeling between this country and the Chinese Empire which will redound to our advantage in commerce and trade much more than $2,000,000, and carry out the letter and the expressions on the part of the Secretary of State to the Chinese minister last July, when he told him in an official note that this money would be returned. I can not make more clear the position of Secretary Root than in this letter that he addressed to Mr. DENBY last February, where he says, and I repeat again:

Any legislation which treats the action of the Department of State at this time as a nullity is without justification.

Every one of these claimants had their opportunity, they had their chance to have their claims allowed. They accepted the decision of these commissioners, and after waiting for five years until the Department of State announced—

Mr. DENBY. May I interrupt the gentleman to say that his statements of facts are incorrect? The greatest claimant did not wait five years, because he has protested vigorously from the very day the claim was allowed to this day. They have absolutely no redress and—

Mr. STAFFORD. They never made a protest for three years. The principal claimant was guilty of laches and never made a formal protest and virtually accepted it.

Mr. DENBY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have not the time.

Mr. DENBY. He has no redress—

Mr. STAFFORD. They waited until the Government had announced its policy, and then as an afterthought it put in its claims to be reimbursed the amount which had been disallowed. No one who studies this question can but come to one conclusion, that they have had their day in court, and they have had their claims tried under the principles of international law. Now, the United States Government in unison with the other nations accepted from China punitive damages in excess of the amount to be reimbursed. The claimants want to get another opportunity to obtain that to which they are not entitled. So I ask the House to vote down this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DENBY] has three minutes remaining.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Speaker. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, in one minute I can not state the case, but I think with a statement of a very few moments in length the entire House would see the justice of the position taken by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. We recommend a return to the Chinese Government of $12,000,000, an act of almost unexampled generosity. This is right; but when we are exercising such an act of generosity we can ask absolute justice for our own citizens. The claims which were rejected have never been passed upon by any court. The Department of State has no more power to decide finally how the $24,000,000 paid to this Government by China shall be paid out than to decide how $24,000,000 received from the tax on alcohol shall be paid out. [Applause.] Congress, and Congress only, can pass upon that question.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, the other day I expressed the opinion that domestic dissensions ought to cease in the presence of a question of international comity and courtesy. This is a higher question yet, in my opinion; this is a question of international justice. I think this resolution ought to pass. I think that the amendment that has been put upon it ought to pass with it, because the amendment merely gives a right to a day in court for American citizens who before that fact had merely had a day before a commission. The amendment emphasizes the idea that the executive department ought not to make final judgments in connection with judicial questions. I hope that this resolution will pass, and it will pass, so far as I am concerned, without the delay of a roll call. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the resolution with amendment.

The question was taken, and a majority having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the resolution as amended was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18347) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes.

COMPENSATION OF EMPLOYEES.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the following resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP] moves to suspend the rules and agree to the following resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House miscellaneous items, fiscal year 1908, and from the unexpended balance miscellaneous items, fiscal year 1907, the amounts hereinafter set forth for the purposes indicated, namely, to the following officers and employees of the House as additional compensation, to wit:

Clerk, $1,500; Sergeant-at-Arms, $1,500; Doorkeeper, $500, Postmaster, $1,000; Chief Clerk and Journal clerk (for the fiscal year, 1907), disbursing clerk, assistant disbursing clerk, cashier in the Sergeant-at-Arms' office, superintendent House document room, attendant in charge of bathroom, assistant clerk to the Committee on Appropriations, assistant clerk to the Committee on Ways and Means, and assistant clerk to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, $400 each.

Document and bill clerk, librarian, document clerk in the Clerk's document room (hereafter to be designated as clerk in charge of binding), assistant superintendent of the House document room, clerk in the House document room (hereafter to be designated as indexer, tally clerk, docket clerk (hereafter to be designated as notification clerk), and assistant clerk to the minority (Charles A. Edwards), $300 each.

File clerk, $250; special employee in the House document room, $230; three pair clerks, stenographer to the Clerk of the House, messenger in the file room, two messengers in the disbursing clerk's office, assistant in the library, chief engineer heating and ventilating department, watchman in the old library space (hereafter to be designated as assistant in the House document room), messenger in the Sergeant-at-Arms' office, printing and bill clerk, stationery clerk, assistant file clerk, financial clerk, assistant postmaster, assistant journal clerk, two assistant librarians, assistant clerk to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, assistant clerk to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, index clerk, assistant index clerk, and one clerk (at $1,600) detailed to assist the disbursing clerk, $200 each.

Three assistant engineers, machinist, locksmith, one laborer (J. B. Hollander, hereafter to be designated as skilled laborer), janitor to the Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, and three special messengers to the minority, $100 each.

One laborer (at $600), janitors in the House library, file room, Official Reporters' room, janitor to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, attendant ladies' retiring room, janitor in the House document room (hereafter to be designated as messenger), four clerks in the Clerk's office (at $1,600), assistant in the Clerk's document room, special employee in the Clerk's document room, stenographer to the journal clerk, twenty-four messengers in the Doorkeeper's department, and seven assistants in the House document room, three laborers heating and ventilating department, $80 each.

To continue from the end of the present session to December 7, 1908, at the rate of compensation now provided, employment of the messengers in the House post-office authorized by the resolution adopted January 16, 1908, and the messenger on the heavy mail wagon. To continue the employment of assistant clerks to the Committee on Agriculture, District of Columbia, Accounts, and Indian Affairs, at the rate of compensation now authorized until otherwise provided for by law. For an assistant clerk to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, at the rate of $1,500 per annum, in lieu of a messenger in the Doorkeeper's department, at $1,100 per annum; to said clerk $400 for the fiscal year 1908; for a janitor under the Clerk of the House, at the rate of $340 per annum, in lieu of a laborer at $720 per annum, and to said janitor $120 for the fiscal year 1908; for an assistant clerk in the House document room, at the rate of $1,600 per annum, in lieu of one assistant at $1,200, and to said clerk $400 for the fiscal year 1908; for a janitor under the Clerk of the House (who shall also perform like service in the office of the index clerk and the Heutenants and guardrooms of the Capitol police), at the rate of $340 per annum, until otherwise provided for by law; to the folder designated in the resolutions adopted February 5 and April 21, 1908, an amount equal to the rate of pay of a folder between said dates and at the same rate from and after July 1, 1908, until otherwise provided for by law; for reporting committee hearings such accounts as may be certified to be correct upon vouchers approved by the Committee on Accounts.

To Ralph W. Gaylor, $29.17 for services as clerk to the late Representative Abraham L. Brick from April 1 to April 7, 1908, inclusive; to the clerk of the late Representative-elect Campbell Slem from October 1 to October 13, 1908, inclusive, $54.17; for clerical and stenographic services rendered the Committee on Banking and Currency, $350, to be paid to the persons designated by the chairman of said committee; to Henry Neal, for janitor service to the Committee on Rules, $250; to Robert Williams, for janitor service to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, $100; to John B. Lancaster, for services as messenger to the Committees on Mines and Mining, Irrigation of Arid Lands, and Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture from December 2 to December 31, 1908, inclusive, $58; to Marie R. English, widow of James F. English, the salary due said English as an employee of the House from July 1 to July 20, 1907, inclusive, $88.89; to W. M. Stephens, for services rendered as messenger in the House post-office, $20.

Hereafter employees in the minority conference room shall be subject to appointment and removal by the chairman of that committee, the minority leader.

For two additional clerks to the Committee on Enrolled Bills for the remainder of the present session, at the rate of $6 per day each, from the time they entered upon the discharge of their duties, which shall be ascertained and evidenced by the certificate of the chairman of said committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] demands a second. Under the rule, a second is ordered. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to twenty minutes.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] use some of his time now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I supposed, as this resolution is not printed and nobody has ever seen it, outside of the members of the Committee on Accounts, the gentleman, at least, would be willing to explain what is in it?

Mr. SLEMP. In answer to that, Mr. Speaker, I will have the report of the committee read, which is a full explanation of the action of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Virginia to the fact that this report would have to be read in his time. The Clerk informs the Chair that the report is just the same as the resolution read, except the latter part, beginning with page 5, which probably the gentleman desires to have read.

Mr. SLEMP. I desire to have that part read.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman how much this adds?

Mr. SLEMP. About $20,000.

Mr. PAYNE. Is that the precise amount?

Mr. SLEMP. Twenty thousand nine hundred and forty dollars.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read that part of the report indicated by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

This resolution increases the compensation of 4 elective officers and 104 employees of the House, divided as follows:

Two at $1,500 each; one at $1,000; one at $500; twelve at $400 each; eight at $300 each; one at $250; one at $230; twenty-three at $200 each; one at $120; ten at $100 each; and forty-eight at $80 each.

The amount of expenditure authorized from the contingent fund for the current fiscal year is $9,940, and from the unexpended balance of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund for the year 1907, $11,000, or a total of $20,940 for increases of compensation.

Your committee has diligently labored during this entire session of Congress with general and specific propositions providing for increased compensation to the officers and employees of the House. The resolution numbered 210, submitted by Mr. LEGARE, of South Carolina, authorized increases aggregating approximately $145,000. By the resolution reported from this committee adopted by the House on April 21, 1908, salaries to clerks of certain large committees of the House and to messengers to committees were increased, involving a total expenditure of $21,000, which resolution, together with the one herewith reported, makes a total expenditure of a little over $40,000, $11,000 of which will come out of an unexpended balance from last year's fund, which will not be available after the end of the present fiscal year.

Your committee has endeavored to rearrange and adjust salaries according to the equities in each case. The claims of every officer and employee have been considered, and we believe that the resolution which we now recommend is equitable to the 108 employees to whom it applies. The increased cost of living is the principal reason for these increases, taken together with the merits of the incumbents and the importance of their duties and the dispatch of the business of the House. The question of granting graduated percentage increases to all of the employees was given the most careful consideration, but that plan was deemed to be too far-reaching, and while doing justice in many cases would raise certain salaries to a figure not in keeping with the duties to be performed. A specific increase, where such was found to be justifiable, is thought to be a more business-like method. It is realized that the resolution reported herewith will not by its omissions, as well as by the amounts recommended, be entirely satisfactory; but when it is taken into consideration that your committee has had to deal with upward of 500 employees, each having some special claim for consideration, conclusions reached are as nearly equitable as it is possible to make them at this time. Due consideration was given the interests of the Government as well as of the employees to be affected.

In the cases of the elective officers of the House, the Clerk, Sergeant-at-Arms, Doorkeeper, and Postmaster, it is well known that these officers have responsible and exacting duties. The Clerk of the House is next in importance to the Speaker, and between Congresses is the highest ranking officer. The Sergeant-at-Arms performs police and fiduciary duties. The Doorkeeper has under his direction the bulk of the working class of employees, such as the folding-room force, the messengers, etc., and the Postmaster is responsible for the business of an office which will equal any important post-office in many of our large cities.

The disbursing clerk, assistant disbursing clerk, and cashier in the Sergeant-at-Arms' office are officials whose duties are exacting and responsible throughout the year, as the titles would indicate. The superintendent of the House document room is placed upon an equality with the superintendent of the Senate document room. The attendant in charge of the bath room is an expert in his line. The assistant clerks to the Committees on Appropriations, Ways and Means, and Rivers and Harbors perform important duties for those great committees, which warrant the proposed increase.

The document and bill clerk is increased so as to more nearly equalize his compensation with that of the distributing clerk, who performs like service. The Chief Clerk and Journal Clerk are granted $400 each for the fiscal year 1907, to equalize them with the amount received by the reading clerks. The librarian and assistant librarians render service requiring knowledge of library work, and perform their duties in a highly satisfactory manner, justifying the proposed increase. The document clerk in the Clerk's document room is made clerk in charge of binding, at an increased compensation. The assistant superintendent of the House document room and clerk in the House document room—the latter to be hereafter designated as indexer—and the assistant and special employee and janitor in the House document room are all increased commensurately with the increase in the work of that department. The tally clerk and the docket clerk, who hereafter is to be known as "notification clerk," are considered because of the increase in the volume of their duties and to place the former more nearly upon an equality with the other clerks at the desk of the House. The assistant clerk to the minority, while given an increase, practically suffers a decrease, for the reason that the present incumbent recently changed places with the clerk to the minority, such change, with the proposed increase, resulting in a net loss of $200 in salary to the assistant clerk to the minority.

The group of clerks in the $200 class, and the file clerk, $250, and special employee in the House document room at $230, are increased because of the additional work to be performed resulting from the increased membership of the House since their salaries were fixed.

The employees included in the $100 and $80 classes receive at present compensations justifying an increase on account of increased cost of living. Many of the salaries of employees of the House affected by this resolution were fixed ten, twenty, thirty, and forty years ago. The resolution also provides for continued employment of the messengers in the House post-office authorized by the resolution adopted January 16, 1908, and the messenger on the heavy mail wagon. It is customary to continue the latter. The former were provided for on account of the increased work in connection with the work of the House of Representatives Office Building, and their employment during this summer is recommended by the postmaster.

The assistant clerks to the Committee on Agriculture, District of Columbia, Accounts, and Indian Affairs, are continued until the next session at the present compensation, which is recommended because those committees will have work to do during the recess of Congress. One messenger, at $1,100, is dispensed with, and an additional assistant clerk to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce provided at $1,500 per annum. This is justified on the ground that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has a large jurisdiction which embraces that of four Senate committees.

The Clerk of the House is provided with a janitor at $840 in lieu of a laborer at $720, an increase of $120. One assistant clerk in the House document room is provided for at $1,000 per annum in lieu of one assistant at $1,200, an increase of $400. A janitor under the Clerk of the House is authorized who shall also perform service in the office of the index clerk and the lieutenant's and guard rooms of the Capitol police. This is made necessary by the rearrangement of committees in the early part of the session and the removal of the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department to the House Office Building.

The resolution of April 21, 1908, is construed by providing for the pay of a folder therein authorized after the end of the present fiscal year. Payment is authorized for reporting committee hearings upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee on Accounts. This is for extra service for reporting committee hearings when the regular force of committee reporters were otherwise engaged. It is the necessary authority for the payment for the work already performed.

The clerks to the late Representatives Brick and Slemple are provided for for the portions of the months in which said Representatives died and for time for which said clerks were not paid.

Payment of $350 is authorized to persons to be designated by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency for clerical and stenographic services rendered that committee, made necessary by the consideration given the currency question this session.

Payment of $250 to Henry Neal for janitor service to the Committee on Rules is authorized. The clerk to the Committee on Rules is paid in the deficiency bill, and this amount to the janitor of said committee, there being no regular janitor, is warranted.

One hundred dollars is authorized for janitor service to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, while $58 for janitor service to the Committee on Mines and Mining, Irrigation of Arid Lands, and Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture from December 2 to December 21, 1908, is also authorized. In the former case the rearrangement of rooms made this expenditure necessary, and in the latter no provision was made for services for the janitor covering the period mentioned in the resolution.

The unpaid portion of the salary of James F. English for the month of July, 1907, is authorized to be paid to the widow of said English. This is an asset of the estate and payment in this manner will render unnecessary the taking out of letters of administration in order to obtain the amount direct from the Treasury.

The employees of the minority room are made subject to the appointment and removal of the minority leader.

Two additional clerks are authorized by the Committee on Enrolled Bills, which is the customary provision near the close of a session.

Mr. SLEMP. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has six minutes remaining.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, there are some items in this resolution which if presented singly I should support; but in my judgment it is time for a halt to be called in the payment for services rendered to this House. It is impossible to ascertain just the amount of increase that this resolution gives. The legislative appropriation act for the present fiscal year carries over $600,000, for the various employees and officials of this House. In my judgment, not only are 95 per cent of the employees of this House well paid, but they are overpaid. I do not know that my opposition will in any way affect the determination of the House in passing this resolution, but I shall not stay here, simply because of personal relations that exist between some of these officials and some of the Members of the House, and keep still while it is attempted not merely to increase the compensation of men who are about to go on their vacations, but to increase the compensation from a date a period six months previous to this day. I believe it is scandalous that the House should be asked to vote for such increases; and if I shall not have an opportunity to vote, I shall at least express at this time my opposition to the resolution, so that it may go in the Record. If any Member desires time upon the resolution, I shall be glad to yield it to him.

Mr. BRUMM. I would like to have a couple of minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, under the present circumstances I shall vote against this resolution, and I shall do it because I feel that the appointments made in this House are bartered between the parties that have the power to make these appointments. Unless there is some way by which we can find out the residences of the men that are appointed—I am speaking of them at large—I for one shall vote against this resolution. There is a scandal about these appointments. I might cite an instance that is an outrageous one. A party had been promised an appointment. He was told that he would be appointed. He was told to bring his family down here, and he brought his family down. He was given an appointment for a few weeks, and then he was told that the appropriation had run out. The man stayed and stayed here with his family until he got to the point of starvation and had to beg money to go home. All the time he was promised, "You will get it; you will get it;" but he never got it, and had to go home. I say that is a state of affairs that should not exist. I am ready to substantiate what I have said. Under these circumstances I shall vote against a single dollar being added to the amount these officials get regularly. I would offer an amendment, but I doubt whether it is in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, we are called upon to vote an increase of the salaries of 100-odd officers of the House without even the resolution having been printed so as to be available to the various Members, and without any information as to the increase. Now, I do not believe that I am particularly parsimonious about matters of this kind, but it is within the knowledge of every man here that we have about three times as many employees around the Capitol as we need. The House can not afford to talk about economy, it can not afford to lecture the other legislative branch and the Departments unless it begins its economy at home. In the absence of any statement showing the need for this increase, an increase relating back six months, I think we would best do our duty here by not voting this money. The fact that it is not a large sum asked does not make any difference, and the fact that it is disagreeable to say these things also does not make any difference. The House knows and every Member here knows we have a great many more employees than we need. I would be in favor of eliminating a lot of the useless ones and then paying the others full and complete salaries, but I will not vote away money without information as to what it is to be spent for, and if the committee expects the House to vote it without any information, then it is asking the House to do on faith more than I am willing to do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, it is not a pleasant thing to resist a resolution of this kind; but I feel that its adoption will be little short of a scandal, if it does not measure fully up thereto. Hence, notwithstanding the disinclination I would ordinarily feel, I desire to enter a protest against it.

Every man here knows that the corridors of this Capitol are now so filled with House employees that it is difficult for us to find our way through them to our committee rooms. Every man here also knows that every one of these employees receives ample compensation for the service that he renders; and to bring in a resolution of this character at this time, having for its purpose the granting of additional compensation reaching back over a period of several months is, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has said, little short of a scandal. I shall vote against it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. HARDWICK. Is the gentleman positive that this resolution is retroactive in its effect?

Mr. BURLESON. As I understood it; as it was read from the Clerk's desk, it is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]—

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not wish to use any more time at present, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York yields the remainder of his time.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the other side have concluded. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has twelve minutes remaining and the gentleman from Indiana has six minutes remaining. The Chair understood that the gentleman from New York had yielded his time, and so stated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania going to conclude the discussion on that side?

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not know. I have not charge of the resolution. I have been yielded two or three minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then the gentleman from Virginia should occupy his two or three minutes.

Mr. OLMSTED. But, as I understood it, the gentleman from New York had concluded all that he desired to say.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield the remainder of his time, or does he reserve it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve it, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia has six minutes.

Mr. OLMSTED. I think the gentleman from Virginia wishes the gentlemen on the other side to use their time before he concludes, as he is entitled to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Virginia can not conclude with two or three speeches. If he states that the gentleman from Pennsylvania will conclude, that is a different matter.

The SPEAKER. On the contrary, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has twelve minutes and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP] has six minutes. The gentleman from Virginia is entitled to close the debate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He has yielded part of his time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLMSTED. Go on and use six minutes, and then let us use our six. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not believe this side will use any more time.

Mr. OLMSTED. I am as much in favor of economy, and my record will show it, as any man in this House, but having just voted a gratuity of twelve millions to the Empire of China I do not believe that this House wants to make part of it up by taking it off of the pay justly due to some of the hard-worked employees of this House. [Applause.] I am not a member of the Committee on Accounts, but I understand that without regard to party that committee has unanimously recommended this resolution. I have not had an opportunity of going through it thoroughly, but as I have heard it read it seemed to me that most of the items of increase are small ones, $80 to $100, and they relate, not to those parties who have been referred to as useless employees of the House, but to those who do the work. A number of the items affect the principal officers of this House; its highest officer next to the Speaker, its Clerk; its Sergeant-at-Arms, its clerks at the desk, those with whom we come in contact every day and upon whom we depend for our convenience and for the accuracy and the success with which we daily transact the business of the House. I do not believe that any parliamentary body was ever better served than this House is to-day. [Applause.]

In every other parliamentary body, so far as I have knowledge, the clerk or secretary receives more pay than the members. Our Clerk, even with the increase provided in this bill, will receive $1,000 less than a Member's salary and only about half the salary of the clerk of the British House of Commons. Our officers and clerks are men of exceptional ability, competent, and courteous. Some of them have been worked nearly to death for the last two months—as we all know. Their voices can hardly be heard, because they are so worn out from continued calling of the yeas and nays. The Clerk of the House has charge of its contingent fund—a large amount. The Sergeant-at-Arms has charge of a still larger amount—the pay of Members. We work our clerks and other employees by day and we work them at night. For the reasons stated, I am in favor of this resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 165, nays 63, answered "present" 13, not voting 146, as follows:

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the post-office appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.
The Clerk read the report as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18347) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and nine, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 36, 43, 44, 45, 51, 52, 54, 60, 64, 65, 66, 67, 69, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 78, 79, 81, 82, 88, 89, 92, and 93.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 39, 40, 41, 42, 47, 48, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 61, 62, 70, 80, 84, 86, 87, 91, 94, 95, 96, 97, and 98, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 5, line 15, strike out the words "And provided further," and insert in lieu thereof the word "Provided;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 10, line 16, strike out the words "and fifty-one;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 10, lines 15 and 16, strike out the words "four hundred and ninety-seven" and insert in lieu thereof the words "five hundred and forty-eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 11, lines 12 and 13, strike out the words "twenty-nine million" and insert in lieu thereof the words "twenty-eight million seven hundred and twenty-six thousand five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Page 13, line 21, strike out the word "six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule a second is ordered. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] to twenty minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, if I may have the attention of the House I can explain in a very few words just the status of this bill. On yesterday the House refused to agree to the conference report, which at that time was a complete agreement. The bill now comes back from the conference committee with an agreement upon all of the amendments except three—Nos. 63, 76, and 77. Amendment No. 63 is the one which we recognize as the annual weighing of the mails, and so forth. No. 76 is the increased appropriation of $1,100,000 consequent upon No. 77, which proposes to amend the ocean mail act.

Your conferees, Mr. Speaker, acting upon the vote of the House on yesterday, seek in a fair and proper way to bring before the House what the conferees understood were not satisfying to the House by the vote of yesterday. But two amendments were criticised in the debate, namely, the ocean mail act, involving two amendments, and the amendment authorizing the annual weighing of the mail, and so forth. It was impossible, Mr. Speaker, for anybody to understand whether or not the action of the House in rejecting the report was on account of one of those propositions or on account of both, and if on account of one, which one. Therefore we have agreed to all of the other amendments in the bill, saving those three involving the two propositions. It will be my course to move, as I have, to agree to the conference report, which will agree upon everything in the report except those three propositions, or two, as a matter of fact, which will be considered, discussed, and acted upon separately, separately from the main body of the bill, and separately from each other. I conceive no criticism can be made by any Member of this body upon this course which your conferees have pursued.

Notwithstanding our belief that their position yesterday relating to the merits of those two amendments was correct, still it gives to the House the opportunity, responsible as it is for the legislation, to determine whether it wishes to disagree to one or both of those propositions. Having adopted the conference report except as to those three amendments, if the House should by vote upon the two remaining propositions separately vote in favor of those two propositions, it would pass the bill and end the legislation for the next fiscal year. If the House should reject either one or both of these propositions—

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. OVERSTREET. It would then permit your conferees to understand what portion of the bill it would desire to eliminate.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Is it the intention of the gentleman from Indiana, in asking a separate vote for the mail proposition and subsidy proposition, to have twenty minutes' debate on each side on each proposition?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I want to be entirely fair, so as to have the House understand the proposition—

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I wanted to understand the gentleman—

Mr. OVERSTREET. When we have agreed, as I hope we will, without further debate, because there is nothing as to disagreement to any proposition of the bill saving those two propositions, then it will be my purpose to move to suspend the rules upon the first amendment and to recede and concur. That would give twenty minutes' debate on that one proposition.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. On each side?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Then when that was disposed of, either denied or approved, I would join the remaining two amendments, because they are related, in a motion to suspend the rules and recede and concur, and after discussion of forty minutes a vote to determine that.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I can conceive of no fairer proposition to the House.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Now, would the gentleman from Indiana, with the consent of the House, be willing to have some additional debate on those two propositions?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think, Mr. Speaker, at this hour of the day, particularly in view of the debate of yesterday, that we can understand both propositions sufficiently for an intelligent vote within the forty minutes of debate.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. A good many gentlemen on this side desire to be heard. I have no special desire to speak myself.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have been importuned on this side as well from those favoring the proposition for time, so I think there can be no injustice done to the House.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Well, I think it is a matter that ought to have three or four hours' debate to be intelligently determined, but I do not expect to get that in the House, but I would be glad to get a little more time for debate.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I would ask the gentleman from Tennessee if there is objection to adopting the report which leaves unsettled these three amendments? That will give more time.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I would not like to concede that at present, until the gentlemen who are interested in some other provisions of the bill have been heard; but I will say this to the gentleman from Indiana, that it is probable there will be but little debate on that question. I have nothing to say myself.

Mr. OLMSTED. How about a roll call?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Whatever time we save on that proposition, I presume, will be added to the subsidy debate?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Does the gentleman include in that no roll call? Does the gentleman mean that there will be no roll call?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I shall not demand a roll call on the proposition to approve the bill, aside from the two questions to be voted on separately.

Mr. OVERSTREET. On which particular one of the remaining amendments does the gentleman desire additional time?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The subsidy proposition.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is the second proposition. I have no objection to waiting until that time, and if it is not too late in the evening—

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Oh, we will be here until 12 o'clock.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, hardly upon this bill.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No; not on this bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Other legislation is important. I suggest that we take up these measures as we reach them and first dispose of the report which takes care of all of the bill excepting two propositions, and then start on them.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I would prefer to have an understanding with the gentleman from Indiana, and our suggestion is that if the twenty minutes which we now have are not used, and the roll call is disposed of, that we have additional time on the subsidy proposition.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, without foreclosing it one way or the other, I would suggest that when that time approaches I will be ready to entertain it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Let us foreclose it now, so that the gentleman can not foreclose me on my suggestion later.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think I would prefer—

Mr. COCKRAN. Why not ask unanimous consent now for an hour.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Suppose the gentleman would demand a roll call, then I would be foreclosed on my proposition.

Mr. COCKRAN. Why can it not be understood that there will be no roll call on this and no debate on this proposition, but the time thus saved, amounting to an hour, as well as the time on the second roll call, be given to legitimate debate on a subject where there is a wide division on the part of the Members of the House.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am quite willing, Mr. Speaker, with the clear understanding that there is to be no roll call and no division on the adoption of the report, and then twenty minutes debate on a side on the first proposition to submit to thirty minutes on a side on the second proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, you would have that anyway.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am addressing the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SULZER. Make it an hour on a side on the ship subsidy proposition.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, no.

Mr. COCKRAN. Then let us have the regular order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That gives thirty minutes on a side on the ocean-mail question.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman agree to forty minutes on a side?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes; with no roll call on the first proposition.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I can not pledge myself any further than my own action on the roll call.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, this is my understanding, that there is to be no debate and no roll call on this proposition; that there is to be a debate of twenty minutes on a side on the second proposition, and forty minutes on a side on the ocean-mail act. Now, I ask unanimous consent that this report be adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Stop a minute. If the gentleman will permit, I will submit a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I have the floor and I do not yield it for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me suggest—

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman can make a suggestion to me, but I do not yield the floor for him to make a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well, yield to me to suggest that the gentleman from Indiana make a request that if we dispense with the twenty minutes debate on a side on the first proposition, and with the roll call, which together constituted seventy-five minutes, that that amount of time be added to the debate on the other propositions, and equally divided between the two sides.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I will not consent to anything other than I have proposed, and upon the adoption at once of the report, and that when we reach the ocean mail proposition there will be forty minutes debate on a side in lieu of twenty minutes debate on a side.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will you make the request for unanimous consent now?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request that the conference report be now adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Unless the other unanimous consent is coupled with it—

Mr. OVERSTREET. And that there be forty minutes debate on a side when the ocean mail proposition is up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] asks unanimous consent that the report of the conference committee shall be agreed to. That is the first branch. The second branch is, that there shall be twenty minutes' debate in the aggregate.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Twenty minutes on a side on the second proposition.

The SPEAKER. Twenty minutes on a side on the second proposition.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is, the weighing proposition; and forty minutes on a side on the ocean mail proposition.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. With no roll call on the first proposition, but a roll call on the other two propositions.

The SPEAKER. The proposition, as the Chair gathers, is that unanimous consent is asked that the conference report be now agreed to; and on the motion to suspend the rules on the first amendment, the one touching the mail weighing, that there is to be twenty minutes' debate on a side, and on what is known as the two other propositions, that cover the ocean mail service, there shall be forty minutes' debate on a side.

Mr. FINLEY. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] that he asks this House for unanimous consent—in other words, if everybody should agree to all the other items, there will be no roll call? I do not care to be put in the attitude of agreeing unanimously to everything that is in the report as agreed to.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I have asked unanimous consent for agreement to the report. I have no doubt but what there are numerous—

Mr. COCKRAN. A viva voce vote without a roll call.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

So the conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the first amendment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, the motion is to suspend the rules, recede, and concur in amendment numbered 63.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to suspend the rules, that the House recede from its disagreement in the following Senate amendment, and concur in the same.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. On which I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands a second, and by agreement, as well as under the rule, there will be twenty minutes debate on a side.

The Clerk will first report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, after line 20, insert:

"That the Postmaster-General be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to readjust annually the compensation to be paid for the transportation of mails on railroad routes from and after the 1st day of July, 1909, upon the conditions and at the rates provided by law, the average daily weight to be ascertained in every case by the actual simultaneous weighing of the mails for thirty-five successive days, commencing on such date as the Postmaster-General may designate each year, after June 30, 1908, and the result to be stated and verified in such form and manner as the Postmaster-General may direct; and the whole number of days included in the weighing period shall be used as a divisor for obtaining the average daily weight. In connection with such weighing and readjustment, where there are two or more routes by which the mails may be dispatched between important points with equal facility and advantage to the mail service, the Postmaster-General may send such mails by either route, provided the allowance for the carriage of the same by the longer or more expensive route shall not exceed the cost of the carriage of an equal weight of mail between the same points by the shorter or less expensive route. And the Postmaster-General shall give the company carrying such mails advance notice of his intention to take their weights separately from the other mails of the route and readjust the compensation for the carriage of the same on the basis of their value on the shorter or less expensive route, and shall report weekly during the time of such weighing the weights of such mails to the company carrying them.

"And out of the appropriation for inland mail transportation, the Postmaster-General is authorized hereafter to pay rental in Washington, District of Columbia, and compensation to tabulators and clerks employed in connection with the weighings for assistance in completing computations, in connection with the expenses of taking the weights of mails on railroad routes as provided by law."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] to twenty minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, this amendment involves three factors. The first authorizes an annual weighing of the mails simultaneously throughout the country for thirty-five successive days, the time to be determined by the Postmaster-General. The second proposition is to make permanent law the recent order of the Postmaster-General, requiring that the total number of days in the weighing period shall be used as the divisor in ascertaining the average daily weight of mails. The third requires that where there are two or more competing routes between common terminals, the length of the route shall be the shortest line of those competing routes. The annual weighing of the mails once a year simultaneously for thirty-five days is believed by the Department and those interested in a fair and proper adjustment of pay to be far more equitable and just than one hundred and five days once in four years in the four different sections of the country. The law has been upon the statute books for more than thirty years, requiring quadrennial weighing; until three or four years ago the time of the weighing once in four years was to be thirty days. It was thought a better average in a period of a four-year contract would be ninety days, or, including the Sundays, one hundred and five days. This proposed change will be a benefit to the Government, and, in so far as it may result in an increased volume of pay to the transportation companies, be only fair and reasonable. All will agree that the ideal method of determining the amount of weight of the mails as the basis of pay would be to weigh each separate article of mail at the time it is deposited.

That is thoroughly impossible. It is equally impracticable to weigh once a day or once a week or once a month or once in six months. It is entirely practicable and feasible to weigh once in twelve months. When you weigh simultaneously you overcome the possibility of padding the mails or shuttlecocking from a section of the country that the mail is not being weighed into a section where the mail is being weighed, and then paying double the expense for that character of mail.

It is said by those criticizing the proposition that it will be a heavy increase in expense to the Government. The only increase possible is by reason of the fact that now you pay the railroads for a period of four years upon the minimum weight at the time of the beginning of the contract. For the increment and increased weight rising rapidly within that period the companies could not be paid anything until the succeeding period of four years, whereas under the proposed change they would become entitled to the increment, additional weight in volume, which has been made within the last preceding year. They are paid only for what they carry; and those who criticize the change must of necessity prefer that the roads should not be paid anything for the increased volume of weight within the period of the four-year contract.
